"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

The Triumph of Truth.

BY MISS KATE J. REDDING.

Can ye darken the rays of the noon-day sun?
Or bring back light when night's begun?
Can ye wrench the shaft from the hand of death?
Or stem the plague in its withering breath?
The heavens above us, the lights that glow—
The tombs of the lifeless, answer—no!

Can ye calm the waves of the raging deep?
Or hush the winds that o'er it sweep?
Can ye stay the lightning's vivid flash?
Or level the rocks the surges lash?
The rage of the tempest, the tides that flow—
The blast of the whirlwind, answer—no!

Can ye measure the depths of yon proud sea?
Will the universe change its laws for thee?
Can the monarch of nations war with God?
Or vanquish truth with his tyrant rod?
The grovelling kingdoms of earth will show—
They may boast in their pride, but must answer—no!

Can ye change the laws of truth divine?
Or crush them 'neath the wheel of time?
Can ye sever the chains that bind our earth?
Laws that eternity first gave birth?
All nature, the universe, answer—no!

Can ye fathom the mind of the changeless One?
Or limit the grace of his murdered son?
Can ye stay His truth in its onward way!
Or banish its light from the sons of clay?
The blood of redemption from sin and woe—
The voice of His Prophets answer—no!

Freedom of Conscience—Toleration.

In the concluding paragraphs of the leading article in Harper's Magazine for November, entitled "The Massacre of St. Bartholomew," written by John S. C. Abbott, will be found the following quotations:

"There is one great truth which this narrative enforces; it is the doctrine of FREEDOM OF CONSCIENCE. It was the denial of this truth which deluged France in blood and woe.

"Let us emblazon upon our banner the noble words,

"Toleration; perfect, civil and religious toleration."

"Let us grant Toleration, perfect and untrammeled, to one and all—to all religions, to all politics, to all humanities—to the young fanatic in his sleepless dream, to the old fogy in his dreamless sleep."

There is a self-evident consistency in the truth of the above named "doctrine," a fitness and justice in the motto counseled for our national "banner," and a loving kindness in the exhortation to "grant Toleration," that are truly refreshing in this period of maddened politics, frenzied fanaticism, commercial peculation, and sycophantic juggling for place and power. And these truths of universal benefit and applicability are by no means less refreshing because published in a periodical of such wide circulation and well earned celebrity, even though its "monthly record of current events," its "Editor's table," and its "Editor's easy chair" do not at all times appear strictly mindful of the great principles now so zealously and beautifully promulgated by Mr. Abbott. And in these days of degeneracy rather than true enlightenment, of tyranny rather than kindness, when the adversary is lashing the civil, political and professedly religious elements into fury, have Mr. Abbott and Harper's Magazine the nerve and moral stamina to enable them to stem the the wild surges of the whirlpool of temptation and corruption, and to unflinchingly defend the principles they proclaim and call upon the world to apply? Future events will answer. In the meantime we extend the right hand of fellowship to all who manfully support "Freedom of Conscience" the wide world over, and joyfully anticipate the day when this earth's "banner" shall freely float over land and sea, bearing upon its broad folds the words:

"FREEDOM OF CONSCIENCE.
TOLERATION;
PERFECT CIVIL AND RELIGIOUS TOLERATION."

The world in their iguorance may stare at seeing their advocacy of human advancement so readily and cheerfully responded to from the desert plains and rocky bulwarks of Utah, more especially as they have classed her citizens "into sleeplessly dreaming fanatics, and dreamlessly sleeping fogies." Had those thus classifying us possessed but a small share of the same love of truth that they do of sophistry and error, of happiness that they do of pleasure, of the just rights of others that they do of their own selfish purposes, of the welfare and exaltation of their fellows that they do of their misery and degradation, they would long since have thrown off the shackles of bigotry, inhumanity and traditionated superstitions; and unsullied truth and unaloyed freedom would have universal power and free course. But in this dawning of a new era, in this progress of the "dispensation of the fullness of times," and amid the maddening corruption that is waxing grosser and grosser upon the earth, we hail with joy even the occasional advocacy, in the world's publications, of a candid and truthful principle of humane conduct.

Did all writers upon kindred topics let the spirit of truth and the love of man guide their pens, as did Mr. Abbott in the quoted paragraphs, then would power presses cease to groan under such sanctimonious, ignorant and hypocritical expressions as, "What shall be done with Utah?" —when all the time it is a bright example to all other States and Territories; "odious and barbarous institutuions," when those institutions are revealed from heaven for the salvation of man in a celestial glory; "deluded fanatics, knaves and dupes," when those vilified persons easily circumscribe the world in the most valuable information. Then would Congress invite Utah's petition for admission into the Union and at once act favorably thereon, instead of stretching arbitrary power over and plotting to disfranchise a portion of citizens descended from the same revolutionary sires, and rightfully claiming the privileges guaranteed by an equally inherited Constitution.

"Toleration to all religions, to all politics, to all humanities," would for ever stop that canting, whining, whited sepulchre cry about "abominations in Utah," by those who are either as ignorant or as corrupt (or both) as the devil wishes them to be, and who delight in efforts to stretch or shorten the fair proportions of eternal truths to suit the iron bedstead dimensions of their own narrow contracted creeds and notions. Away with all shackles upon thought, speech, and actions that infringe upon the natural and inalienable rights of others. South Carolina has more right to say to Massachusetts "abolish your white slavery arising from the unmerciful lording of the rich over the poor, and abolish your wide spread and foul adulteries and whoredoms, and the intolerable religious bigotry of your hireling priests," than Massachusetts has to meddle with slavery in South Carolina. African slavery in South Carolina is a legalized domestic institution, and was and is at least permitted so to be by the federal compact to which Massachusetts was a party; while white slavery, adultery, whoredom and other gross abominations, though not altogether legalized in Massachusetts, nor even so much as sanctioned by the Constitution of the United States, are nevertheless extensively practised and securely domesticated therein, and are most severe cankers upon the body politic of any community.

Either State has a perfect right to ask council and aid to enable her to cope with what she may deem evils; either State has also the liberty to kindly proffer its counsel and aid to remedy or abolish what she may know to be evils; but no State nor Territory, nor all combined, save one, have the least shadow of just right to dictatorily interfere with the internal policy and domestic practices and institutions of another State or Territory, nor to in any wise endeavor to gag neighboring citizens inherently possessed of the same Constitutional rights with themselves.

It will be understood that in commenting upon governmental rights and policies, in this article and previous ones, we treat of governments as human institutions, and not as though they were instituted, guided, and controlled by the Spirit of that Being whose is the "earth and the fulness thereof."

Civil and Religious Intolerance, and that too in a professed Republic, harrassed Joseph the Prophet and the Saints in New York and Ohio, expelled them from Missouri at the point of the bayonet, compelled their departure from Illinois, after having massacred the Prophet Joseph and Patriarch Hyrum, and is still unrelentingly pursuing them in their secluded and uninviting location. True, the watch words of the onslaught are somewhat changed, but the same spirit is still leading forth the persecution, and is striving to enlist all other States and Territories against one, and that one well known to be the purest and most patriotic of all. Then, the farcical Spalding story and the changes zealously rung upon the "golden bible," "impostors," "fanatics," &c., marshaled the bands of the intolerants and cheered them in spoiling and oppressing the innocent. Now, since those terms have proved too ridiculous to longer rouse attention, speakers, writers and publishers, from Maine to Texas and throughout the breadth of our land, most sanctimoniously elevate their eyes, clasp their hands, and groanfully exclaim, "O! polygamy!" "O! the abominations of those awfully corrupt Mormons!" Being tolerably well acquainted with the character of those who thus exclaim, also somewhat conversant with the doctrine and practical workings of polygamy, we take the liberty of assuring all the world that the majority of those virulent slanderers are sunk in ignorance, depravity and intolerance almost if not entirely beyond redemption.

This being the fact, a reflective mind may well query why such persons are deemed worthy of notice. Because wicked men have already repeatedly in our day plundered, driven and killed the servants of the living God—those who were striving to walk in obedience to the requirements of a risen Redeemer—and we would, as far as possible, induce all men, by correct instruction and example, to refrain from the commission of so great offences, and to side in behalf of "Perfect Toleration." All Bible readers are aware that many of the ancient worthies had more wives than one, and that, on this point, the conduct of David towards Uriah and his wife is alone condemned. Now what is man that he should call in question the sanctions of Jehovah? Or by what authority does he presume to dictate the Almighty, or circumscribe the revelations of His will and the institution of his plans?

But aside from those questions, aside from all the arguments that have been used for and against a plurality of wives, and even granting that polygamy be solely a human institution, whom does it now concern, except the inhabitants of Utah? And who has the right to curtail those inhabitants in the privileges of even "Civil Toleration?" to say nothing of those far dearer rights of "Freedom of Conscience," and those higher privileges of "Religious Toleration." Those who cannot frankly answer "no one," had better reflect upon the immense and cruel destruction of lives in the "Massacre of St. Bartholomew," when the Roman Catholics butchered so many thousand Presbyterians on account of their religious faith; and also upon the bitter acrimony, desperate atrocities and unsatisfying results attending all religious wars and persecutions. Neither may it be altogether unprofitable to bear in mind the truth couched in the Hudibrastic couplet, that and the verity of an important scriptural declaration that "what measure ye mete, shall be measured to you again."

"A man convinc'd against his will
Is of the same opinion still;"

The spirits of mankind are sent here to take bodies and undergo a state of probation, in accordance with a plan devised in the councils of eternity. Those spirits are given an agency in their choice between good and evil, and are surrounded and influenced by disembodied evil spirits, by angels or resurrected beings, and by spirits which minister to such as will prove themselves worthy of becoming heirs to salvation. It is well known that from the beginning, and from the day in which Cain slew his brother Abel, evil spirits have strenuously endeavored to counterfeit the teachings and appearance of angels of light; have striven to possess the tabernacles given to beings in probation, and to gain possession and exclusive control of this earth and its affairs; and that to accomplish all this they have not only unscrupulously resorted to craft and all manner of deceit, but have often bitterly persecuted and killed the righteous. In addition, we wish all people to fully understand that evil spirits and those persons who are deceived by them or prefer to follow them, are always the ones who are at the bottom of all persecutions and oppressions, and are ever seeking to destroy the righteous from the earth.

When has a Former or Latter Day Saint been known to unlawfully kill, to persecute, or to oppress his fellow beings? If at any time such an one has been overtaken in so great a fault, it has been because he was overcome of evil and ceased to be a Saint. The Saints delight in "Truth and Liberty," in "Freedom of Conscience," in "Perfect Civil and Religious Toleration," in every true principle revealed to man for his guidance, and intend most manfully, under Providence, to extend the blessings of those glorious rights to the humblest being that may come within their sphere of action.—Furthermore, to use another quotation from Mr. Abbott, (simply changing I to we) "We grant to you perfect liberty of opinion and of expression, and we demand of you the same," and also "perfect liberty" of worship and action so far as guaranteed by the Constitution, by all other righteous laws and the will of the Almighty.

Have Mr. Abbott or we endeavored in this matter to set forth any new truths for human guidance, or to exhort to aught but a kind, correct and righteous conduct towards all "humanities?" Verily no. But the human family are so constituted that they need "line upon line;" and if we have succeded in presenting the least of these principles of eternal truth in such a point of view as to excite the thoughts and enlist the action of any in its favor, then indeed has some good been accomplished.

And in the arrangement of the lines of battle between truth and error, for the final issue preparatory to the ushering in of the millennial rest of a thousand years, let all bear in mind that there are but two churches on this earth, the church of Christ, and the church of the devil; and there are but two leading principles, Good and evil; and that the church of the devil and the principle of evil are ever found enlisted under the banner whose motto is "Intolerance; Perfect Civil and Religious Intolerance," no matter how cunningly soever the adversary may vary the wording thereof, with a view to entrap the unwary.

Duties of a Wife.

THE REV. DR. J. P. WILSON, of Newark, is delivering a course of sermons on the "Family Circle." The fourth of the series was devoted to the "Duties of a Wife," and the Newark Advertiser gives the following outline of its leading points:

The first duty of the wife is submission, reverence and deference for the husband. The Bible commands the husband to love the wife, but it does not say one word of the wife's loving the husband; that is taken for granted.

She should acquiesce in the authority of the husband, who should also remember that when command begins, happiness ends. She should have submission to the reasonable authority of the husband, not like that of the servant to the master, but a quiet submission which tends to her own advantage more than her husband's.

Some women are weak enough to marry husbands to rule them. Such marriages are always unhappy, as the wife acknowledges she marries a fool, and is obliged to drag him after her all her life, and in the end finds she has less advantage over him than she supposed. Woman should submit, as our first mother Eve had the sentence passed on her that her husband should be her desire, and should rule over her. A woman should not, however, be submissive in divine matters, but should differ in meekness, leaving God to decide.

The second duty is real and high respect to her husband. If her husband is no model in the eyes of the world, he should be in a wife's; and when the latter thinks meanly of her husband's appearance or talent, the next thing is contempt. When this begins, the delicate sentiment that belongs to the relationship of man and wife is gone forever. If a woman marries a man of stupidity, whom she can't respect, she is the more foolish, and breaks that holy vow to honor, love, and obey. A wife should respect the husband when she can't the man, and should never complain of his improprieties, because a seal should be forever set on the improprieties of the husband, which, when broken, destroys the family circle, and makes the wife and husband no longer one. She should not even confide in a mother, for concealment is the true path, and these faults should be hidden, and though it bring her to her grave with a broken heart, they should be screwed up in her coffin.

The third duty is quietness and gentleness of spirit. A wife should be cheerful and unmurmuring, and should acquiesce with the husband in the management of the family affairs. He should locate the residence, regulate the family expenses, and have the power of deciding such matters; for on him the responsibility rests to keep the wolf from the door. A wife who complains to her husband, because she cannot go to as much expense as some other women, is at once mean, ungenerous, and cruel.

She should have the control of her tongue, knowing how to say just the right word in season. She should not try to have the last word, or to talk a husband down, for like an ancient General, another such victory will be her ruin.

The fourth duty is that she should be a help-meet. If a help-meet was necessary in the days of innocence, what is it now? She should be wise and judicious in the management of the household affairs and should follow the commands of the third chapter of Solomon, which is more than many modern wives do. A part of female education should be to attend to common things, and no fine music, or worsted piece, can take the place of order and neatness at home. Fancy pursuits should be secondary to family duties.

She should have tender conciliation and sympathy for her husband, who comes from the cares of the world to find repose and sincere affection at home, and she should make him forget in its genial sunshine the storm without. In times of sorrow and grief she should be an alleviation, and make the burthen lighter by bearing part of it. But in sickness, a wife shows the true woman, which the preacher said the English language was too poor to describe.

Woman's love should be constant, and as an illustration he referred to a case in his own knowledge, where a woman redeemed a husband from intoxication, after twenty years' suffering, by her constant love. He also referred to the case of Mrs. Patten, the female captain, who was a true help-meet.

The last duty is that of a wife's helping her husband in the duties of holy life. She should do this by conversation and action, not by continually thrusting religion on him, but by her lowly meekness of deportment, her chasteness of piety, and anxiety for her husband's welfare. Her bread should be cast on the waters, and perhaps would be found after many days. The sermon closed with a fervent appeal to personal piety and preparation for eternity which might come at any time.

SMITH and Brown running opposite ways around a corner struck each other. "Oh, dear!" said Smith, "how you make my head ring." "That's a sign it's hollow," said B. Didn't yours ring?" said Smith. "No." That's because it was cracked.

Mr. Hildreth's Petition to the Methodist Conference on the Use of Tobacco.

To the Bishops and Members of the New York East Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Annual Conference Convened:

REV. FATHERS AND MINISTERS: There is a solemn duty, as well as obligation, binding upon every Christian Minister, to refrain from the very appearance of evil, and to carry out the principles of Christ in their purity, not only while in the pulpit as teachers, but in every social or public circle in which they may be called to move.

One whose name has, is, and we hope ever will be, revered as a holy and good man, Rev. John Wesley, said cleanliness was next to Godliness.

Why, then, do the present clergy, in many instances, indulge in the use of that filthy weed, tobacco? Is it not offensive to many? How can a Christian Minister indulge in its use? Is it not filthy in all its forms? Is it not, when used as a quid, and rolled in the mouth, from which a powerful mass of liquid filth is emitted, disgusting to that being who is man's helpmate and companion—Woman!

Is not the smoke, puffed in the face of another, whether from a pipe or cigar, offensive?—even an assault?

Did Christ ever use tobacco in any form? Although the pleaders of rum and wine as a beverage often quote the miracle of the Savior turning water into wine at the marriage feast, no mention is made of tobacco ever having been tolerated by him in any form. If it is so necessary for man to use it, and to make a smoke-house of his mouth, or a manufacturer of a filthy fluid mixed with mucus, and of a most disgusting nature, why not swallow the juice thus manufactured, and not pour it out upon the carpet, or the well-cleaned floor of a neat housewife?

It is injurious to health—not a clergyman in the whole Irish Conference uses it, but our American clergy, who are generally considered the most refined of the ministerial order.

There are members of this Conference whose nervous systems are almost paralyzed from its constant use. Varied are the excuses for its use. Some use it for headache, some neuralgia, stomach-ache, tooth-ache, and, we have reason to believe, some may use it for corns; as with drunkards, they have each an excuse. We are satisfied, having consulted physicians from twenty-five of these United States, all of whom fully agree that tobacco is, in any form, injurious, and we are satisfied that no person of cleanliness can say but that it is a dirty practice in any way used.

If it is cleanly, why that respectful petition from the leading brethren of this Church, (having notices posted prohibiting its use) requesting the clergy comprising the Conference now in session not to use it, if they did not consider it a filthy practice?

You may receive this petition, and, as we believe, one of its like has been received and passed over to the Committee on Slavery, (and we believe that Committee well timed, for there are more than one kind of Slavery.) God knows we believe, if there are any slaves in human shape, it is the tobacco chewer and smoker. We have only to add, we intend to urge the utter annihilation of its use, until the desired object is accomplished, or we lose the power to speak. We consider it no excuse, even if nine-tenths of the community use it, and we believe this the strongest plea that can be urged in its favor.

If, then, this is to be an excuse on account of its numbers using it, then quit preaching the Gospel, and go to manufacturing tobacco and cigars, for there are many more sinners than saints.

As a general thing, the habit is acquired when but boys—many of whom think if they can utter a good round oath, and drink a little rum and smoke, their manship is established. Begin, then, with children, especially in Sabbath schools. But if you use it, where is your influence?

Therefore your petitioner prays your venerable and holy body would pass resolutions urging upon the members of the Conference generally, the necessity of each using his exertions to suppress its use in their respective charges. Also, make it one of the test questions for members presenting themselves for the high and holy calling of preaching the Gospel.

And in duty bound will ever pray.

JOHN T. HILDRETH.

A California Lion Killed.

Last Sunday morning, says The Columbia Gazette, Mr. Massingale, living near Vallecito, noticed that some wild beast was among his hogs. Taking his gun, he made pursuit, and following the animal by his tracks, the ground being soft, he came upon a hog weighing one hundred pounds, about three-fourths of a mile from his house, which the lion, for such the depredator proved to be, had carried there and partially buried in the ground. He then put the dogs on the trail, and pursued the animal as fast he could on foot. He had not proceeded far, however, before the dogs brought the lion to bay, and Mr. Massingale coming up, killed him the first fire with a rifle. The lion weighed, after being dressed, 140 pounds, and measured eleven feet two inches from the tip of the nose to the tip of the tail.

Stick to Your own Tongue.

A certain pompous gentleman, who is fond of making after-dinner speeches, and of interlarding them with quotations from foreign languages which he seldom gets right, not long since, in replying to a toast drank in honor of an absent friend named Bayard, said, that his friend, "like his namesake, the illustrious Chevalier Bayard, was sans coeur et sans culotte!" which being interpreted, means without heart or breeches. The unfortunate gentleman probably meant to say that his friend was sans peur et sans reproche—"without fear or reproach."

Proper Indignation.

At a late trial before the Supreme Court, the defendant, who was unaccustomed to legal phraseology, was astonished on hearing himself charged with what seemed to his innocent and unsophisticated mind, all manner of crimes and misdemeanors. He silently listened to the "allegations," as they were repeatedly called, until his patience became exhausted, and then springing to his feet he exclaimed: "See here, Judge! all of them are allegations are false, and that are allegator knows it!"

The Population of the World.

ACCORDING to the American Almanac for 1857, the most reliable estimates of the population of the globe are as follows: Africa, 100,000,000; America, 57,676,882; Asia and Islands, 626,000,000; Australia and Islands, 1,248,000; Europe, 263,517,521; Polynesia, 1,500,000.

A RUSTIC ROLAND FOR AN OLIVER.—It is related of a Scotch clergyman, who is more indebted to his manuscript than to his memory, that he called unceremoniously at a cottage, while its possessor was engaged in perusing a paragraph of the writings of an inspired prophet. "Weel, John, what's this you are about?" "I am prophesying." "Prophesying! I doubt you are only reading a prophecy?" "Weel," argued the rustic, "gin reading a preachin' be preachin', is no reading a prophecy prophesying?"

OFTENER ask than decide questions; this is the way to better your knowledge. Your ears teach you, not your tongue; so long as you are ignorant you need not be ashamed to be instructed.

THINK much and speak little. Think twice before speaking once, and when you speak, speak well.

ENDEAVOR to create good feelings everywhere, and remember that if a person cannot do you some good as a friend, he may do some harm as an enemy.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1857.

The "Satanic," the "Unwashed Philosopher," the "Little Villain," and their Puppies.

FOR some time past scarce a day passes without our noticing something in the public press against President Brigham Young and his counsellors. They are almost invariably represented as the most wicked of men, the most abandoned tyrants that have ever lived, treacherous to the General Government and plotting against it, utterly destitute of every feeling but that of sordid selfishness and knowing no law, in their intercourse with those over whom they preside, than the gratification of licentious passions. To say we believe that the authors of these charges are sincerely convinced of their truth would be untrue. We are sufficiently acquainted with public journalism, and with that of this city particularly, to know that there is no other sincerity about these calumniators than the sincere wish that they may be successful in pleasing and exciting the public, and gaining the most they can for their fulsome scribble, while at the same time they labor to advance the interests of some one for which they are well paid. The horror and alarm with which these editors view "the progress of Mormonism," the danger they "apprehend to the country from the increasing influence of Brigham Young," the tears they profess to shed over the "fallen humanity" they imagine in the Utonians, and the "profound grief" they claim for their "bleeding hearts," as they contemplate through their depraved imaginations an abject slavery and degradation of the fair sex in Utah, are simply easily written phrases which men in their position have opportunity of writing every week over something or other that is before the public—phrases which are no more the exponents of their souls' conviction than the Anglican parson's "sure and certain hope of a glorious resurrection" read over some scapegrace who had only been fortunate enough to escape the hempen rope to die in his own bed, and thereby be entitled to "a christian burial." "Horror," "tears," "grief," and "bleeding hearts," is all fudge: from these sources such terms mean absolutely nothing—resembling only the gilt leaf of bad gingerbread to make it take better with the "green 'uns." Imagine Bennett—the "Satanic," of Potosi lead notoriety—in tears; Greeley—the "Fourierite Philosopher," sarsaparilla merchant, lobby agent of the Stryker $1000 draft notoriety—horrified; and Raymond—the "Little Villain," vender of men's, women's, and children's bones—grieved and bleeding-hearted over the Mormons and Utah! Fudge—from beginning to end all fudge! Stuck together on the same pedestal, the three would, with the spirit and understanding, play the part of the Marble Hearts to perfection—money can purchase us; but with all their talk of tears, grief, and bleeding hearts, they would never pass for the Three Graces.

The Satanic, the Unwashed Philosopher, and the Little Villain write for pence—when they don't for drafts—and know that the moment they come down to sober facts, and deal with men and things just as they are, without the color and dash of their imaginations, that moment is the beginning of the end of their money-making. In no country in the world do editors pander more to the depraved and vitiated tastes of the rabble than in these United States. A steamboat or railway accident, a crim. con. case or murder, or the arrival of a steamer from the Old World or from Nicaragua cannot occur without the venal editor making the most of every item, and as frequently making a great deal more of it than it can bear. He rushes to the press with the most exciting and inflamatory headings to the first rumors that reach his ears; and fearful that his neighbor may be more expeditious, and gain the first few pence for an extra, he heedlessly, and without reflection or discrimination, publishes the most absurd and improbable stories with which some for interest and others for sport have crammed him. Some one now and again starts up with influence enough to make himself heard, and exposes the credulity or misrepresentation of an editor, by reason of which the truth betimes gets to the public; but an acknowledgment of error, or an amende honorable for injustice, is about the last thing expected by those who know the life and procedure of men who make journalism a profession—a money speculation. The politics, religion, and morals of such editors are those which promise the best remuneration of pens, ink, and paper—nothing more. As required and paid, they will one day praise or abuse, whiten or blacken—thick or thin; and the next day, just as ready to take a higher sum and reverse the operation. Intelligent men everywhere are aware of this disreputable course: hence so little regard is paid to any eulogium or charge that such editors may make of or against public persons or men in authority. Let the highest authority of the United States do anything contrary to the wishes or interest of either the Herald, Tribune, or Times, and though he were as pure as the angel Gabriel, their wide-spread clique of penny-a-liners will discover something to annoy him, or to hold him up, if possible, to ridicule before the public, even should they find nothing better to talk about than the parting of his wool, the dye of his wig, or the squinting of his grandmother's old grey cat. But it is seldom they go it so mildly; in the absence of such important historical information, they heap upon the head of their victim every accusation their wicked hearts can conceive, and the small fry that follow in their leading strings re-publish their malicious accusations and meddling, to which they add their own verbiage and local slander. Some will dash out with holy wrath against some swindling operations and stock-jobbing concerns at the public expense in Congress or in the legislative halls of the State, which, if all true, would exhibit an awful lack of probity and absence of common honesty in men holding the highest offices of trust in the nation, and at the same time an immaculate purity in the editor; but, alas! it too frequently occurs, as exhibited in the late Corruption Investigation at Washington, that the holy zeal of the editor is all-bogus, and the righteous exposure of his paid correspondent and the high morality of the casual contributor to his paper are all put on, and is everything but that which it first appears. The editor, when examined, sings mum, knows nothing nor nobody, and scarcely knows himself; the correspondent is obliged to get "a kink" from a lawyer to wriggle through the best he can an examination he had invoked for everybody but himself; but when submitted to its ordeal comes out second best, or, rather, is kicked out as unfit for the society of gentlemen, and utterly repudiated from the floor of "the House." Their don't recollect, can't say, couldn't swear, and all the other rubbish of quibbling was mere pettifogging to hide up greater corruption with which they were themselves believed to be tainted than that in others to which they had first drawn public attention. Yet these are the gentlemen and their paid whelps that are barking so loudly about Mormon corruptions, rebellion, &c. Had the Mormons but the authority of Congress to bring the whole batch of them into the witness-box, they would cut as bad a figure as the Little Villain and his immaculate correspondent did before the Investigating Committee at Washington. In the meantime we shall keep on their track, and a day will come when an investigation will take place and the blackness of their hearts exhibited, and no don't recollect, can't swear, will be able to hide from the gaze of men the price which bought their pens to calumniate and misrepresent the Mormons.

Explanations.

AFTER our last week's "form" was "locked up" on "the stone," all ready to go to press, we received the names of the emigrants by the George Washington, and anticipating that they might arrive before another week, we deferred going to press another day to have the long list inserted. To furnish place, the poetry in to-day's issue was taken out; but in the hurry, the short editorial alluding to it, published last week, was forgotten and remained.

A short editorial alluding to the Governor's message was set up in the same hurry, and in it a curious blunder—"what a rebuke to his friends and calumniators," should read, what a rebuke to his enemies and calumniators!

While we are making acknowledgements, we beg to say to our gifted sister, Miss Kate Redding, that we were not aware of her poetry—"The Triumph of Truth"—having been mutilated in our last year's volume, till our attention was recently drawn to the fact. In justice to the young poetess and the subject, we publish it to-day entire. We might groan out, oh! these awful printers! but as they are generally pretty obliging and do their best in a hurry, we shall share the blame with them and try to improve together.

The George Washington.

THIS fine packet ship arrived at Boston on Monday, with upwards of 800 Mormons. Prest. J. Taylor left the same afternoon for that city to aid them by his counsels. The greater portion of these emigrants will go on direct to Iowa City by railway, and immediately proceed to Florence, the last out-fitting place, where they will be joined by others and continue on to Utah.

Goliath Again.

LAST week we noticed at considerable length the communication of an aspirant to the Governorship of Utah, addressed to the editor of the New York Herald and published in that paper. Our neighbor of the Daily Times of Tuesday republishes a letter addressed to the editors of the National Intelligencer, which may be set down as letter No. 2 from the same pen. The letter before us is more than a column and a half long of closely printed matter, the object of which is to represent the Mormons as in letter No. 1, hostile to the government, well prepared for fighting, up to everything that is calculated to frustrate the efforts of a new Governor, unless he be a "military Governor, with discretionary power to place the whole Territory under martial law, backed by a military force of at least 5,000 men, amply equipped with munitions of war and a year's supply of provisions." The writer professes to have "made nearly a year's stay in Utah," during which he "noted" some very nice sentiments about hostility to the Gentiles, which he has placed to the account of Presidents Young, Kimball, Grant, O. Pratt; Elders Hawkins, Johnson, Ivins and Walker, the Indian Chief, whose body now lies mouldering in the dust. We are not acquainted with the privileges which the gentleman enjoyed during "nearly a year's stay in Utah;" but he seems to have considerable tact in clothing the sentiments he "noted," for the enlightment of the public with language very well chosen for the present excitement. The object of the writer is clear—he wants the Governorship of Utah. To effect his purpose he misrepresents the feelings of the people in that Territory, makes them out a lawless banditti, that would assassinate or poison any body that stood in their way, or was a disbeliever in their faith. By this means he hopes to frighten the administration, make them believe that dirty work has to be done and as honorable men will not stoop to become tools to the enemies of the Mormons, he calculates on considerable chances—particularly if the 5,000 troops accompany him—for notoriety and a share of the plunder. A man who deliberately lies is fit for anything, and one more reckless in that profession we have never yet met.

We don't know who he is and don't care; but were he sent to Utah to-morrow and backed by five times 5,000 troops, and, that doubled three times over, he would be branded to his face as an unscrupulous defamer by every man and woman in the Territory.

It is certainly very complimentary to the Utonians that their calumniators are obliged to go far and wide to rake up something against them, and when their stories are told they are so palpably false that a few words only are sufficient to send their falsehoods back upon the heads of their authors, marking them as men unfit for respectable society. The whole letter is nothing better than a conglomeration of what apostates, stump-orators—religious and political—have bellowed against the Mormons for the last twenty-seven years; and might have been drawn up by that corrupt scoundrel, J. C. Bennett, Tom Sharp and the filthy Van Dusen, as a common platform on which might meet the scum of the nation. There are two and only two new charges in it, the others have been refuted times without number, we shall therefore notice them. The Mormons are said to have "instigated the Indians to revolt in Oregon and Washington Territories in the late war," and supplied them with ammunition. This is a most outrageous falsehood. The Mormons never had any communication or intercourse with the Indians alluded to, and never were within hundreds of miles of them. Governor Stevens was censured by the General Government for instituting martial law in the Territory, and this calumniator comes forth as his apologist and says that the Mormons "were, in my judgment, the cause that created the necessity for the proclamation of martial law by Governor Stevens." Had there been any ground for such a charge it would not have lain dormant till this aspirant for the Governorship of Utah made his appearance at Washington for some of the cheese parings off the new President's table. It would have been out long ago, and every means taken to criminate the guilty. The oft repeated story about teaching the Indians military tactics is but the old Missouri story of preaching freedom to the niggers, with a new dress to suit the circumstances. Our accuser might after that certainly feel no squamishness in taking the Editors of the National Intelligencer to California, and saddling upon the Mormons, headed by Samuel Brannan, Parley P. Pratt and others, the organization of the first Vigilance Committee! We have learned through the public press that Mr. Brannan had taken part with the Vigilantes; but it is the first time that we have heard of Pres. P. P. Pratt or any Mormon dabbling in the Vigilance Committee. We do know that the charge is false. Mr. Pratt is too much of a gentleman to mingle in any of the squabbles of the "Gentiles," and, as we have been informed, never spoke to Mr. Brannan all the time he was in California.

To the Saints of the New York Conference.

WE give hereby notice, that in accordance with a resolution passed in one of our counsels, we deem it wisdom to have a fast day on the first Sunday of every month. ALEXANDER OTT, President.

CHARLES C. DULIN,
WILLIAM H. MILES, } Counsellors.

To Emigrants from Europe.

As the emigration of the Saints from Europe has begun to arrive in our ports, we think it not amiss to throw out some general instructions for the benefit of those who tarry in the States.

Persons who leave their native lands, the homes of their fathers, to seek their fortune on a foreign shore are necessarily anxious to know how they can best attain their object. Situated as we are in the great commercial metropolis of the United States we have many opportunities of witnessing the anxiety of strangers who have just stepped from the packet ship and are full of hope, restless to rush on after ease and riches, and not less frequently do we witness men prowling around them ready to deceive and lead them into difficulties. Though the Saints from Europe are not in the pursuit of wealth nor, by the arrangements made for their reception, exposed to the snares of "the runners," they have nevertheless a feeling common to all men and women—anxiety about what they are going to do.

It is impossible for us to see every person and understand the wishes and learn the circumstances of each individually, we would therefore say to the Saints collectively, that the brethren appointed to preside at Philadelphia, Boston and New York are good men who will from their experience be a blessing to those who follow their counsels. Among those who will arrive this season, in the ports we have named, there will doubtless be many who, though unable to go all the way to Utah, will be very desirous of going West. To those who may have means to take them as far as Florence, N. T., the outfitting place for the plains, we say go and when there, if you can go further, and are counselled to go to the settlements beyond Florence, by all means go, and in carrying out the counsels of the servants of the Lord you will be blessed. To those, however, who have not the necessary means to gather to these places but yet have some means at their disposal we say, instead of running till you have spent the last cent, stay where there is an organized branch of the Church, where you can join with your brethren and sisters in their public assemblies and in their private meetings, and be instructed and enjoy the Spirit of the Lord. It is well to go West, certainly; but when it is only under the impression that a few extra dollars can be gathered there easier than in the east, we say that it profiteth a man little if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul. We shall not sanction running here and there after vain bubbles—we have seen enough to convince us that it is better to live and enjoy every day the blessings of the Lord among organized Saints than to roam about as sheep without a shepherd.

Governorship of Utah.

IF we are to judge of interest by the noise and excitement attending anything, the Governorship of Utah is the most interesting question before the public. Judge Drummond's letter of resignation has been re-published all round, and some editors have let off considerable spite against the Mormons, but, as a general thing, respectable papers pass him by. The woman affair leaks out and spoils him for being regarded as a martyr, or used as a tool that can stand cross-examination. The Goliath we noticed last week, and of whom we have again said something elsewhere this week, does better than Drummond; he is as great in the profession of slander, and has the advantage of the Judge—he is yet unknown. The rush for the Gubernatorial chair abates in nothing. A despatch from Washington on Tuesday says:

"No decisive steps have been taken relative to Utah. There is difficulty in finding a proper man for Governor, although there are half a dozen applicants for the office."

We said last week that we suspected that the Administration was beset with hungry office seekers, but we were little prepared to hear, through the public press, of such a batch. If six are known to the correspondents of the New York press, what a numberless army must be in the background, sliding in by every possible means into the Administration their beggarly petitions. The Herald of Wednesday, thinking it might be useful to the aspirants, publishes the following morsel:

WHO WILL TAKE THE OFFICE OF GOVERNOR OF UTAH?—A few years since, when Brigham Young anticipated his removal from office, he addressed the people of the Territory as follows:

I am and will be the Governor of this Territory, and no power can hinder it, till the Lord Almighty says, "Brigham, you need not be Governor any longer," and then I am willing to yield to another. Every man that comes to impose upon the people, no matter by whom he is sent, or who they are that are sent, they lay the axe at the root of the tree to kill themselves; they had better be careful how they come here, lest I should bend my little finger.

Whether the Herald exhibits the foregoing (which, by the by, we have no time to compare with what was said) as an indication of President Young's faith and influence or a hint to the office-seekers that a good man is wanted and good conduct is expected, we don't know; but our interpretation of the paragraph is simply that the present Governor of Utah believes in an All-wise Supreme Governor over and above all men, and so long as He wills this, that, or the other, it must be so; and any successor to Brigham Young in the gubernatorial chair of Utah must be a good man, who will not IMPOSE UPON THE PEOPLE; otherwise it is very likely to turn out one of the decrees of Providence that his wickedness will recoil upon his own head. Keep it before the hungry loafers, Herald; a good man and no imposition upon the people. Stir them up to diligence, and when the six and the others examine themselves, when they are wanted they will be like Paddy's flea.

Faramorz Little, Esq, and the New York Herald.

THE letter this gentleman addressed to the editor of the Herald last week, contradicting the wicked reports in circulation against the inhabitants of Utah, has not appeared in that paper—of course not!

Notice.

THE Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Philadelphia assemble for worship in the Arch Street Assembly Rooms, on the N. E. corner of Ninth and Arch streets, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M.; 3 and 7½ P.M. Preaching morning and evening. The public are invited.

The Presiding Elders of Branches connected with the Philadelphia Conference, and scattered members or others in that region of country, who may wish to procure the Books published by this Church, should send their orders to President Angus M. Cannon, 302 New Market street, above Vine, Philadelphia, Pa.

An Interesting Letter.

JUST as we were preparing to go to press the Utah mail has arrived in our city, bringing us a bundle of papers, and to ourself and friends in the East, a considerable number of letters. The following letter will be read with satisfaction by those who want to know the facts from which spring the greater part of the present Utah excitement:

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY,

DEAR FRIEND STENHOUSE,—After saying so much I shall now, according to promise, give you some of my observations and impressions of Mormonism in Utah. My account will be different from those generally published in the States, and from which I had formed the opinion, like many others, that the inhabitants of this Territory were enemies to civilization, christianity, and the Constitution of our great country.

When first I came here I had a strong prejudice against the people, and feared them much. An intimate acquaintance with many of my "Gentile" brethren did not lessen my prejudice and fears, but, to the contrary, increased them. From them I learned that their lives were in danger in consequence of hard speeches delivered against them by the "Heads" of the Church at their religious meetings; and, that the "Powers that be" were bitterly opposed to the Federal Government, traitors to their country, and most oppressive and tyrannical in all their acts. Nor was this information confined to the "Gentiles," but I found some Mormons speak very strongly against the measures and policy of the authorities. After five months residence here I have discovered the real cause for the "hard speeches" of the elders, and, to some extent, can account for the spirit of the articles on Mormonism which have appeared from time to time in the newspapers.

I have found that a number of the "Gentiles" and Mormons here are guilty of gross licentiousness. Judge S——— (United States Official and Quarter Mormon) was last week found guilty before the Church court, of adultery, and excommunicated from the Church and published through the Territory.

I know that P———, D———, C——— (United States Officers) and other leading "Gentiles" have been guilty of the same crime, and have hired an old hag to aid them in their hellish designs; and, also, that Gen. B———, Dr. H———, (U. S. Officers) J ———, and others have joined them in gambling, drinking and misrepresenting the acts and policy of the leaders of this community to the Departments at Washington, (I have read the documents) and to the press in New York. As for myself, I confess that I have kept their company to some extent, and plead guilty to the crime of drinking with them, (and thereby incurred the displeasure of the Mormons) but thank God I have never in my life been guilty of fornication and gambling, and I hope never will.

The authorities are well posted in all these movements, and, I am positively astonished that they have done nothing but deliver a few "hard speeches" against such conduct when it is well understood both by Mormons and "Gentiles" that the "mountain law" is, death to the adulterer. But I presume that the Mormons are afraid to put the law in force believing that if they killed any United States official, or banished them and their associates from the Territory, that it would be construed into rebellion against the Government, and go far to confirm the previous reports of their treachery, and bring destruction upon themselves; for it is a notorious fact, that the prejudice against this people runs so high in the States, that there would be a general rising against Utah to avenge any insult or punishment inflicted upon an officer, no matter how much he deserved his fate; while no notice would be taken of a few murders at the Capitol, save by the penny-a-liner. Let a man in any eastern city be shot (he may wear the livery of the U. S.) by a friend of the seduced, and the entire press will trumpet the justice of the punishment and the heroism of the executioner; but let it be done here, and how different the sound of public opinion. The hero of the east not only becomes the villain in Utah, but 70,000 souls are condemned for the act. I would advise the enemies of the Mormons in the States, that if they wish their entire destruction, that the most speedy way to bring it about is to hire some quarter Mormon here to kill a U. S. officer, (anyone will do for the sacrifice—the nation will not lose much, as she doesn't send any here who are worthy of a better place;) and when the deed is done, Herald it through the Union; and in a very short space of time thousands will march towards Utah, full of enthusiasm, thirsting for the blood of—who? the man that killed the officer? Oh no! the 70,000 American citizens!! How is this? If a Presbyterian insults a Methodist, are all the Presbyterians in the State condemned? If a Roman Catholic kills a Protestant are all the Roman Catholics in the State punished for the murder?

The Mormons are not very well satisfied with the General Government in appointing officers for the Territory who are strangers to the people, and not at all interested in the prosperity and advancement of their interest—but rather, on the other hand, do all they can to annoy and perplex them. They come here not as friends or servants of the people, but as representatives of the nation, to coerce and subdue them to their will, and trample under foot the laws of the Territory—which have been submitted and approved by the Government—instead of sustaining them. In fact they have acted as if they had the power from Government to dictate and legislate for the community. I think it would tend greatly to the advancement of this Territory, and secure the good feeling of the people, if officers were appointed from amongst them; and would be no more than just that they should have a voice in the selection of them.

Much has been said and written about the immorality of the Mormons. It's all a humbug. It has been supposed that because they practice polygamy they must of necessity be outrageously corrupt. But the polygamy of the Mormons is not that kind supposed to exist among them. They treat it as a pure and holy principle of the highest order, by which they can raise up a pure, righteous and holy posterity. If it were otherwise it could not be hid from the public gaze. The fruits of Mormon morals would be entirely different from what they are. It is a solid fact that in a community of 70,000 souls there is not a drinking shop, gambling saloon or house of ill-fame; and during the five months that I have been here I have only seen three cases of drunkenness, (my own company excepted,) and scarcely heard one oath. Where is the small town in the United States that can brag of so healthy a state of morals?

By the time you have read this far, you no doubt will conclude that I am nearly converted to Mormonism. If I could admire all their religious principles as much as their morals, I most undoubtedly would join their ranks—but that's impossible. Perhaps if I were a religious man I would have written different, for no doubt I would have seen things different; but my want of faith in Christianity permits me to look at things as they are. I must say, however, that so far as I have investigated their tenets, they are much more reasonable and natural than any other sect with which I am acquainted. Many of their views I admire. God has a body, parts and passions—He made the world out of existing matter—He caused vegetation to grow after depositing the seed in the ground—are very great improvements on the sectarian belief on these subjects.

I do not expect to leave for California sooner than May, you may therefore expect to hear from me before going.

Give my respects to your family, and believe me to be,

As ever, yours truly,
JAMES THOMPSON.

MR. STENHOUSE, New York.

We have only space now to say to friend Thompson that we shall be ever glad to hear from him wherever he may roam.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

ENGLAND.—The parliamentary elections are closed, and appear to result in a majority for the Liberals, yielding, according to the London Globe, 365 government, and 249 opposition returns. Lord Palmerston has intimated to Baron Rothschild that the Jew question will come on the tapis in the first session of the new Parliament as a Cabinet measure. The Queen is anticipated to open Parliament in person. The marriage of the Princess Royal of England is postponed till Jan. next. Gen. Ashburnham is to take the command of the military expedition which is about to be sent to China. In consequence of a suit by a French priest, lately at Chelsea, for the breaking of a contract, a verdict of £500 damages was pronounce dagainst Cardinal Wiseman, who is charged with the loss or embezzlement of an important family document signed by Princess Letitia Bonaparte.

FRANCE.—Arrests of some persons charged with the prosecution of revolutionary plans. Great excitement among American residents in consequence of the suspension of one of the most noted banking houses in Paris.

CHINA.—The latest accounts represent the emperor's pacific intentions towards England as doubtful, and speak of the closing of the five great ports against European commerce as a certain event. Concentration of the rebel forces towards Nankin. An unsuccessful attempt was made to destroy a British man of war by fire.

TURKEY.—The evacuation of the Bosphorus by the English fleet has at last taken place. Apparent success of the Ciriassians in their operations against Russia. Reforms seem to take place in favor of the Christian part of the population.

MOROCCO.—An important treaty between the emperor and England is made relative to the abolition of imported goods with the exception of a few articles.

NAPLES.—Preparations are being made on a grand scale for the shipping of political prisoners to the Argentine Republic. The expatriation is said to be a compulsory one.

RUSSIA.—Continued preparations for military operations in the Caucasus.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

The Niagara sailed on Monday to take part in laying the telegraphic wire across the big waters. The Herald pitches into Secretary Toucey for objecting to a reporter or two walking the deck by day and occupying six feet of hammock room by night. Mr. William B. Reed, of Philadelphia, has been appointed ambassador to China. He goes by London and Paris to see Palmerston and Napoleon—of course no entangling alliances. Samuel's ambassador is only to learn what share of the advantages the old gentleman is to have for his moral force, backed up by all the Navy that can be drawn into the Chinese waters under the stars and stripes! The Secretary of the Interior is said to have nearly completed the arrangements necessary to commence the wagon road to the Pacific. W. E. Nobles, of Minnesota, will construct the road from Fort Ridgely to the South Pass, and return over the Platte road to Fort Kearney. William M. F. Magraw of Missouri will construct the Fort Kearney and Honey Lake roads as far as the City Rocks. John Kirk of California will complete this road from City Rocks to Honey Lake Valley, making from the California side.

Thirty-eight horses were burned to death on Tuesday morning in a livery stable in the upper part of this city; many carriages and wagons, with harness, hay and feed, were consumed. Loss not short of $10,000.

THE following letters have been forwarded to us for publication, and as they may in some measure serve the end for which they have come to us we give them a place in the MORMON.

WAPELLO, April 12, 1857.

BROTHER TAYLOR: I sit down to copy a letter I have just received from Great Salt Lake City foom my aunt. I feel as thoughI wanted to do all I can to put down Satan, for he rages hard in this place. I think this will be read with satisfaction by my friends in the States, and serve to expose some of the slanderous reports of the adversary.

Yours truly, CYNTHIA B. PUTNAM.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY,
October 29th, 1856.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS, it is with feelings of pleasure, that I am writing these lines. I wish you all were here, if it is your desire. If you could hear the sermons delivered by the servants of the Lord here, as I hear them every Sunday, you would soon make up your mind to live with the Saints in these lovely and peaceful Valleys. I feel happy and contented to reside among these people and have no desire of returning to Babylon. Feeling and realizing that I am free from the pestiferous influence of so-called modern civilization and enlightenment, and knowing that I can worship God according to the dictates of my own conscience, I am happy and I only wish that you may soon land in this City, that we may enjoy each other's society and be servants and handmaidens of the Most High. From what I have realized, I know that the Kingdom of God is here in its primitive beauty, and you will find it so, when you get here, only more so than you can conceive now. The country here is beautiful and healthy, the air being pure and serene. Hasten then to come up here as soon as convenient. If I could see you * * * *, I could comfort your hearts; be faithful to your God and do His will, and I hope you will live to come home to Zion to share in the blessings of the Righteous, because here alone is the place, where you can fully receive the rewards of the faithful, and if I could converse with you only for one hour, you all would say, let us arise and go up to the House of God. I have heard but very little of my friends since my arrival here, give my kindest love to them all and write to me as soon as you have got this. Yours truly in the Gospel of Peace, PHEBE P. WALTON.

"POLYGAMY AMONG THE BAPTISTS.—A committee of the Baptists of South Carolina have deliberately resolved that when a slave-husband has been sold to a new master, he may marry a new wife, and thus have a new wife for every new master."

[The above was forwarded to us from Philadelphia without the name of the paper whence taken. Send us on a relation of facts to look at, and we may say something.—ED.]

FOR THE MORMON.

My Fiftieth Year.

BY P. P. PRATT.

I am fifty years old! I have lived to see
Seven times seven and a Jubilee.
That period famed in the days of yore
As a grand release for the humble poor;
When the pledg'd estate was again restor'd,
And the bondman free'd from his tyrant lord.
When man his fellow was bound to forgive,
And begin a-new to think, and to live.
The nations have hail'd the year of my birth
As a Jubilee to the groaning earth.*
The triumphs of steam over land and sea
Have stamp'd the age of my Jubilee.
I have mark'd its progress at ev'ry stride,
From the day it was launch'd on the Hudson's tide,
Till it conquer'd the ocean,—grasp'd the land
And join'd the nations in a common band.
I have liv'd to behold the lightnings yield
To the mandate of man, and take the field,
As a servant-runner to bear the news
In an instant, where its lord might choose.

And, scarce less strange I have liv'd to behold
A Mormon Sage, with his wand of gold
Overturn the world, and toss it up
As a teller of Fortunes would his cup.†
All these are facts; but, of little worth,
Compared with a prophet, restored to earth.
I have seen his day and have heard his voice;
Which enraged a world, while the meek rejoiced.
I have read the fate of all earthly things:
The end of thrones, and the end of kings.
I have learned that truth alone shall stand,
And the Kingdom of God fill every land.
I have seen that Kingdom rolling along
And taking its seat 'mid the mountains strong.
While the nations wondered, but could not tell
To what these wonderous things would swell.
I have wandered far over land and sea
To proclaim to the world its destiny:—
To cry to the nations, repent and live,
And be ready the Bridegroom to receive.

I have wandered far—I have wandered wide,
From Maine to the wild Missouri's tide;
And over the ocean's sea-girt isles
Full many a weary thousand miles.
I have trampled the deserts burning sands
And the snow-clad mountains of unknown lands.
Mid the crystal waters of Deseret
I have pulled the oar and cast the net,
I have climbed the steeps 'mid the golden ore,
And roamed o'er the lone Pacific shore.
I have plowed its bosom many a-day
To visit the nations far away.
I have stood on Chilli's distant shore,
Where the Polar Star is seen no more.
I have gazed on the Andes' heights of snow,
And roamed 'mid the flowery plains below.
I have toiled with the great in freedom's cause
And assisted to give to a State its laws.
I have lain in a dungeon, bound in chains
And been honored in Courts where Justice reigns.
In a thousand joys, and a thousand fears
I have struggled on through my fifty years.
And now, by the law of God, I am free;
I will seek to enjoy my Jubilee.
I will hie me home, to my mountain dell,
And will say to the "Christian" world;—farewell.
I have served ye, long——, 'twas a thankless task,
To retire in peace, is all I ask.

Another fifty years will fully prove
Our message true, and all our motives, love.
Then shall a humble world in reverence bow
And hail the prophets so rejected now.
Kings shall revere, and nations incense bring,
To Zion's temple, and to Zion's King.
I shall be there and celebrate the day
Till twice ten fifties shall have passed away.

* The first steamboat was launched in 1807, on the Hudson River, by Robert Fulton.

† An American soldier, of the Mormon Battalion, discovered the gold mines in California, in 1847.

A Response to P. P. Pratt's "Fiftieth Year."

BY JOHN TAYLOR.

Thou art "fifty years old"—I am glad to see
That thou now canst hope for a Jubilee.
Go rest thee, my friend, for weary and long
Thou hast faithfully strove with a wayward throng;
With a world environed with error's chain,
Thou hast wrestled and struggled, but not in vain.
On thy native shore, and on foreign land,
Thou hast battled for truth with a master hand,
And their cities, and towns and hamlets have rung
With the sound of truth, with the voice of song;
And thousands in Zion do now rejoice,
Who've read thy works or heard thy voice,
And millions have seen thy bosom swell
With celestial truths thou lov'st so well.

Let drivelling sycophants bow the knee
To that cameleon shrine, popularity,
And with honey'd lips, bound with mammon's spell,
Plaster over the vices they dar'd not tell,
And with wheedling, whining, canting tongue,
Daub o'er the deeds of a hellish throng.
'Twas thine, the mask from their loathsome face,
To rend, and exhibit their foul disgrace.

Thou hast grappled with sages in error rife,
Thou hast taught to the erring the way of life;
With flaming words and a burning pen,
Thou hast bearded gaunt priestcraft in his den,
And said to Baal's grizzly priests: avaunt!
I dare you in your dark, ghastly haunt.
And the canting, craven minions fled
At the truths thou penned and the words thou said.
With Elijah's faith and Elijah's rod,
Thou despised their power and defied their god,
And made the canting hirelings cower,
Beneath the truth's keen, withering power.
Thou show'd them their systems were doom'd to fall,
That Upharsin was written on Babel's wall.
Thou hast spent 'midst their hordes a busy life;
Thou art leaving the den of their Babel strife.
Let others now 'mid the nations roam,
And hie thee away to thy mountain home.

If sleeping at night, the weary may
Forget the cares and toils of day;
And if by God to man is given,
A day of rest in every seven;
If the pledg'd possession could be restored,
On the grand release by Jehovah's word;
If the debtor's bonds could then be broke,
And the slave be freed from a master's yoke,
And the very land a partaker be,
Of the general jubilant Jubilee;
If all bonds were broken on that day,
And chains and manacles thrown away;
If throughout the land, by every tongue,
All joined in the joyous jubilee song;
If debtors and slaves and earth were free:
Thou oughtest to have a Jubilee.

If a wish from a sincere friendly heart,
Can to thee any comfort or joy impart;
If a fervent prayer to the God of grace
Could smooth thy path on thy onward race,
That prayer would be, may grace be given
To wend thy onward course to heaven.
May'st thou abound in corn and wine,
And the blessings of plenty now be thine;
May thy family all be free from care,
And a husband's and father's plenty share;
May thy sun go down with glory rife,
And dying may'st thou burst into life;
And when sleeping among the silent dead,
Have the blessings of millions on thy head;
And living with God, may'st thou be free,
And partake of an endless Jubilee.

Harmony of Nature and Revelation.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

Centuries have been employed in establishing philosophical systems with a view of defining the veritable entity or esse of God and His workings, without any apparent success; a conglomeration of the most absurd and heterogeneous ideas and dogmas has been advanced, without solving that important problem. The powerless and shallow pretenses to philosophy have, with a few exceptions, covered the world with a maze of abstruse sophistic, unpracticable systems, without introducing a theory, that might lead to a correct knowledge of Godliness and the divine powers as displayed in the grand economy of Nature. An erudite prolixity in the explanation of some chemical principles, is not sufficent to enlighten the human mind concerning its relationship with God, and from history, it is evident that the intellect of man has been made subject to scandalous irregularities; that the imagination of the heart has been tainted with inconsistent, visionary theories in which the doctrines of a Supreme Agency is frequently ridiculed and denied; and these evils have been and are increasing in the ratio of so-called enlightenment and civilization, hence infidelity and fatality have more or less found access among the children of man.

It is not a vain dream of the heart that we are desirous of knowing something about our future destiny! It is not an illusion that indistinct anticipations in which heart answers to heart, arise in us concerning a future state; it is not from mere chance that our minds strive to throw back the floating curtains of uncertainty, mist and darkness, im order to ascertain the final or primary cause of all those grand phenomena which are continually transpiring on the arena of the universe.

There is but one principle which gives an insight into the sublime machinery of Nature; which unravels the mysteries of Godliness and its grand purposes relative to the endless variety of creations; which shows the past, present and future destiny of man and everything connected with him—it is Revelation which although strictly legal, philosophical and scriptural, is disbelieved by the present generation; against which short-sighted mortals, through the glitter of pompous but erroneous erudition; erroneous, because the acquisition of true knowledge does not in the least interfere with rational reflections on the Deity; its purposes and with seeing in all His workings, only the manifestation of His will have endeavored to frame critical judgments, and to pronounce the anathema of unpopularity and absurdity, as being derogatory to the refinement and enlightenment of this age. How inconsistent to make reason resign its sedate office, and cause fancy to take the lead; the mind, through a mase of vanity and pride, so as to shut the ear to the noble and emphatic eloquence of heaven, whose works are the most magnificent heralds of the Creator's greatness!

What other argument but that of the opposing flood of public opinion can be brought against the principle of Revelation? Because it is unpopular, it is disbelieved, arguing that whatever is disagreeable to the established opinion of the age, must be false, and that whatever is believed by the multitude must be correct. But inasmuch as the premiss in the preceding sentence, is either doubtful or false, the argument is a fallacy because a popular doctrine may be true, but it does not follow, that it must be true, hence an unpopular doctrine may be correct.

Revelations from the Latin revelatio, is, as we learn from the holy writ the only principle by which God communicates with the children of man; but independent of its scriptural validity it is not only consistent but in strict harmony with the laws of Nature, as I will endeavor to prove in the following.

A critically scientific investigation of the physical and mental creations shows, in every point of view, the existence of certain laws, causes and effects, which can be traced to a great final or primary cause; it is further evident, that through all the visible operations of Nature, the attributes of divine wisdom are displayed. As we meet in the structure, symmetry and economy of every blade, leaf, plant, in fact in all organized bodies both of the animal and vegetable kingdoms, with certain principles, which, as secondary causes, have to be referred to a great generalizing power which is the primary cause of every thing, we conclude that these laws, as contained in the different departments of the vast creation, are the circumstantial, indirect interpreters of the divine will of the highest agency, showing that God is communicating with the workmanships of His hand, by imparting to them principles which are suitable to their different positions. In relation to the human race, God has introduced an endless variety of intellectual gradations, implanting in the bosom of every one the desire of receiving and giving intelligence and knowledge. Hence, we find, generally, the wise, the learned, and experienced, placed in positions in which they can instruct, teach and improve the public mind. Also, in family compacts, we see the heads instructing their wives and offspring, trying to inculcate in them principles which are productive of bodily and mental sustenance and improvement. The principle of mutual communication is manifesting itself even among the brute creation, where the intelligent workings of reason and sense are replaced by instinct, which induces them to teach their young the principle of self-preservation, so as to maintain their position in the scale of being. If animals possess that instinct of communication, where did they get it from? Why, it emanates from God; and if man has intelligence sufficient to use the same principle, viz., to communicate with his fellow-beings, he must have got it like every other gift from the supreme agency of our heavenly Father. Is it then reasonable and consistent to suppose that God should bestow gifts, of which He Himself is destitute, or that He could impart to man, what He does not possess, or as in this case here, that God should give to man the power of communication, without possessing it Himself? If we then must conclude, that God, as the fountain of all truth, possesses the principle of communication or revelation in the highest perfection, why should we then suppose that God has that attribute without using it. Does He not bestow gifts, powers and blessings upon His creations for the purpose of using them, that certain benefits, certain salutary effects might be derived from, or should we suppose that God introduces causes without effects, or effects without causes? In order to explain the foregoing a little better, I will give the following illustration: On examining a house, we conclude that the wisdom, consistency and experience displayed in its structure, symmetry and arrangements must be traceable to a certain cause or operating principle, the wisdom of which is visible in the house, and that that cause be the builder; the effects of it are that the house has been made fit for the comfort and accommodation of human beings, so we find the cause and effects in the construction of a building, and thus we see the realization of the revealed idea of a person, which was hidden when it was first conceived in the mind, and from analogy we conclude further, that inasmuch as man possesses a portion of the divine essence, he will act like his heavenly Father, hence the grand workings of God in the economy of Nature, are only the realization of his sublime plans, purposes, as an interpretation of His revealed will, and thus, if we only are willing to follow the train of our reflections, we find, that every physical and mental phenomenon in the Universe is only an operation, a modus operandi through the medium of revealed principles.

We further find that the realization of divine ideas, of revealed principles, is consistent with the laws and principles of natural philosophy and with Nature generally, and have consequently beneficial and salutary effects wherever they can operate;—hence there is a light, a knowledge, a power unknown to the common mind, which makes revealed truth independent, existing only in itself and by itself, being always complete as far as it is revealed, always clinging to light, and shunning darkness and evil; and thus men when inspired and acting under the impulse of the divine spirit, tell the truth, advance correct principles, because they have received the light from Heaven. This principle is found to a certain extent among nearly all nations, with the modification, however, that it merely refers to the cultivation of sciences, arts, and other improvements which are in accordance with the spirit of the age, excluding thus a correct knowledge of Godliness, to which, with the exception of the Latter Day Saints, the world professes to be an entire stranger.

The above principle is known to the children of men commonly as genius, without which no artist, poet, barrister or the followers of any other profession can secure a prominent place in the temple of Fame. The most striking harmony existing between Revelation and Nature, the greatest agreement of the physical laws with the principles revealed in the Holy Writ, is the accuracy which exists between the predictions of inspired writers and the facts ascertained in the physical arena of Nature, as is especially illustrated by important geological discoveries. Finally let me say that inasmuch as God is the supreme disposer of events, the giver of endless gifts, He cannot in accordance with His divine wisdom, introduce either in the physical or mental creation, laws and principles which are not in the strictest harmony with each other, without disturbing the eternal order of the Universe; hence the revelations given relative to a moral advancement and salvation, are just as consistent and true as the laws of natural philosophy, and thus all principles inasmuch as they are emanating from one common cause, the fountain of all truth, tend, although wonderfully diversified in their effects and bearings, to introduce that harmony, order, intelligence and happiness which characterises so nobly the vast realms of Omnipotence.

Correspondence of L. O. Littlefield, Esq.

Glendale Cottage, Crescent City, Iowa, March 30th, 1857.

Elder Taylor—Dear Sir: I am one, among hundreds, who felt truly gratified at the announcement, a few numbers back, that the Mormon was to be published one more year. In saying that hundreds of people were pleased, I am sure I must be right; for who that loves a bold and consistent exponent of truth, on a great variety of interesting topics, political, scientific, as well as religious, but what must be delighted with its continuation? These are found among the liberalists of America and England, and opposed to them is a party possessing antagonistic principles whose minds wear the trammels of sectarian bigotry and the multiform theories of modern humbug.

The Mormon is published at the right place; in the City of New York, the great literary mart of the Republic, where all varieties of newspapers are published, and where books multiply in the discussion of every question of interest or amusement that swell the excited volume of the public pulse. There are found those who cater to feed a vitiated moral apetite, and who fill their columns with the trash and lumber of false philosophy and false ethics. The traditions which have been handed down through the ages of ignorance and sectarian domination, have been nursed, and welcomed, and pampered by the great ones, who loom up us the beacon lights of society, until their chains are forged and their bands made strong. Society has necessarily become corrupt, and men and women have fallen from their true dignity and run after the will-o-wisps of fashion that corrode and canker in their midst, until real happiness and domestic peace is well-nigh uprooted and banished from that metropolis. The dense human tide that pours through the streets by day and by night, chasing down the butterflies of fashion, or grasping after the bubbles of vanity, clad in silks and satins, the badges of aristocratic pomps and vanity; this vast stream of human beings, seeks no general level of principle, upon which to plant their hopes and aspirations of the present or future existence; buteach mind is the umpire of its own folly, and follows the bent of its own selfish will and vitiased desires.

They have great men there, certainly; men remarkly renowned; they have their ministers, their philosophers, their poets, their litterati, and their lion editors; they have their politicians, their orators and their statesmen; but yet they have no master-spirit to stand at the helm and point out the rock on which society is shivered. What! Bennett and Greeley not master-spirits? Master-spirits of a certain kind they may be; but they are from the school of disunionists; and every blow they let fall into the broken ranks of society, only aggravates the evil without any healing balm derived from the sourses of eternal wisdom. Bennett has received the most of his notoriety, from efficacious flagilations, merritoriously applied by the agency of the cowhide, and the bullion that enables him to throw off so many copies of his slanderous sheet, has been mainly amassed by prosecuting his system of black mail so generally known and repudiated by all honorable publishers. Horace Greeley is not the man to control the mighty influence which a circulation of one hundred and seventy-five thousand copies of the Tribune must necessarily command. He is personally dishonest in what he publishes about the Mormons. He originates column after column, in the shape of "Utah Correspondence," for the sake of stuffing the minds of the hypocrites, and feeding the credulity of the ignorant; thereby, hoping to add to the number of his circulation, and make a few more dishonest pence. But, if the Day book is good authority, the Tribune is rappidly losing cast, as a recent loss of thirty thousand names from the subscription list has been sustained by the philosopher! So he has not made much by his discharge of paper bullets in the direction of Utah.

In reading number after number of the Mormon, I have been surprised and delighted at the ease and effectual manner in which you have turned the artillery of these lion editors against themselves. You effectually use them up with their own weapons, and make their vaunted wisdom appear as foolishness, and as the frothing of bigoted mammon, worshiping skullions. Who is James Gordon Bennett? and who is Horace Greeley? With all their worldly renown, with all their boasted wisdom, and bloated up as they may be with pride and stubborn will; yet the brightest ray that has brightened up their literary career has been eclipsed; their power is upon the wane, and their unpopularity is becoming more and more apparent.

Success to the Mormon; it towers above them all; for wisdom, truth, justice and virtue constitute its armament, and make it invincible.

Yours truly, L. O. Littlefield.

History of Submarine Telegraphs.

ABRIDGED FROM THE NEW YORK HERALD,

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

Great and wonderful improvements have been made in the course of time, but especially in this present age, so that even the Promethean spark is elicited from the Heavens, made subject to the will of man and serves to carry the tidings of joy and woe from one pole to the other.

One of the most extraordinary inventions and improvements is the establishing of submarine telegraphs, the bearings and effects of which when fully developed, will wonderfully influence society in all its ramifications.

Prof. S. T. B. Morse, an American gentleman of acquirements of the highest order, was the first who showed not only the feasability of transmitting messages through electric medias, but also of employing the same principle as communicating agents under the surface of the water. In the prosecution of that idea, he made the first experiment on the 18th October, 1842, by establishing a telegraph on Governor's Island and one at Castle Garden, which proved the feasability of the idea Prof. Morse had first conceived in his mind. The distance between the two connecting points for the transmission of the electric spark is about 17 miles. In August, 1850, the first submarine telegraph was erected between Dover and Calais, the submerging of the cable, that consisted of a copper wire, as thick as an ordinary knitting needle being encased in gutta percha, was completed in about 7 hours, in which time 24 miles of cable were paid out. The cable was sunk by means of chunks or weights of from 14 to 24 pounds. In order to withstand the straining to which it might be subjugated, the cable was made of four copper wires or conductors, each insulated with gutta percha, and afterwards bound together with hemp steeped in a solution of tar and tallow. It looked like a rope of about an inch in diameter. The depth of the water being about 200 feet in the British Channel, no great difficulty was found in sinking the cable. In May, 1852, the first submarine telegraph was erected between Ireland and Great Britain, the distance being 65 miles, and the greatest depth 500 feet. In May, 1853, the first submarine telegraph communication took place between Scotland and Ireland, the distance being 30 miles. The cable was composed of six wires. In June, 1853, a cable was laid to connect Orfordness in England with Hague in Holland, the distance being 115 miles. About that time a submarine telegraph connection commenced between Dover and Ostend. In the Summer 1854, a telegraph line was established between Corsica and Sardinia, in Italy. The Sardinian Government rendered great assistance in the undertaking. A subsequent laying of a cable between the Islands of Sardinia and Corsica across the gulf of St. Bonifaccio was successfully accomplished. Shortly afterwards an unsuccessful attempt was made to erect a submarine telegraph between Algeria and the Island of Sardinia. In August 1855, the New York, Newfoundland and London telegraph company attempted to connect the Islands of Newfoundland with Cape Breton, but in consequence of a gale the undertaking had to be abandoned, but was accomplished in 1856. The cable has but one wire, being composed of strands. The strand is encased in three layers of the purest gutta percha, seperately applied, its weight is about one ton per mile. A short time after the arrival of the allied armies in the Crimea a submarine telegraph between Varna and Balaklava, across the Black Sea, was established; it is the longest which has been yet laid, its length being 374 miles.

In relation to the establishing of a submarine telegraph across the Atlantic, in order to connect the Eastern and Western Hemispheres, the following historical remarks may not be uninteresting to the reader. About three years ago the Atlantic Company applied for the furtherance of their plans to the colonial government of Newfoundland, from which they received a charter, and the exclusive privilege for fifty years, for erecting a telegraph line across that island and through any of the adjoining waters. $25,000 were appropriated by the above government for the construction of a bridle path across the southern portion of the country, which was considered absolutely necessary for the regulation and repair of the telegraph. Independent of that, the Company obtained the interest on $250,000 for twenty years, and a present of fifty square miles, according to their choice, in any part of the island. A charter was further granted by the government of Prince Edward's Island and New Brunswick. Towards the end of last year, a telegraph line was completed between the United States and St. John, by laying a cable across the Gulf of St. Lawrence, from Cape Ray to Cape North. Through the indefatigable exertions of Cyrus W. Field, one of the agents of the Company, the whole amount of capital of $1,750,000 was got up by a subscription on shares. Two English naval steamships, and the United States Steam Frigates Susquehannah and Niagara will compose the expedition which is about to perform the grand task of laying the great submarine telegraph which is, as it were, to bring the New and the Old Worlds together. The establishing of the line is expected to be completed in two months from now. Of the vessels engaged in the expedition, the Niagara will take one-half of the cable or 1250 miles, on board at London, while one of the English steamers will receive the other half at Birkenhead, near Liverpool. The distance between the two points of connection, is 1650 miles.

SIMPLE DIVISION,

Is the method of finding how often one number is contained in another of the same denomination.

The number to be divided is called the Dividend.

The number you divide by is called the Divisor.

And the number of times the dividend contains the divisor is called the Quotient.

If the dividend contains the divisor any number of times and some part or parts over, those parts are called the Remainder.

Rule.—1. Draw a small curved line on the right and left of the dividend, and write the divisor on the left.

2. Find how many times the divisor is contained in as many figures of the dividend as are just necessary, and place the result on the right for the first figure of the quotient.

3. Multiply the divisor by this quotient figure; and having subtracted the product from that part of the dividend above mentioned, bring down the next figure of the dividend to the right of the remainder.

4. Divide the remainder, thus increased by the divisor, as before, for the second figure of the quotient: observing if it goes 0 times to put down a cypher in the quotient, and bring down another figure to the remainder.

5. Proceed with this result as with the former, and so on, till all the figures of the dividend are brought down; then the entire number in the quotient, together with the last remainder, if any, will be the answer.

Note.—When the divisor does not exceed 12, the quotient must be written down as it arises, immediately under the dividend.

Proof.—Multiply the quotient by the divisor, and add the remainder, if any, to the product; then, if this sum be equal to the dividend, the work is right.

QUESTION.

A gentleman wishing to relieve a number of beggars, finds that if he gives them 6 cents a-piece, he will have 20 cents left; and that he has not enough by 14 cents to give them 8 cents a-piece: required the number of beggars and the money he possesses.

Correspondence of Elder Silver.

New York, April 21, 1857.

Ed. Mormon—Dear Sir: In the Mormon of last week I find an answer given by W. I. A. to a question propounded by him some few weeks back, which is quite an arithmetical novelty in its way; as, according to the ordinary method of numeration, it would require to be expressed by one hundred and twenty-six figures instead of sixty-six.

I leave it for those who understand the subject to decide, premising, however, that if W. I. A. will give the solution to the question propounded by me in your last, (and which I do not think will be obtained without working it,) we shall be more ready to accept his last week's answer as correct, than now.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Fire at Bethany.

Bethany, N. Y., April 19, 1857.

The University of Northern New York in this place was destroyed by fire last night. The building was owned by John F. Stoddard, Esq. The amount of the loss not been ascertained.

Accident on the Hudson River Railroad.

Poughkeepsie, April 20, 1857.

The 10:50 train from Albany, near Rhinebeck was thrown off the track, precipiating the engine, tender and baggage car in the river. The engine and tender are entirely under the water, and the baggage car is resting on them. The passenger cars were thrown across the track, and were considerably damaged. A few persons received slight bruises, but on one was fatally injured.

Marine Disasters.

Norfolk, April 20, 1857.

The steamer Cahawba brought into this port to-day the bark Warren, which she picked up ninety miles south of Cape Hatteras, abandoned. The Warren was bound from Cuba to New York, and had her bows stove in.

The steamer Liberty was burat on Saturday at Plymouth, N. C. Loss $20,000.

The Weather.

Baltimore, April 20.

A violent northeast storm has prevailed since yesterday evening, with rain, snow and hail at intervals. It is now raining heavily with a high wind.

Philadelphia, April 20.

Snow fell last night at Reading and Pottsville to the depth of twelve inches. The iron roof of the machine shop of the Reading Railroad at Reading was broken down by the weight of the snow. All the workmen in the building escaped, except two who were slightly injured. The woodwork of several locomotives was damaged. The portion of the roof that fell was 180 feet in length. This accident will not interfere with the business of the road. The snow fell here briskly for a short time this afternoon. The wires of the Western telegraph line via Pittsburgh are down.

Fire at Lowell, Mass.

Lowell, April 21, 1857.

Three buildings on the corner of Prescott and Merrimac streets, owned by T. Wentworth and Nathaniel Wright, and occupied as stores, were destroyed by fire this morning. Loss $20,000.

Fire at Ballston, N. Y.

Ballston, April 21, 1857.

The barn of Joseph Jennings in this place, together with seven horses, were burned last night. The fire is supposed to have been the act of an incendiary. Loss about $2,000.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are he kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Book Postage.

ALL Books sent by post require prepay ent of one cent per ounce under 3000 miles—beyond that, 2 cents. Remittances for books should include postage. Remember.

Letter Notice.

WE are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

HORACE E. DIMICK & CO.'S
GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM,
FOR SHOT GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, BOWIE KNIVES, AND SPORTING APPARATUS of every variety, is at
No. 42 Main Street, St. Louis, Mo., (at the Sign of the Deer in Windows.)
WE are now in receipt of our stock of Goods for the coming season, which enables us to say, that we have now in store, and for sale, the LARGEST and most COMPLETE assortment of Guns, Pistols, Sporting Apparatus, and Goods selected expressly for the arming of wagon trains, for crossing the plains, the markets of Santa Fe, Salt Lake, and Oregon, &c., that can be found in any HOUSE in the WESTERN COUNTRY!
Among the most staple articles now on hand, can be found upwards of 2,000 DOUBLE AND SINGLE SHOT GUNS; 2,500 MUSKETS AND UNITED STATES RIFLES, both new and second-hand, with flint or percussion locks; COLT'S REVOLVERS, of all sizes, ALWAYS on hand, in quantities to satisfy almost any demand, and at EASTERN PRICES. Also, all the most improved patterns of Revolvers and other Pistols now in use.
N. B.—We, the undersigned, being practical men in all matters appertaining to the arming and equipping of Emigrant and Merchant wagon trains for crossing the plains, renders our experience worthy of consultation, to make it the more easy for the emigrant and trader to supply themselves with the necessary articles, viz: FIRE ARMS, FIXED AMUNITION, PROVISIONS AND GROCERIES, of all kinds; Wagons, Tents, Horses, Mules, Oxen; in short, everything necessary for their comfort.
We also beg leave to call the attention of EASTERN HUNTING PARTIES, that wish to spend a few months on the plains, that we have all the necessary arms and equipments, and at prices as low as they can be furnished in any Eastern city.
We keep constantly on hand, (or make to order,) TARGET, HUNTING, and MINNIE RIFLES, which we guarantee to be superior to any in the country.
We also keep constantly on hand the CELEBRATED SHARP'S PATENT RIFLE, which is the safest and most destructive weapon ever invented, for sale at the Manufacturer's prices, for cash.
Please call and examine for yourseles, as it is no trouble for us to answer questions, or show goods. Remember the place, No. 42 North Main street.

Poetry.

My Angel Name.

SELECTED.

In the land where I am going,
When my early life is o'er,
When the tired hands cease their striving,
And the tired heart aches no more—
In that land of light and beauty,
Where no shadow ever came
To o'ercloud the perfect glory—
What shall be my angel name?

When the spirits who await me
Meet me at my entering in,
With that name of love and music
Will their welcoming begin?
Not the one so dimmed with earth stains,
Linked with thoughts of grief and pain;
No! the name that mortals gave me
Will not be my angel name!

I have heard it all too often,
Uttered by unloving lips;
Earthly care, and sin and sorrow,
Dim it with their deep eclipse.
I shall change it like a garment
When I leave this mortal frame,
And at life's immortal baptism
I shall have another name.

For the angels will not call me
By the name I bear on earth;
They will speak a holier language
Where I have my holier birth,
Syllabled in heavenly music,
Sweeter far than earth may claim,
Very gentle, pure and tender—
Such will be my angel name.

It has thrilled my spirit often
In the holiest of my dreams;
But its beauty lingers with me
Only like the morning beams,
Weary of the jarring discord
Which the lips of mortals frame,
When shall I with joy and rapture
Answer to my angel name?

United States Appointments and Legislation for her Territories.

In the second paragraph of the Declaration of Independence are the following words: "Governments are instituted among men, deriving their JUST powers from the CONSENT of the GOVERNED," and for the purpose of securing "certain inalienable rights," among which are "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." It is urged by some that the Declaration is purely an abstraction, but however much of an abstraction, when compared with the validity of legal enactments, a truth enumerated therein is as self-evident and as worthy of proper observance as though clothed with the panoply of law. In fact, it is alone by the observance of truths that enactments can abide the rush of progress, and the rights of people be permanently secured. A disregard of this principle cost the British Government its most valuable possessions in America, and, if so powerful a nation could not successfully coerce its subjects by oppression, that should at least learn others that a united and firm government with a happy people can never long abide the test now being applied to the powers that be, except those powers are based upon the immutable principles of even-handed justice.

In all governments there must of necessity be laws, which involves decisions upon and enforcements against their infraction, whether the power be vested in one supreme head, or whether in several departments, or whether in three as in our own nation. But regardless of the mode of administration, no government, independent of the free or tacit acquiescence of the masses, need look for permanency, for what is any man, king or emperor, though he be, or any set of men, even though dignified by the title of Congress, when ruling regardless of the just rights of the governed? Now, in conduct towards Territories, does Congress fairly and fully regard the force of the word "CONSENT" of the GOVERNED? Verily no, for by their "advice and consent" certain Territorial officers are appointed by the President, and they also cut and carve certain organic acts for Territories, utterly regardless not merely of the "CONSENT" but also of the well known and expressed wishes of the "GOVERNED." As before hinted, it may be argued that this usurpation of power is only in contravention of the Declaration, which is purely an abstraction. Let it be granted, for argument's sake, that such is the case, it still remains that the President and Congress override an eternal and immutable principle of justice, by appointing officers and making laws without the vote and contrary to the expressed rights and wishes of a portion of the "governed" in a professedly republican government.

Having fairly and truthfully stated the case so far as the "Declaration" is concerned, we will next proceed, with the same candor and love of the Constitution and equal rights, to canvass certain principles contained in that supreme LAW of the land, the Constitution. In that document, ordained and established "order to form a more perfect UNION, establish JUSTICE, insure DOMESTIC TRANQUILITY, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of LIBERTY to ourselves and our posterity," we find the supreme power distributed among the legislative, executive and judicial departments. A knowledge of the metes and bounds of these several departments, as set forth in the Constitution and amendments thereto, with a knowledge of the acts of those departments, will readily enable any one, who loves the purity of our institutions, to determine when they are acting legitimately in their several spheres.

Taking the divisions as we find them, we learn that "all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives." (Art. I, Sec. 1, of the Constitution.)

In section 8 of the same article we find those powers enumerated as follows:

SECTION VIII.

The Congres shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States: but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

To borrow money on the credit of the United States;

To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes;

To establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States;

To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures;

To provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States;

To establish post offices and post roads;

To promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries;

To constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court;

To define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offences against the laws of nations;

To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water;

To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years;

To provide and maintain a navy;

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions;

To provide for organizing, arming and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards and other needful buildings; And

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the fore-going powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or office thereof.

The loosest and vaguest expounder of the above enumerated specific and general Congressional powers cannot, in honesty and in fairness of construction, infer any Constitutional right or power vested in Congress to appoint officers for the inhabitants of her Territories, nor to in any manner legislate therefor in a channel that would not be equally applicable to States containing Indian tribes, government lands, sea coast, &c. Should any one be disposed to take shelter under the words "general welfare" in the first paragraph of section 8, it is sufficient to reply that both text and context obviously apply that power to the caring for the United States as a whole, and not for any one State or Territory, nor for any other number less than all of them. But another person may fancy that he finds a right for appointing officers and legislating for free white inhabitants of Territories (as Congress dare not presume to do for like inhabitants in States) in the words "and all other powers," as found in the last paragraph of the section quoted.

Lest such person should rest content with so incorrect a conclusion, we will proceed in search of "the all other powers," at least so far as pertinent to our caption, which brings us to Article II, concerning "the exectuive power." In the second paragraph of the 2d section of that Article, we find that, after specifically enumerating certain officers, the President is authorized to appoint "all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not otherwise herein provided for and which shall be established by law." A glance will show that Governors and Secretaries, also District Judges, Marshals and Attorneys as now appointed for Territories, are not found among the appointments provided for by specification; neither can such officers be found among such as "shall be established by law," for there is no provision in the Constitution authorizing in any wise the enactment of a law for creating such officers.

As "The judicial power" does not legislate, nor appoint officers of the kind in question, we will next examine Article IV, and quote the 2d section. "The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of the citizens in the several States." Why not the citizens of Territories be so "entitled?" We reiterate, without any fear of correct contradiction, that there is no Constitutional why not. This statement brings us to the second paragraph of the 2d section of the same Article, and as it is the main point upon which the most ultra advocates base their arguments in favor of appointing officers and legislating for the free white inhabitants of Territories, we will also quote it entire. "The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State." When the words "Territory or other property" and the word "claims" are taken with their context, and due force given to the word "or" after the word "Territory," it is more than strange that any one should be so reckless of his credit for the most ordinary judgment and the most superficial knowledge of our language, as to urge for a moment that "Tergitory" is not here applied exclusively to domain—certain defined surfaces of land then owned and thereafter to be owned by the United States—and not to the inhabitants thereon.

A part of section 4 of Article IV reads, "The United States shall guaranty to every State in the Union a Republican form of Government." Why not at once admit Territories as States, upon their application, and abolish the perpetuation of the English kingly system of colonial vassalage in a professed Republic? Would that be too great a stride for pigmy politicians, towards fully carrying out the letter and spirit of the Constitution?

We have now carefully gone through the Constitution, and have presented the best extracts that we can find therein towards authorizing the President and Congress of the United States in appointing officers and legislating for the free white inhabitants in Territories, more than for those in States, and behold there is no such Constitutional authority nor even the shadow of it! Neither is there any such authority in the "Amendments" to that Constitution, but on the contrary Article IX of those "Amendments" reads, "The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people;" and Article X, "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Inasmuch as there is no Constitutional authority for the President and Congress to appoint officers and legislate for American citizens in Territories any more than for those in States, and inasmuch as such a course is an illegal stretch of power and in direct contravention of a fundamental principle contained in the Declaration, it may well be wondered how and why the present Territorial policy became instituted and still continues to be perpetuated. The thirteen federal States, emerging from the British colonial yoke, found themselves entering upon the field of untried experiment, surrounded by circumstances more or less new, and the wisest and best of them strongly influenced by habits formed while under colonial government, and deeply traditionated in looking up to the mother country. Hence it is not a matter of much surprise that they should cling, to a certain extent, to former customs and traditions, while so soon called upon to legislate for that region of country outside the thirteen original States, nor that they should, on account of that influence, measurably curtail their brethren of their just and equal rights, if they moved beyond certain boundaries, even though that movement was of citizens upon common soil and for the spread of the area of freedom. But it is surprising that that old Territorial system of government, an unconstitutional blending of monarchy and republicanism, should be continued to this our day, and even its policy be advocated by persons who plume themselves with a reputation for statesmanship, and be tamely submitted to by enlightened and experienced Americans living in the year 1857.

So far as the free, untrammelled consent and expressed wishes of the governed are concerned, should the majority of the citizens in a Territory choose to waive their Constitutional rights and prefer a state of vassalage, a state of being ruled by officers thrust upon them and legislated for by usurped authority, we see no reason why their choice should not be complied with, at least upon the principle of the voluntary consent of the governed. But when said majority, even to the extent of an entire community, are known to most persistently prefer officers of their own election to those foisted upon them by arbitrary power, and purely republican laws of their own enactment to laws carved, dictated and forced upon them by a power to which the Constitution gives no such authority, we are constrained to say that most truly are men prone to oppress their fellows.

How long, think ye, can such oppression be quietly endured? How long, think ye, will any people submit to the dictates, slanders, corruptions and abuse of officers whom they have no voice in electing, and whose efforts are constantly put forth, to their utmost, for the destruction of the people among whom they are sent? Suppose ye that the few dollars parsimoniously doled out by Congress can buy freemen to overlook such glaring inconsistencies?

Richelieu.

From a Lecture by the Rev. W. H. Pleet, of Virginia.

In the year of 1606, a young ecclesiastic might have been seen journeying toward the city of the Pontiffs. Just one-and-twenty, he resolved to begin in a land, the nursery of song and the arts, a career which, to his confident ambition, should rival the august memories of the Caesars. His purpose was anchored on the fixed persuasion of success, and youth and hope, winged with fluttering dreams of inexperience, anticipated the sure guerdon of his ambition. One later articulates into his luminous and vigorous creed this aspiring language of his prophetic will:

"In the lexicon of youth, which Fate reserves
For a bright manhood, there is no such word
As fail."

On he journeyed, resolving the problem of earthly fame. His first achievement in that resolution was a prelacy. His address, discretion and sagacious ambition so excited the admiration and anticipations of Pope Paul V, that at the age of twenty-seven Armand de Plessis De Richelieu, with a vistaed future, alive with beckoning and applauding, was consecrated Bishop of Lucan. For four years he seems content with advancement. We then find him in Paris, that restless, palpitating heart of the civilized world, preaching. Beyond this, and a tract as to the best mode of confuting hereties, we meet with no mention of priestly effort. Whether the sacred duties of his jurisdiction and office engaged his sovereign energies, history is silent. We must infer, however, that he was an Ambassador of Christ but in name, and that his episcopal administration was indeed but a lording it over God's heritage; for although it was twenty-three years before he was Prime Minister of France, yet it is of Richelieu the Cardinal, of Richelieu the Statesman—not Richelieu the Christian Minister and Bishop—the annals of the age speak.

The expired century was one of remarkable improvement in all that elevated humanity and society. In the ideal Arts, it boasted of Raphael and Angelo, of Titian and Rubens; in Astronomy, of the Telescope by Galileo, of Kepler and Tycho Brahe; it was remarkable for the order of Jesuits by Loyola; for the initiation of the East India Company; for the true system of the Universe by Copernicus; in Poetry, for Tasso in Italy, Camoens in Portugal, for Spenser, Beaumont, Fletcher, Johnson and Shakspeare, in England; for the inductive logic by Bacon; for the complete circumnavigation of the globe by Magellan; for the translation of the Bible into the English tongue; for Luther and Melancthon, Erasmus and Calvin, in theology, and for the Cardinals—Kings, Ximines, Wolsey and Richelie. Thus Richelieu stood introduced to the world and its great remoulding events. The mind of the world had been agitated by the mighty and expansive and expanding inspiration of the Reformation, and the light had deepened and forever emancipated by the gift of the written word of the Deity to the unclassic mind of the husbandman and the artisan.

The world was astir all around him. Distant continents, long veiled and guarded by intervening oceans, had been discovered and colonized. The human mind was righting itself in every department of thought and enriching itself in every department of knowledge. The soul, aspiring with its irrepressible conceptions of truth, and inspired with guesses of its power and rights, with ear intent to the behests of conscience, sometimes fanatical and sometimes sanctified, elevated the world above a mere nursery, in which feeble characters might become renowned. It was an era of giant events and giant characters, and both the reign and the character of Armand de Richelieu filled the measure by which Fame took the stature of human grandeur. Gifted or cursed by nature with remarkable abilities, public troubles nursed them into majestic vigor, and established him the regenerator of France.

Richelieu placed his country upon the highest pinnacle of civilization—not the highest for any and every nation, but the highest for France. He found her civilization and national importance retarded, if not extinguished, by three hostile elements; 1. The spirit of revolution for religious opinion. 2. The habit and asserted right of resistance by the nobility. 3. The confidence of successful aggression from abroad. It is apparent that no nation could expand from within, or be secure from without, until it became master of these destructives. A nation's prosperity depends upon both peace at home and respect abroad; and both of these Richelin achieved for France.

He was practically a truer friend and benefactor of French Protestanism than her noble chieftains or her political preachers. In Richelieu's view and policy, the glory of the Crown and the grandeur and welfare of France were identical. To achieve these, however, he must crush all opposing forces. One of these opposing forces was the spirit, and as we have seen the fact of revolution for religious opinion.

It is the custom of hasty writers to condemn Richelieu for extinguishing the light of religious liberty in France, by subjugating the Hugenots. But he would have opposed a military religion, whether it had been Catholic or Mohammedan, Jewish or Infidel. But if, as some contend, the Hugenots struggled for rights under violated treaties, then they were in the field upon political, and not religious questions. The truth was, they had become a power in the State, hostile to the State by the very principles of the society.

He was eminently a practical man, and scorned the Genevian theory in its political element and movement, and to French Protestants he was a wiser friend than Calvin.

Richelieu was no bigot; he was too much wanting in the religious element. Unlike Cardinal Ximines, who was everywhere—in the cloister, at the commercial board, at the head of the Inquisition, in the street, everywhere a monk—Richelieu was heart and soul and mind a cold, sagacious politician. His ambition and success were not in and for the Church, but the State. The passion of religious intolerance would have been too fierce a disturbing cause to the process of his lofty political conceptions. Whether Catholicism or Protestantism, Islamism or Infidelity, it mattered not to him, Cardinal of the Roman Hierarchy though he was, so long as there was sympathetic contribution and identity with his grand idea of the glory of France; and he only made war upon Protestantism because he found it an ill-advised revolution. He crushed out the politics of Protestantism as he would, and did, without remorse, the opinion of the world, from which he appealed to the ultimate history of France, and braved every obstacle that resisted his projected scheme of her redemption.

Richelieu dropped the plummet of his well balanced and indefatigable mind into the profoundest depths of the science of government. He resolved that France should not become a despotism capricious and cruel, but a political unit. France should be a portrait of himself. The opportunity for the achievement of this sublime conception was a slave to him. As Prime Minister, in fact, if not at first in name, he could turn from the mean expediments and intrigues of a mere chambering ambition, and by the expansiveness of his lofty genius and the inflexibility of his will, gather into himself the entire interests, power and destiny of France. She became his idol, her glory his monopolizing passion and policy; which a weaker courtier sank into expediency, became the steady purpose of a severe patriotism. The doom of celibacy, exempting him from all hereditary and domestic influences, gave to his love for France a preterhuman energy.

She became to him the Bride of History—her he wed not in his heart of kindness, but in his intellect, his imagination, his will and ambition; with her he would be crowned in the mighty cathedrals of nations, and with her niched in the Pantheon of Fame. It may have been a fanaticism—an insane lust, nursed in unmitigated, unprejudiced selfishness—but all who have philosophized upon his prejudiced character discover in it an explanation and excuse for his ideal mistress he slew and banished and reigned in remorseless despotism. When he came into power each noble and plebeian leach creed—Catholic and Protestant—held the knife of treason playing capriciously to her throat. The military religion he conquered; he made the plebeian her friend by the thrift of his tact; the noble he hunted down along the winding complicity of countless conspiracies.

Position in Sleeping.

It is better to go to sleep on the right side, for then the stomach is very much in the position of a bottle turned upside down, and the contents are aided in passing out by gravitation. If one goss to sleep on the left side, the operation of emptying the stomach of its contents is more like drawing water from a well. After going to sleep, let the body take its own position. If you sleep on your back, especially soon after a hearty meal, the weight of the digestive organs, and that of the food, resting on the great vein of the body, near the back bone, compresses it, and arrests the flow of the blood more or less. If the arrest is partial the sleep is disturbed, and there are unpleasant dreams. If the meal has been recent or hearty, the arrest is more decided, and the various sensations, such as falling over a precipice, or the pursuit of a wild beast, or other impending danger, and the desperate effort to get rid of it, arouse us; and sends on the stagnating blood, and we wake in a fright, or trembling, or perspiration, or feeling of exhaustion, according to the degree of stagnation, and the length and strength of the effort made to escape the danger. But when we are not able to escape the danger when we do fall over the precipice, when the tumbling building crushes us, what then? "That it deat!" That is the death of those of whom it is said, when found lifeless in their bed in the morning: "That they were as well as they ever were the day before:" and often it is added, "and ate heartier than common!" This last as a frequent cause of death to those who have gone to bed to wake no more, we give merely as a private opinion. The possibility of its truth is enough to deter any rational man from a late and hearty meal. This we do know with certainty that waking up in the night with painful diarrhœa, or cholera, or bilious cholic, ending in death in a very short time, is properly traceable to a late large meal. The truly wise take the safer side. For persons who eat three times a day, it is amply sufficent to make the last meal of cold bread and butter and a cup of some warm drink. No one can starve on it, while a perseverance in the habit soon begets a vigorous appetite for breakfast, so promising of comfort.

[The above, no doubt, will be of some service to folks who have been troubled without knowing the cause. The doctor says: "after going to sleep, let the body take its own position"—of course everybody will?—ED.]

Names of the Days of the Week.

Is it not strange that Christians should have been found in the universal use of names of pagan deities, as the following interesting items of history show:

In the Museum of Berlin, remarks a writer in a Newark cotemporary, in the hall devoted to Northern antiquities, they have the representation of the idols from which the names of the days of the week are derived. From the idol of the Sun comes Sunday. This idol is represented with his face like the sun, holding a burning wheel, both hands on his breast, signifying his course around the world. The idol of the Moon, from which comes Monday, is inhabited in a short coat like a man, but holding the Moon in his hands. Tuisco, from whence cometh Tuesday, was one of the most ancient and popular gods of the Germans, and is represented in his garments of skin, according to their peculiar manner if clothing. The third day of the week, dedicated to his worship—Wooden—from whence Wednesday. His image was prayed to for victory. Thor, from whence Thursday, is seated on a bed with twelve stars overhead, holding a hammer in his right hand. Friga, from whence we have Friday, represented with a drawn sword in his right hand and a bow in his left. He was the giver of peace and plenty. Seater, from whom is Saturday, has the appearance of perfect wretchedness; he is thin, visaged, long haired, with a long beard. He carries a pail of water in his right hand, wherein are fruits and flowers.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1857.

The Reformation.

WE have recently published correspondence from Utah, San Francisco, San Bernardino, St. Louis, Great Britain, and other places, in which the writers have spoken of the work of reformation which is now going on in their midst, and which, as a whole, promises to mark the present as an important era in the history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Such a movement has been looked forward to by many; in fact, no one acquainted with the Kingdom of God—"the net cast into the sea," "the wheat and tares"—could have anticipated less than the present movement—a foreshadowing of the day of separation, a winnowing of the wheat and the scattering of the chaff.

Since the organization of the Church, in 1830, till the arrival of the Saints in Utah, in 1847, the difficulties with which they have had to contend, in breaking up their homes, in forming new settlements, and the persecution they had to endure from their christian neighbors, have, together, generally been a means of ridding the Church of whatever rubbish that might, by one means or another, become associated with it. From such circumstances, the truly honest among the Saints were likewise continually called upon to pass through scenes of difficulty, which, while they tested the depth of their love for truth and their sincerity in the service of God, kept them in the narrow way. Their history, as is well known, has been marked by a series of sacrifices which they well knew, to be acceptable before Him whom they adored, required a constant watchfulness over the natural inclinations and longings of the human heart. They did so and were blessed of the Lord.

The first years of the sojourn of the Saints in the valleys of Utah were marked by prosperity and peace. Labor in the field was richly rewarded by smiling abundance, and in the busy hum of workshop industry was heard the language of contentment and the hope of brighter days. Directly and indirectly circumstances favored Israel; the persecuted had at last found rest to their souls, and the earth's abundance crowned the boards of the abandoned poor. Those who give God glory for anything, witnessed His hand in their blessings, and praised and glorified His name for peace and prosperity. To share in these favors of the heavens and the earth, many in later years bent their steps to Utah from all parts of the world, and in the crowd, as was to be anticipated, not a few who had neither well examined themselves nor calculated nicely the price of the salvation they sought in the family of Abraham. In the absence of persecuting christians to drive away such persons from the Church and to keep awake to daily duty, many of the Saints, who had fought well and stood the heaviest of trials, began too soon to calculate, or acted as if they had so calculated, that their arch enemy's power and influence was crippled, and that they might take rest to their souls. The brightest and liveliest hope of their earlier days—a glorious resurrection with the pure, the virtuous, the noble leaders of the people of the Most High, from Adam to Joseph—had not been abandoned, though for its glories they had not sought so diligently as in former times. But this spell is broken. Israel is alive. The voice of the "Lion of the Lord" reverberates throughout the valleys, and stronger in itself than a thousand mobs, Israel is aroused from slumber, touched to the quick; the scales fall from drowsy eyes, and the warmest impulses of the youthful heart again mark the labors of the Saints, and at the same time lively movements are manifested on the part of the discontented and rebellious.

During the past summer and autumn numerous Elders in Utah were appointed by the Presidency to visit the settlements throughout the Territory, to preach true and undefiled religion—practical Mormonism. President Jedediah M. Grant placed himself at the head of the missionaries, and, with the power of the holy priesthood, they have caused the hearts of the Saints to rejoice and the wicked to tremble. During the last few months we have seen frequently reports in the Deseret News of the success of the Elders in their administrations to the Saints, and the blessings and power of the Lord manifested among His covenant people, which have caused our souls to rejoice and magnify the name of Israel's God. Our private correspondence has been likewise of the most cheering character. While the filthy tongued, lying defamers of Utah have been charging the people of that Territory with every crime their wicked hearts could invent, the Utonians have been quietly attending to their own business, and been striving with all their might to purify themselves before the all-seeing eye of Omnipotence from all the vices and evil habits they had contracted in the christian nations whence they came. The reformation now going on in Utah will give a tone and strength to the Kingdom of God there that will be felt by friend and foe to the uttermost extremity of the earth where the struggle between light and darkness has begun.

As the Elders from foreign missions returned to their homes many of them were appointed to join the home missionaries in this new field of labor. The Spirit of the Lord has been mightily poured out upon the people in their reunions during the week and in their public assemblies on the Sunday. Their good works demonstrate that the present reformation has not been accomplished by the words of men, but by the good Spirit of the Most High, which has awakened the people to comprehend their duties and their privileges as members of His Kingdom, and to perceive also the growing wickedness of the nations—the daring recklessness of men who fear not God.

At the same time that the Presidency in Zion began the reformation there, we felt the importance of straightening up things in the Eastern mission, and counselled all to renew their covenants and live their religion here that they might be the better prepared to enter into good society when they got to Utah. We are considerably pleased with the results, though they are doubtless far short of those accomplished by the reformation in the valleys of the mountains. When we consider the wickedness, duplicity and trickery of the christians with whom our brethren in the States have daily intercourse and relationship, we thank God that the latter are as well disposed to tread in the path of rectitude as they now manifest by their good works. Many old members scattered in different States, and even whole Branches that nobody had heard of for years, have written us, requesting their names to be inscribed in our books, and invite us to send Elders to visit them. Other Branches, that we did know of by name only, have renewed their covenants and begun a new life, and show by their works that they are after salvation.

Now that the emigration for Europe has begun to bring among us brethren from afar, we counsel all the presiding Elders of Branches and Conferences throughout the Eastern Mission, to inscribe no names in their books till the parties desiring relationship with us have renewed their covenants by baptism. That there may be no misunderstanding on this point, we would say there is no limit to this counsel on account of what persons may have been or may have done before they came here. Furthermore, no name should be found in our books but that of those who have followed our counsel and been re-baptized. Let the presiding Elders everywhere see to this business. At our next conference we shall have a representation of living members of the Church in the Eastern States, and scattered unknown folks can have their names in the new books when they have complied with our instructions, and not before. The scattered Saints who have not been re-baptized, and are not acquainted with Elders who can come and administer to them, let them send on to the Presidents of their respective Conferences, and invite them to attend to this, and get instructions upon their duties to the Kingdom of God, and do them. Let the Elders who administer be men who fear God and are filled with His Holy Spirit—men who will teach by their example as well as by their tongue.

We shall labor for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God and the salvation of all who seek its interest, but we shall not consent to spend our time, nor seek others to spend theirs, on any but those who mean to do right and be honorable in all their ways. The righteousness of the Gentiles will not do in the Kingdom of Israel, and those who cannot abstain from meanness and things unbecoming the saints of the Most High, must quit our company and go among christians—they cannot have place among us.

Elder Amos M. Musser.

WE had the pleasure of this gentleman's visit on Wednesday. He was full of business and anxious to get en route again for Utah. He left early on Thursday morning for Albany, where he would take the Express train for Iowa City, to rejoin the company of the George Washington. Bro. Musser left Utah three years ago on mission to the East Indies, and returned by England, where he has sojourned some months. He promises us items by the way: we shall look for them as often as he can find it convenient.

Governorship of Utah.

CONFINING our notice of this interesting question to the on dit of the press, it would appear that common sense and rational judgment are gradually taking the place of the fury and excitement that cried "blood" "fire and sword" for the last few weeks. Some of the fire-eaters who blew loudest the trump of war evidently begin to question if they have not been imposed upon by Drummond and the batch of scribblers who entered the list against Utah to gratify their private pique against persons. The influence of public opinion upon the administrators of government is great, we know it, and it ought to be so; but to be worthy of the name, the responsible head should govern the public in the narrow way of right and not be governed by the irresponsible rabble who seek nothing but the gratification of vindictive feelings for imaginary wrongs. We have had considerable confidence that the present administrators of the Republic would stand in their proper place and recent correspondence from the seat of government appears to justify our conclusions. Last Saturday's correspondence from Washington says:

"The design of the administration is to pursue a peaceful policy towards Utah, in order that the laws may be executed and the rights of every inhabitant in the territory protected without recourse to arms."

For the honor of the nation we are glad to see that the unsupported charges—wholesale falsehoods—of such a poor apology for a man as the "horse-dealer" judge, and the five or six profligate gamblers, who have stuck stakes in Great Salt Lake City for a few months, have little or no influence with President Buchanan and his advisers to lead them from the path of rectitude. The respectable portion of the press congratulate themselves that they have not been led into the general furore against Utah. The others will do well to repent of their sins. The nation may want a helping hand from Utah some day.

Elder Matthew McCune.

AFTER a sojourn of a month with us, Elder McCune left, with his family and about twenty persons, for Iowa City on Thursday afternoon, en route for Utah. During his stay in this city we have had frequent opportunities of enjoying his society, and been much pleased in listening, both in public and in private, to his recitals of the condition of men and things in India. Bro. McCune had been in the service of the Honorable East India Company in Bengal and Burmah for upwards of twenty-one years—the first eight years in the Bengal artillery service; the remainder in the Ordnance Commissariat Department, in which he held the position of Sub-Conductor of Ordnance. During the late Burmese war he had the sole and entire charge of the Ordnance Park connected with the Martaban column of the army under Gen. Steel, and was in the field during the active operations of the army. His duties then requiring him to instruct officers and men in the proper use of the ordnance, and congreve rockets. Bro. McCune is a man well versed in the science of gunnery, and in an hour of need would be valuable to whomsoever required his services. As an honorable, upright, intelligent gentlemen and faithful elder in Israel, he will clear his way in good society wherever he may be. We wish him and family prosperity and a good voyage to them and their fellow travellers.

The New York Herald.

LAST week we noticed that the Herald had not published the letter of Mr. Feramorz Little, contradicting the slanders of Drummond and others about Utah. In justice to our neighbor we ought to say that on Saturday last he published fourteen and a half lines as a summary of Mr. Little's letter, and terminated with;

"We leave the Judge [Drummond] to dispose of these disclaimers by such evidence as he may have in his possession. We have done our part by giving both sides of the story."

The Herald seems to have a very easy conscience, and must think his readers great noodles. After publishing, week after week, the most outrageous attacks upon Utah, he publishes fourteen and a half lines from a friend to Utah, and says he had given "both sides of the story!"

President John Taylor.

PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR returned from Boston last Friday morning, left the same evening, accompanied by Judge Appleby and friends for Philadelphia. He returned on important business on Saturday evening, and left again for the Quaker City on Sunday evening. After arranging for the departure of some of the Saints from Delaware and Pennsylvania for Utah, he returned here late on Wednesday evening.

To Friends and Patrons.

ALL subscriptions and donations from individuals and branches of the Church for the support of THE MORMON should be sent on to this office when made, and not be left in the Treasurer's hands for week after week. We hope that all on whom devolves the responsibility of seeing to this business will discharge their duties punctually.

Letters.

ELI SMITH; Thomas Musgrave, (2); Danl. Jacobs, 26 cts.; Ann Stewart, 26 cts.; John Pettibone, 2 cts.; James W. Stevens; Mrs. C. Johnson; J. W. Brant. Letters will be forwarded by enclosing a stamped envelope and postage stamp.

The George Washington.

ABOUT fifty persons who came by this ship to Boston arrived here on Friday morning last. Between twenty and thirty remain here for the present, the remainder have gone to their friends and relatives in other States. We anticipated receiving from or through the president of the company a detailed account of the voyage for the satisfaction of the friends of the emigrants in the old country, but it has not yet reached us. Elder Francis Kerby, on our invitation, has sent us the following account of the voyage across the big waters.

NEW YORK, April 27, 1857.

EDITOR MORMON. Dear Sir: The George Washington left the shores of Old England on the 28th of March, with above 800 Latter Day Saints, on their way to the valleys of the mountains.

As she glided down the river, the Saints sang the songs of Zion, and rejoiced that they were going to a land of freedom and liberty. The Spirit of God illuminated every countenance and every one felt to live their religion, that the prophesies spoken by Presidents Pratt and Benson of a speedy passage might be literally fulfilled. Elder James, P. Park was appointed to preside with Jesse P. Martin and C. R. Dana for his counsellors. The weather was rather rough in the Irish Channel which made us feel queer, cleared our stomachs, and hindered us from troubling our cooks for a couple of days. It was quite amusing to those who were better sailors than most of us to see the kettles, and pans racing each other up and down the decks with the universal chorus of the sea sick folks. However we soon recovered sufficiently to attend our meetings regularly, and as a whole it was more like a pleasure trip than crossing the great Atlantic. We had preaching and prayer meetings every day. I cannot speak too highly of brother Park and his associates for they were indefatigable in their endeavors to help the people, both by precept and example. We had one birth, and only three deaths, one of the latter was brother Shuttleworth, about 60 years of age, of asthma, and another a woman, not in the church, who caught cold after her confinement. Such little mortality considering the great number of people is to me a testimony that God has His eye on this people who serve Him and keep His commandments. Captain Cumings and the Doctor behaved like gentlemen towards us as did also the officers and crew. We anchored in Boston Bay on Monday, 20th April, having accomplished our journey in the short space of 23 days. Praying God to bless and prosper you in all your undertakings to defend the principles of truth, I remain your brother in the Gospel,

FRANICS KERBY.

Since the foregoing was in type we received the following correspondence from Elder Amos M. Musser, who was left in Boston to settle up business after the departure of the company for Iowa City:

BOSTON, April 25, 1857.

PREST. JOHN TAYLOR—Esteemed Brother: I take great pleasure in posting you up relative to the particulars of our recent pleasant voyage from Liverpool to this place. After receiving many blessings and promises from Presidents O. Pratt and E. T. Benson, we (numbering 812 souls) bade adieu to "Old England," setting sail on Saturday the 28th ult. for Boston. The first 6 or 7 days we encountered head winds, which drove us south into the Bay of Biscay. The agitation of the waters not only tossed the ship considerably, but created a liberal heaving among the Saints. Out of the entire number of passengers 4 or 5 only (myself one of the number) escaped being sea sick. The card soon turned with the favorable side up; strong and favorable winds came to promote our interests and fulfil the blessings promised by the brethren at Liverpool. All the Saints, with few exceptions got busy like bees from their hives in the spring of the year. Some with needles, muslins, hymn books, bibles, &c. in hand, were seen emerging from between decks to find a few cubic feet of unoccupied space where they could sit to receive the invigorating benefis of a sea breeze, and sing their songs of Zion, with the characteristic Mormon zeal and spirit. From this time, excepting 3 or 4 days, the wind continued favorable up to our arrival, on Monday the 20th inst., in Boston Harbor: making the passage in 23 days. On the 6th inst. the Saints assembled on the upper deck to hold a conference, agreeably with the order of the Church on shore. The authorities were all unanimously sustained, and a good and spirited feeling prevailed throughout.

We had four deaths and one birth since we left Liverpool. Dr. Greely, our ship surgeon, told me that the deaths would have occurred had the parties been ashore. The names of the deceased are as follows: Bro. John Shuttleworth, aged 60; Mrs. Mary Ann Jenkins, aged 25; Sarah A. Coggle, 11 months; and Sister Charlotte Stead, aged 67. I will forward particulars to the Star office. It was the deceased Mrs. Jenkins who gave birth to a daughter.

Never before have I witnessed the goodness of our heavenly Parent more strikingly manifested towards His people, than it was on our passage from Liverpool. We were blessed and prospered temporally and spiritually. The gifts of the Spirit were manifest, the powers of the devil were rebuked, and unclean spirits were ejected from parties possessing them.

We shall never forget the kindness of Capt. Cumings and Dr. Greely, their goodness has become proverbial with the Saints. As a brief expression of our esteem, I submitted the following for their acceptance.

To CAPTAIN J. W. CUMINGS,
Commander of the Ship "George Washington."

SIR—Before we quit Boston for the West, we beg leave to express through this medium our feelings in relation to the kindness and courtesy yourself, Dr. Greely, and the officers manifested towards us and those under our watch and care during our recent speedy and prosperous voyage from England to this place on your noble vessel; your kindness in consulting the comfort and interests of the indisposed, by frequently administering to their wants from your own private stores; your assiduous exertions to promote the health of all on board; your courtesy and affability on all occasions of address; well characteristic endowments strikingly manifested in your conduct towards and associations with us throughout the whole passage. Long will these noble traits, (which were proverbial with the passengers,) coupled with other associations, be remembered by us. We act freely in acknowledging that the treatment and conduct of yourself and your officers towards us were highly satisfactory and all that we could wish or expect.

In conclusion, we beg you will accept these brief expressions of gratitude, our warmest thanks, and a place in the attic story of our esteem and good wishes. Humbly invoking the benedictions of the Almighty upon you through life, and that you may in the end receive the blessings consonant with your desires, is the prayer of your humble and favored friends and servants,

JAMES P. PARK, President.
JESSE B. MARTIN, First Counsellor.
CHAS. R. DANA, Second Counsellor.
AMOS M. MUSSER, Secretary to the Company of L. D. Saints from Liverpool per "George Washington."

Boston, Mass., 24th April, 1857.

In turn Capt. Cumings very courteously handed me the accompanying expression of his feelings towards us.

To MESSRS. JAMES P. PARK, JESSE B. MARTIN, CHAS. R. DANA, AND AMOS M. MUSSER, in charge of the passengers per Ship "George Washington."

GENTLEMEN—It will afford me very great pleasure if you will permit me to give you an expression of my feelings relative to my passengers under your supervision, just landed from the "George Washington."

For a number of years past I have been engaged in the transit of emigrants from Europe to this country, and I am free to acknowledge that on no previous voyage have my passengers conducted themselves as orderly and peaceably as those in your charge; cleanliness, morality, sobriety, reciprocation of favors and general good behavior (virtues and accomplishments essentially necessary for promoting the health, comfort, and prosperity of emigrants) were pre-eminently conspicuous in their conduct and character. In these examples you merit emulation by all emigrants, by observing which there would be much less mortality, immorality, profanity, and ill-feeling among such large bodies of people contracted in their sphere and movements to which all are subjected on shipboard.

In bidding you adieu, I beg to submit the foregoing as a small token of the esteem and good will I entertain for yourselves and the emigrants with you, for your acceptance.

Hoping you will have a speedy and pleasant transit across the plains as we have had crossing the Atlantic, I remain, gentlemen, yours with much respect,

J. S. CUMINGS,
Commander of Ship "George Washington."

Boston, 27th April, 1857.

I cannot conclude this hurried letter without adverting to the kindness of Mr. J. Q. A. Bean, general agent for the L. S. and M. S. railroad company. He has been truly liberal and obliging, manifesting, as you know, a ready willingness to accede to our terms, and to promote the interests of all concerned. I desire to see all such gentlemen prosper, and would therefore beg to express an ardent wish, that he and his associates in business may continue to merit a liberal patronage, and the esteem of all whose respect is worth possessing. Pressure of business compells me to conclude.

Your brother and humble servant,

AMOS M. MUSSER.

Correspondence of Bishop N. H. Felt.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 6, 1857.

PREST. JOHN TAYLOR—Dear Sir: Learning there was to be an attempt to get up a mail to the States once more, I venture to drop you a line, that peradventure it might reach you some time next summer, or the year following, if nothing unusual should happen to delay it. Your family are all in usual good health; I often meet Joseph, whose cheerful face reminds me forcibly of Nassau street, and sometimes of the Epistle from the "Black Corner." Until the very severe weather we occasionally had the pleasure of a visit from Mrs. Taylor, and the day after Christmas myself and family, Bro. and Sister Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. Hirum Kimball, Mrs. Orson Pratt and Orson Pratt, Jr., spent a very cheerful afternoon at your house, and only required the original of that truly splendid portrait of yours, that peered down upon us, to complete the picture. I should also have mentioned, as one of that company, Bro. Hammer, from Philadelphia, who is now stopping with your family.

There is not much news at this time. The Legislature removed their sittings to this city, from the entire want of convenience at Fillmore—a strong reproof to our ~~even-handed, liberal-hearted~~ parent Government, which lavishes millions upon her fat, sleek pets near home, and grudgingly doles out the refuse of her kitchen to the poor little runt that sits shivering away up mid the eternal snows of the mountains. Let them who will, trust to their wealth; as for us, we will trust in the mighty God of Israel, who has ever delivered us, and whose arm is still around His chosen people. We never yet have depended upon the General Government to sustain us, even in straitened times, and we surely need not to-day, now that we have learned the realities of life by the rudest kind of experience. Roughly thrust forth from the parental roof in early childhood; forced early to dig amid the barren soil of the mountains for the common necessities of life, it need not surprise our well-clad, well-fed kinsmen if it should prove an early puberty to the outcast—that STONE that the builders refused shall surely become the head of the corner.

Individually, as an American citizen, I have no favors to ask of that Government for the establishment of which my fathers fought and bled, since it permitted mobocrats to rudely thrust forth my little ones to die in the mountains. We live—we can live—we shall live—and that, too, without their aid. We were born independent; we will live independent; and our children after us shall live independent. Let the indignation of the God of American freedom—the God of Washington, Jefferson, Patrick Henry, Jos. Smith, Brigham Young, Heber Kimball, Jedediah Grant—the God of Israel of the last days—follow with swift judgment upon those that raise a hand or wag their tongue against the freedom our fathers bought, and which we as a people have so fully, nobly earned. A stern and vigorous determination is now manifest among this people that they will not submit to the filth and pollution of so many of those freebooters that are continually traversing our Territory from the States and from California, and who come here expecting to fatten upon our supposed helplessness and wallow in their corruption. Thank God the time has come and now is that such characters learn their mistake, and will return to inform their boon companions, and the General Government in particular, that we have no more room for such characters than had the old colonies for the minions of George the Third; but enough of such. Let us turn to brighter pictures.

The reformation is proceeding nobly; the people seem almost to rise en masse and shake off their drowsiness to purify themselves, ready to come up to the service of the true and living God; I never knew the spirit so universally manifested in this people to forsake their errors and to do right. Never have their union and good fellowship been so thoroughly tested as during the past season. Though greatly straitened with unfavorable crops, they have extended an open, liberal hand in rescuing our brethren from the mountain snows. God will surely bless this people abundantly for their noble disinterested goodness. "He will have a holy and pure people, whom He will covenant with by sacrifice." Where on earth is there another people that exemplifies this like the Mormons? and where a leader so like a Moses as our beloved Brigham, or an Aaron like our beloved Heber? and I was about to say, a Joshua like our Jedediah; but he fights our battles beyond the vail. We miss him, though he is not dead, but liveth.

> "The Saints, the Saints, his only pride;
> For them he lived, for them he died;
> Their joys were his, their sorrows too:
> He loved the Saints, they loved him too:
> Unchanged in death with a Saviour's love,
> He pleads their cause in the courts above."

The people indeed loved Jedediah, and he led forth in the reformation; a friend to the upright and a terror to the evil doer. General Wells will fill the vacancy left by Bro. Grant.

We have had an extraordinary fall of snow this season; probably more than any one season for many, many years. Business of all kinds is very dull; scarcely any specie to be found in the Territory, and everything tending to promote home manufactures. Temporalities quite dull, but the spirit never was more active since we entered the chambers of the Lord. My family are all in the enjoyment of excellent health, and I believe it is a time of general health throughout the mountains. Your name and that of George is often referred to in affectionate regard by many in these the valleys of the mountians. Bro. G. A. and the Doctor's families are well, and Bro. P. P. Pratt's. They, with yourself, are always remembered. There are many inquiries for T. B. H.; they say, We want him here. T. B., come! come! come! and Judge Dulin, too. Come along next season, Judge, with T. B. H. and lady. God bless you all; I sometimes think I can peep into No. 9 and see you all.

I must close this scrawl, or I shall not be in time to see Judge Elias, and get my letter off. Remember me kindly to the Saints in New York and Williamsburgh, and all inquiring friends.

Your Brother and fellow-laborer in the Kingdom of our God, N. H. FELT.

The Judge and T. B. H. join in gratefully acknowledging the Bishop's kind interest, and hope to see him soon in the midst of Israel.

Correspondence of Prest. Wilford Woodruff.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Feb. 4, 1857.

EDITOR OF THE MORMON,—Dear Sir: We have not received any Eastern mail for the last three months. Mr. Gorrish arrived from the plains on the 19th inst., reports a mail somewhere on the way. We have received the California mail regularly up to this time, by which we occasionally hear something from the lower world.

The January mail for the East was sent out, but only got to the top of the little mountain, before it was stopped by the vast quantity of snow, and one carrier frozen to death, the remainder returned. We are passing through the most severe winter so far as snow is concerned that we have ever experienced in these vallies, the mountains are full; and over eight feet has fallen in this city according to Judge Phelps' report, it has laid for a month between two and three feet deep in our streets, and about three feet on the islands and more north. All the stock have been brought from the island, and some from the north, and were fed in the city, some driven south, and some to Rush Valley, notwithstanding the great amount of snow there has been but few of the stock lost in comparison to the loss last winter. The abundance of snow in the mountains will be of great benefit for irrigation the coming season, the earth needs it as it has been very dry for two years. The wheat which was sown in the dry dust last fall has sprouted under the snow, and grown several inches, we have had a constant thaw for about one week past, which causes the water to gradually soak into the soil. The inhabitants of this city have again commenced labor upon the Cottonwood Canal, to bring that stream to this city, and they expect to finish it by the opening of spring, the inhabitants of Davis county have also commenced on a canal to take out a portion of the Weber river into Davis county for irrigation, mills, &c.

We would like to have some of our Eastern friends forward us a few of the tubers of the Chinese potatoe as advertised by Wm. R. Prince & Co., as we would like to make a trial of it in the Territory, we would also wish our friends who are emigrating to this Territory, to still bear in mindthe propriety of bringing with them or forwarding as they may have opportunity, any choice fruit seeds, cuttings, roots, &c., that will be a benefit to the Territory. We would like to obtain some of Hovey's seedling strawberries or any other good kinds and Lawton's blackberry, Calawba and Isabella grapes, Indigo or madder or cotton seeds, and seed from the Chinese sugar cane or Millet. Hon. J. M. Bernhisel has blessed us from time to time with seeds and grain from the Patent Office, some of which I think will prove quite a benefit to us for which we feel to return him our thanks.

The reformation is progressing throughout this city and Territory with great interest. Prest. Young has given much valuable information and teaching to the Quorums and people, although he has not been able to attend the meeting at the Tabernacle since the burial of Prest. J. M. Grant, on the 4th December ult., until last Sunday the 1st. He with his Counsellors H. C. Kimball and D. H. Wells all appeared in the stand, the Tabernacle was crowded to overflowing as has been the case nearly all winter, and hundreds have to leave who cannot get into the house, the appearance of Prest. Young in the Tabernacle after an absence of two months created a sensation throughout the vast assembly, he addressed the people for about one hour and a half, his discourse was very interesting and edifying to the people, he was clothed with the spirit, and power of God, and the hearts of the people were open to receive his words which were quick and powerful. He was followed by Presidents Kimball and Wells, all of the discourses will appear in the News. President Kimball has spoken to the people for several Sabbaths previous upon several subjects in great plainness, presenting the parable of the vineyard, the vine, &c., to illustrate his ideas: his teachings have been of much benefit to the Saints. The Twelve who were here have gone forward with the missionaries through every ward in the city, teaching the Elders and the people, meeting with the various Quorums of the Church, we have attended a meeting of some kind almost every evening for three months. The people are riseing up en masse and trying to live their religion by confessing and forsaking their sins, and preparing for the waters of baptism, the spirit and power of God is manifest in Zion. The word of the Lord through his servants who are clothed with the power of God and the fire of the Holy Ghost, causes the sinner to humble and fearfulness to surprise the hypocrite, and the people universally feel like putting away sin and iniquity of every kind. All places of worship both in the city and country are crowded to excess. The people are beginning more to feel the importance of living their religion, magnifying their calling and building up the Kingdom of God. Their has been four of the Quorum of the Twelve in this city during the sitting of the Legislature, viz: O. Hyde, L. Snow, F. D. Richards and myself. Elder Hyde has now gone South on a mission through the city, and Bro. Snow is mostly confined to Box Elder. Elder Richards and myself remain in this city at present. We expect Elders A. Lyman and C. C. Rich will be with us this spring. Yours truly,

W. WOODRUFF.

Correspondence of Elder A. P. Welchman.

SMYRNA, Kent Co., Del., April 21, 1857.

PREST. TAYLOR,—Dear Bro.: As the Elders have been requested to write for THE MORMON, and I have now some leisure time, owing to stormy weather, I consider it my duty to try to collect a few of my scattered thoughts, and commit them to paper for the perusal of your readers. However, I must confess I feel my weakness; the more especially as I am a reader of your valuable paper, and consequently am aware that there are many talented minds exercised in contributing to it, far superior to mine. "Israel still expects every man to do his duty," and as an Elder in the Kingdom of God, when called upon to carry out the designs of my superior officers, I feel to respond as did one of the heroes of the American Revolution: when asked if he could capture a certain fortress, he replied, "I can try, sir."

Would it not be well for the Saints of God to cultivate the spirit exhibited by this officer in his reply, rather more than they do? If men in those days, who only looked for transitory possessions as the reward of their labors and privations on the battle field, could manifest such unconquerable disposition, and display such praiseworthy examples of obedience to those above them, what should be the conduct of "Zion's warriors, soldiers of the cross?"

We are fighting for eternal liberty; that liberty which gives us freedom to do right; the only liberty acknowledged of God. We are looking for everlasting inheritances; we strive, in anticipation of obtaining riches where thieves cannot break through nor steal, and where moth cannot corrupt. Then oh! how faithful and energetic we should be. With what readiness we shoud feell to reply, when called upon by God's chosen authorities to perform any duties they may deem necessary for the advancement of the cause, we have of our own free will enlisted in. I would not wish to have it thought that I am writing in a spirit of censure of the Saints. As a body, I feel that they are doing well; and if they were not, it is not my place here to find fault; but none of us are, I opine, perfect as yet; and until we are, it is necessary for us, from time to time to have our pure minds stirred up by way of remembrance.

Obedience—is a principle, eminently essential to qualify a person to become a servant of the Great King: and our obedience to those in authority over us, will be, in a great measure, in proportion to the confidence we have in them and here lies the secret of one of the main springs, of that unity of action which characterizes Mormonism.

In the first place, the Latter Day Saints understand something of the character and attributes of the God they worship; thereby having a solid foundation upon which to build their faith. They know that He stands at the head of the Kingdom of which they have become members; that nothing will transpire in that Kingdom derogatory to their interests, if they are faithful; and as a matter of course, no officers will be appointed or sustained but those who are worthy. The result of this knowledge is confidence; and that confidence commands obedience. In fine, the Saints realize that "All things will work together for good to those who serve the Lord."

Again, every Saint has the privilege, by living faithful to the laws of this Kingdom, of keeping constantly with him a detector, which will enable him to discern at all times between the right and wrong; so that he need not be blown about by every wind of doctrine; neither be as a blind man led by the blind.

One of our brethren, with whom I became acquainted while crossing the plains, told me that he knew me to be a Mormon while yet several hundred yards from me, although he had never spoken to, or even seen, me before to his knowledge; and I have had a similar experience myself in regard to others. How is this? Twas the Holy Spirit, given by the laying on of hands, which testified of a kindred spirit. And it is this same spirit which creates that confidence from whence springs the obedience of the Mormons to President Brigham Young, about whom the world is in such a stew. And before the world can overthrow "Mormonism," they must first destroy the confidence of the Saints in their leaders, by taking from them this detector.

There never has been that confidence in the world, outside of Christ's Kingdom, that is calculated to produce obedience and its accompanying fruits, union, power and prosperity; and what is still worse, it takes no scrutinizing glance to discover that, instead of being on the increase, what little they may have had is rapidly taking its departure. This accounts, in part, for their undying hatred towards the Saints of God: they are as sensible of the daily increase in strength of that already powerful chain of union existing in the kingdom of God, as they are of their own want of stability. And while they fear, at the same time they hate us; being under the influence of that same spirit of jealousy by whose dictation Cain killed his brother Able. But, in my estimation, they are like a parcel of little boys trying to handle great long whips to chastise a younger brother; instead of striking the object of their vengeance, the lashes recoil back upon their own heads, only serving to exasperate them more than ever.

Then, while they are slashing away at us with their lashes of "Mormon delusion," "fanaticism," "immorality," "treason," "murder," &c., let us, as servants of the Great King, and candidates for eternal glory, "mind our own business," namely, be humble, faithful and prayerful, endeavoring to save ourselves and those connected with us, that eventually we may find ourselves established in the Celestial Kingdom. To this end let the motto of the Saints be, when called upon by the authorities of God to accomplish any arduous undertaking, "I can try, sir."

Yours truly, in the new and everlasting covenant, ARTHUR P. WELCHMAN.

Minutes

Of the Saints' Semi-Annual Conference, held in the Church, corner of Fourth Street and Washington Avenue, on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, the 4th, 5th, and 6th days of April, 1857.

Prest. ERASTUS SNOW, presiding.

Present of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles—Erastus Snow and George A. Smith; Missionaries from Utah—C. Christianson, J. W. Coward, T. O. Angel, Isaiah M. Coombs, Christian Hyer, Thurston Simpson, and Wm. Martindale; of the Presidency of the Stake—James H. Hart, C. Christianson—Presiding Bishop, Charles Edwards.

Conference opened by singing the 22d hymn—"Arise O. Glorious Zion." Prayer by Prest. James H. Hart; choir sung, "How Firm a Foundation."

Prest. Snow, in his opening remarks, requested the Priesthood to occupy the seats assigned them at the organization of this Stake, and take an active and lively interest in the entire proceedings of the Conference, and fervently dedicated the same to the Most High, sincerely praying that all our movements and actions may be dictated by the unerring Spirit of the Lord, and then called upon the Travelling Elders to give a report of their labors, success and prospects, inviting them to give expression to their feelings as they may be directed by the Holy Ghost.

Prest. G. A. Smith made a few pointed remarks in his usual interesting manner, on the subject of immediate reformation, vividly showing by apt illustrations the deep obligations we as Saints were under to God; and the necessity of the Priesthood purifying themselves before Him; and not only to teach but also to practice the laws of Heaven.

Elder Martindale gave an account of his successful labors in Texas, and the marvelous manner in which the Lord had blest him in all his administrations.

Elder J. M. Coombs said his mission to Arkansas had been productive of good. Through the blessing of the Almighty, he had been instrumental in resuscitating many of the scattered Saints in that region of country; he had preached in several towns to large audiences creating considerable interest in the principles of the Gospel of Christ.

Elder C. Christianson followed in a few appropriate observations, on the fallacy of the inactive members of the Church, expecting to equally participate with the faithful Saints in all the blessings and privileges of Zion.

Conference adjourned until 7 P.M., singing by the choir, benediction by Elder J. O. Angel.

7 P. M.

After a short address from Prest. Snow touching conference business, Elders Murphey, Woodburn, Corry and Hyer, gave a brief sketch of their experience in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and expressed their fixed determination to remain faithful to their covenants and build up Zion.

Prest. G. A. Smith made a few remarks on the contumelious manner in which the gentile world received the servants of God, encouraging them to persevere in spite of the insults and abuses heaped upon them by the ungodly, for all these things were taken cognizance of by the Almighty, and every man would be rewarded according to his works.

Meeting adjourned until 10 A. M. Sunday morning. Singing. Benediction by Prest. E. Snow.

SUNDAY, APRIL 5th, 10 A. M.

Meeting opened by singing the 1st hymn. Prayer by Elder C. Christianson. Singing by the choir.

Prest. E. Snow delivered an interesting address before the assembly, reviewing the testimony of the Missionaries and their experience in preaching the Gospel to a wicked and perverse generation; showing that as the ungodly and rebellious increased in wickedness and sought to persecute and slay the servants of God and overthrow the institutions of Heaven, the sooner would the glorious purposes of the Almighty be consummated, and referred to the dealings of God with the children of Israel, under their leader Moses, and showing likewise their proneness to depart from God and revile against His servants when brought into adverse circumstances. He concluded his remarks with an earnest exhortation on the necessity of immediate reformation among this people.

Meeting adjourned until 2 P. M. Singing by the choir. Benediction by Elder Martindale.

2 P. M.

Meeting called to order by singing the 4th hymn—"The time is nigh, that happy time." Prayer by Truman O. Angel.

Prest. G. A. Smith addressed the Conference on the doctrine of the gathering, showing in a forcible manner the necessity of rearing a temple to Israel's God, in which the Saints may receive those blessing necessary for an exaltation in the Kingdom of God.

Prest. Snow followed with a desertation on practical Mormonism, portraying the trials and difficulties that will naturally occur in journeying across the plains, forming new settlements, &c. His remarks were more particularly designed for those about to emigrate to Utah and Nebraska.

Prest. Snow then brought before the Conference the Authorities of the Church, and presented Brigham Young as President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, also as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator, who was unanimously sustained; as also Heber C. Kimball as First Counsellor and Daniel H. Wells as Second Counsellor.

Orson Hyde was sustained as President of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and P. P. Pratt, W. Woodruff, John Taylor, G. A. Smith, A. Lyman, E. T. Benson, C. C. Rich, L. Snow, E. Snow, and F. D. Richards were severally sustained as members of said Quorum.

John Smith was sustained as the Patriarch to the whole Church.

George A. Smith was sustained as Church Historian.

Joseph Young was sustained as President of the Presidency of Seventies; and Levi W. Hancock, Henry Herriman, Zera Pulsipher, A. P. Rockwood, Benjamin L. Clapp, and H. S. Eldredge, as his Associates.

Edward Hunter was sustained as Presiding Bishop of the Church.

The Authorities of the St. Louis Stake were next presented.

Erastus Snow was sustained as President of the Churches in the Western States.

James H. Hart was sustained as President of the St. Louis Stake; as also C. Christianson as Counsellor and President of the Danish Saints in the St. Louis Stake.

The following High Priests were severally sustained as members of the High Council: Mark A. Coombs, James Stevenson, James Perks, John Cameron, Thomas Bradshaw, John H. Gordon, Anby Sands, William Gore, Joseph Pollard, Henry J. Hudson, and A. W. Sanders.

Charles Edwards was sustained as Presiding Bishop; as also Thomas Salisbury, William Lowe, William Turner, Andrew Sproule, Robert Humphries, John Allen, Charles Brindley, and Hans Christopher as Bishops of the several wards comprising the St. Louis Stake.

Charles D. Shill was appointed and sustained as President of the Elders' Quorum, in place of Robert Windley, cut off from the Church for adultery.

Joseph Savage was sustained as President of the Priests' Quorum, as also his Counsellors James White and Elias Crane.

Thomas Kempin was sustained as President of the Teachers' Quorum, as also his Counsellor.

Resolved, That Robert Watson be dropped from the Deacons' Quorum, and that the Quorum for the time being come under the immediate supervision of the Presidency of the lesser Priesthood.

Prest. Snow observed many vacancies will occur in the organization of this Stake in consequence of the emigration to Utah and Nebraska; but would defer making any appointmnets until his successor from the Valley should arrive, when, in all probability, a Special Conference would convene about the first of June, and the unfinished business of this Conference be completed.

The names of about one hundred brethren, who had previously been selected, were read from the stand and appointed missions to colonize new settlements on the emigration route in Nebraska Territory.

Resolved, That William Martindale take the Presidency of the Nebraska missionaries, and labor under the general direction of Prest. G. A. Smith until released by Prest. Snow.

Resolved, That Francois Garnier be ordained an Elder, and preach the Gospel to the German population.

Choir sung "I'll praise my Maker while I've breath." Benediction by Elder Christianson. Adjourned until 7 P. M.

7 P. M.

The choir sung the 40th hymn—"Who are these arrayed in white?" Prayer by Prest. James H. Hart. Singing. After which, Elder Truman O. Angel addressed the congregation on the various effects the preaching of the Gospel produced upon the children of men, and gave a synopsis of his travels in Europe.

Elder Martindale next addressed the meeting from the following text: "As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." His explication of the text was clear, forcible, and instructive.

The choir sung the 179th hymn—"Let Zion in her beauty rise." Prayer by J. W. Coward.

MONDAY, April 6th, half-past 10 A. M.

Conference opened by singing the 130th hymn—"O my Father, Thou that dwellest." Prayer by Prest. E. Snow. The 260th hymn was sung—"The solid rocks were rent in twain."

Prest. Snow introduced the subject of new settlements, and gave some excellent counsel and instruction to those who had been appointed to go to Nebraska, relative to their duties, outfits, teams, agricultural implements, and other matters of importance connected with their mission, and specially instructed Elder Martindale to act in unison with Bishop Cunningham.

Resolved, That Henry J. Hudson officiate as Clerk and Historian to the Nebraska mission, and keep a true and faithful record of all the movements, incidents, and proceedings of the above mission.

Elder Martindale gave some useful instruction with regard to farming implements, explaining the kind and quality best adapted for the new country.

Resolved, That William Page labor in Cannellton, Indiana, and its vicinity, in connection with Bro. Woodburn.

Resolved, That Elder John Thomas, native of Canada, and the woman he is now cohabiting with, be cut off from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for immoral conduct.

Resolved, That Elder Samuel H. B. Smith take a mission to England.

Resolved, That Hyrum H. Blackwell take a mission to Tennessee and Georgia, in company with E. M. Murphy, and gather up the scattered Saints in that region of country.

Elders Coward and T. O. Angel were appointed to visit the Saints in Duquoin and vicinity to teach them the laws and institutions of Zion, and infuse into them the spirit of the Gospel of Christ.

Conference then adjourned until the first Sunday in October, commencing at half-past 10 A. M.

Benediction by Prest. G. A. Smith.

FOR THE MORMON.

Philosophical Certainty of a Future State.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

ALTHOUGH revelation gives the best evidence of a future state, it is worthy of the greatest consideration, especially to the skeptic, to reflect upon, and investigate those proofs which are elicited from reason and science. And as Mormonism is so well based on the rock of eternal truth, that it can bear a fair disquisition, whether it be religiously, philosophically or politically, it will, perhaps, be not uninteresting to the reader to see one of its prominent doctrines, viz.: the belief in a future state, set forth in a lucid and correct manner, so that the skeptic, i. e., those who doubt the immortality of the soul, the divine authenticity of the Scripture, and hence discard revelation and a future state—may become sufficiently convinced relative to the truth of a principle which has the most important bearings upon the moral improvement of the human mind.

Modern philosophers have (denying the immortality of the soul) endeavored to prove that at the close of our mortal career the consciousness of our existence ceases; that, at the dissolution of the body, its constituents are dissolved into the primary elements, and that consequently death is nothing more nor less than an entire annihilation of our physical and mental nature and existence. The foregoing is an erroneous idea, as the cessation of the phenomenal functions of the body does not involve a spiritual or mental non-entity—that is to say, it does not follow that the death of the physical nature includes that of the spirit. Although philosophers have endeavored to advocate the principle of annihilation, they have failed, because in a strictly logical sense a state of non-entity, non-existence or entire destruction in relation to any thing phenomenal is an absurdity. The state of an independent self-existence of a certain thing may cease, but still it will exist only in new forms, in a new shape and condition, being amalgamated with other substances and subject to different laws. For instance, grind a piece of brick to the atoms of powder, these atoms that once formed a brick, may lose their self-existence by being connected and amalgamated with atoms and particles of other substances, but still they exist and will exist forever and ever—only in new forms and conditions.

Concerning the real nature of the spirit, psychologists know nothing; they cannot grasp it, because it is a principle which no wisdom short of divine revelation can sufficiently unravel or explain. Many call the spirit immaterial or cogitative—but that is quite an erroneous idea, because everything that exists, must necessarily have a body, no matter how refined it is, and whether it is perceptible to our gross senses or not; and as the existence of the spirit is visible through its operations upon the body, it must be something tangible. The existence of anything involves the idea of materialism, because an existence in abstracto is as little an existence as that of a mathematical point, which is only imaginary or cogitative—hence an existence without a body is a contradiction in itself.

The existence of the spirit which is eternal, naturally includes the existence of a supreme power or powers, no matter how much it may be against the narrow-mindedness of self-conceited skeptics, who endeavor to ascribe all the operations of a phenomenal and mental world to the law of necessity, as they term it, being forgetful entirely of the absurdity of speaking of the existence of certain general laws, without training them to any other source but that of mere chance; forgetful entirely of the truth, that where there is a law, there must be a law giver. The person of that divine intelligence may not be visible everywhere, being confined to a certain place; but its presence is felt throughout the universe—it is felt in the benign influence of the radiant sun, in the reverberating echoes of a thunder-storm, in the ghastly flashes of lightning, in the dew that empearls the flowery carpet of the fields, etc.

The transactions of this sublunary existence being represented as typical of those in Heaven—I refer as an illustration of the foregoing to the President of the United States, who, although not seen himself everywhere, still manifests his existence, power and influence by the laws and regulations he issues, and the arrangements he makes in the different departments of his government; so, likewise, in relation to the Deity, only the latter does it on the most magnificent scale.

God has made all His creations subject to laws which involve an endless mental and physical progression or improvement—hence we cannot suppose that our existence is confined to the limits of this world; a few fleeting years of frail mortality would not accomplish the grand objects of His mighty will, which eternally tend to ennoble and happify everything that exists.

The immortality of the soul is intimately connected with the certainty of a future state; the denial of the former involves naturally the non-entity of the latter—hence it is necessary that every one who is interested in the welfare of his spirit should soberly and calmly reflect upon the purposes which an All-wise Providence has concerning its creations in this world and in that to come.

On examining the pages of history we find that the ancient nations as the Assyrians, Persians, Phenicians, Druids—that the most celebrated philosophers of the Romans and Greeks believed and taught the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. It is true, that the ideas advanced relative to a future state were not always correct in the detail, but this was owing to their limited understanding of Nature's secret workings, to the entire ignorance of correct religious principles; still the quintessence of their vague and confused notions contained the idea of an after-existence, of a futurity behind this vale of tears. The magicians or magi, who flourished in Persia, Assyria, Media and Babylonia, believed in eternal rewards and punishments. Socrates, Plato, Anaximandros and other eminent literary lumina of the classical ancients taught and advocated the immortality of the soul. Homer relates that Ulysses went into the gloomy Hades or hell; that Minos, in the empire of the shades, is judging the multitude of departed spirits assembled around his tribunal; that many are hurled in the terrible Tartarus, from which they can never depart; that the righteous and just are privileged to roam in the Hisperian gardens and in the Elysian fields, where they are free from the shackles and dangers of mortality, in the full enjoyment of unalloyed, everlasting bliss; that in reality the fate is sealed to the good and bad according to their deeds performed in the flesh.

The sacred writings of the Hindu speak of different degrees or states of happiness after death, of which the highest state is called Mooktee which consists in a union with the Deity, or a dissolution into the infinite Spirit. The place where the virtuous are said to enjoy their rewards is the paradise or heaven of the gods on mount Meru or Summeru. There the celestial beings are living in splendid palaces, surrounded with oriental luxury, and innumerable musicians and courtesans. The wicked are said to go to the court of Yama, the road leading to his tribunal is full of stones, mud and sand, burning hot. On their arrival they are tortured by his messengers, and are then dragged into different hells, where they have to suffer their merited punishment.

The Parsees according to the Zend Avesta, their sacred books which are said to be written by Zoroaster, the founder of their religious creed, neither burn nor bury their dead, but leave them open in their graves, believing that the dead will be resurrected and visited by heavenly messengers, who will conduct them to their places of abode, according to their bad or good actions done in the flesh.

I could follow up the religious ideas of a great many other nations and tribes, but suffice it to say, that of the one thousand millions of human beings living on this globe, from the most enlightened nation down to the wildest and most ignorant, all have more or less a vague idea of the immortality of the soul, of the existence of a god or gods, of a future state connected with rewards, blessings and punishments. It is strange and very significant, that so many nations, however diversified their manner of living, their moral, intellectual and physical condition; however absurd, imperfect and uncertain their ideas may be concerning the supreme Ruler of the Universe, and His purposes in relation to His numberless creations, should live in anticipation of a future state; they all feel, however depraved they otherwise may be, that they stand on the threshhold of eternity, and that at every moment they may be summoned from this stage of action to balance their accounts with the recording angel in Heaven.

How shall we account for this universal belief in a future life? Is it reasonable and consistent to attribute it to mere chance, to the mere law of necessity of the would-be wise skeptics? Or shall we lay aside our pique of self-conceitedness and human lore, and follow the dictates of enlightened reason? If so, we may say, that this general anticipation of a future existence is either owing to traditions handed down from generation to generation by the first beings who inhabited this little world; or we may say, that it is a kind of instinct or intuitive knowledge given to us by the invisible agency of Nature, and followed up by reason and common sense.

No matter to what cause or reason we have to attribute this strange phenomenon, it is of great importance in sustaining the infallible truth of a future life. If we admit that tradition is of some moment in balancing the validity of futurity, we have to conclude, that it is a principle which was conceived in the mind of the first mortals of this globe, when they had just left the society of celestial beings; when they had been drinking out of the well of pure and unalloyed happiness and truth; when not yet the degradations and abominations of mortality had stifled the prophetic voice of the inner man, and polluted their minds; when their souls were still ready to wing their flight in the regions of the highest intelligence, and to listen to the secret whisperings of Nature. If instinct or intuitive knowledge is of some importance in ascertaining the cause of this wonderful belief, it must, as a natural gift emanate from the great primary cause of Godliness, from which every noble and good gift is derived; we must then infer, that it was given unto us as a treasure of matchless value, as a precious seed which should germinate and sprout in us, and bring forth the fruits of Divine knowledge and wisdom.

The Mormon Emigrants

THE Courier has the following relative to the band of Mormon emigrants who arrived at this port last week in the ship George Washington:

There were on board 808 passengers, divided internationally as follows, viz: English, 720; Scotch, 43; Welch 22; German, 13; Irish, 6; French, 4. The English were from all parts of England, more, however, coming from Nottinghamshire than any other part. Among the passengers were 40 Elders, who had been preaching the doctrines of the sect throughout the Old World. One of these Elders, named Musser, of Philadelphia, was on his return from a mission to the East Indies. The rest of the passengers were collected by the Elders' representations of duty and the promised land of Utah, and were of all ages and both sexes. Four of the women were over 70 years of age, and there were 24 infants under one year old.

The proportion of married men and women and families was somewhat larger than is usual among emigrants. The married men had only one wife each.

Many of the families were possessed of considerable property. The captain estimated the amount of British gold upon the passengers at £20,000, and said that he knew of more than one person who had £1000 for his own use and that of his family.

Several had left relatives and friends behind them. One woman left her husband that she might go to the land of the Saints.

As soon as the emigrants had left Liverpool, they formed themselves into eight divisions, with about one hundred in each division, and chose a Bishop and an Elder to preside over each company. They had morning and evening service—prayer and singing—and in the evening, generally, a sermon. On Sunday, a sermom was preached to each section.

In their personal habits, they were very cleanly. Only four of them used tobacco, very few drank tea, although nearly all of them ate animal food. During the whole passage, the captain said no theft occurred, and he never heard angry words between them.

It is stated that a number of the Mormons have not the means to reach Utah, and are stopping in this city.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

ENGLAND.—The accouchment of the Queen is daily expected. The English Cabinet is reported to be very favorably disposed to recognize Walker's government in Nicaragua, as it seems to consider the General a sufficient guarantee to see order and peace established in Central America, so that commerce, civilization and freedom could flourish. The leading minds of the country seem to sympathise with the poor filibusters, whom they consider the true men of progress, and cannot see why any part of Uncle Sam's people should be reluctant in assisting them.

The London Times says, concerning the Irish county elections, that in Londondery, one of the most Protestant and conservative constituencies on the Emerald Isle, an unexpected ministerial victory has been gained. Sir Henry Bruce, the high Orange candidate, has been rejected by a considerable majority, and Mr. S. Greer, the Presbyterian liberal and champion of the tenant-right order, has been elected. According to the London Post about 10,000 Norwegians will emigrate during the coming summer season from Norway to Quebeck, some of whom will settle in Canada, but the larger portion will proceed to the north-western States of America.

FRANCE.—The coronation of the emperor is expected to come off on the 6th May. General Todtleben, the gallant defender of Sebastopol, appears to be the Lion of the day in the military circles of the capital, as a great many officers of all ranks call at his residence to pay their respects to him. Great preparations are being made to make the official reception of the Grand Duke Constantine come off with sufficient eclat. The letters of Count de Chambord addressed to the widow of M. de Salvandy, have caused the greatest disunion between the two branches of the house of Bourbon, so that some of the members of the family have been deliberating with the Dutchess of Orleans and the Count of Paris, in relation to the measures to be taken in case of certain important events. The steam corvette Laplace is to leave Toulon shortly for the Chinese seas, to reinforce the French squdron there.

MEXICO.—A revolutionary movement headed by the Clergy and some of Santa Anna's emissaries has been discovered at the Capitol. The pronunciamento was to have taken place on the evening of the 1st of April. Several arrests have taken place, among which was that of General Franconis and Aguilar; the latter formerly one of Santa Anna's Cabinet ministers. The excitement about the threatened Spanish invasion continued.

CENTRAL AMERICA, BALIZO, HONDURAS.—Gen. Salvalio's army is reported to have been routed, himself wounded, and returning with a few men to Guatamala. Great outrages are being committed against the Americans, of whom six are said to have been shot. Walker's position is, according to private advices, impregnable at Rivas, so that he is likely to hold his present position for months. The Costa Ricans have taken Punta Arenas, the steamer Rescue with a large amount of amunition and six field pieces. One hundred of Col. Locbridge's men have been taken to Aspinwall by English vessels.

W. C. AFRICA.—The last advices from Cape Palmas speak of an attempted insurrection, and of difficulties with the natives, which were finally settled.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are he kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fou[r] is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Croyaient-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres e la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

My Bankrupt Bill.

Written for, and read before the "Literary and Musical Assembly," Great Salt Lake City, Aug., 1856.

BY MISS E. R SNOW.

Some "self-styled" critics have pronounced it weak
Of one's own self to freely write or speak;
I court no critic's censure: yet I will
Write of myself and my late bankrupt bill:
That I'd no money, was no fault or crime,
But I contracted debts—without a dime;
Which I acknowledge frankly should not be,
And I'll henceforth avoid insolvency.

In this as well as ev'ry other land
Some entertainments call for cash in hand;
If empty handed I perchance to be,
The law of circumstance demands of me
To unreluctantly the card resign
To one whose funds are less cashier'd than mine.
And by the bye, to all I fain would say,
Create no bills when you've no means to pay;
To live within our income thus, will spare
Us many a fest'ring thought and servile care.
To our young friends I'll give a key whereby
All future wants and wishes to supply—
Control yourselves, your passions all restrain,
Learn to want nothing which you can't obtain,
Then ask no odds of circumstances—be Faithful in duties and in feelings free;
Thus you'll create your heav'ns where'er you dwell:
Want to—and can't, you know, is Mormon hell.

'Neath the perverted sceptre Mammon wields,
Virtue and truth to gold's base influence yield:
Men are respected if in gold they're wealthy
Whether they gained it honestly or stealthy.
Not so in Zion—works and Godly fear
Prepondcrate o'er filthy lucre here;
Unyielding virtue—firm integrity—
Love for the Priesthood—careful industry—
In the true mint of heav'n will pass for more
Than all on earth that's coined from glitt'ring ore.

The Saints may sometimes suffer want, 'tis sure,
But yet a real Saint is never poor—
One in whose soul the holy fire of God,
The light of Truth is fully shed abroad:
What tho' he cannot claim one foot of land,
Nor yet one dime of currency command?—
Altho' no gold and silver, he has got
A costly pearl the purse-proud world has not.
That heavenly foretaste of a glorious rest,
The peace of God abiding in the breast,
With power the gift of endless lives to gain—
Henceforth our own identity retain—
Is wealth, and wealth which holds a promise rife
With ev'ry comfort that pertains to life.
That very gold the Gentiles madly crave
Will yet our streets, the streets of Zion pave.

Among the Saints, is gold and silver wealth?
We might as well call food and clothing health;
Brain, bone and sinew here are prov'd to be
Both capital and lawful currency.
In Babylon, where money is the test,
Who has the most is honor'd as the best;
Or rather, he who vainly seems to have,
And thus he's honor'd most who's most a knave:
How it is elsewhere, matters not: with us—
Worth is not reckoned by the weight of purse.
Show me a Saint that's poor, and once for all
I'll show you one that is no Saint at all:
He may be moneyless—who has not been?
That, here, is neither poverty or sin.
Leanness of soul, and meagreness of thought,
An empty barrenness of mind, is what
I should call poverty: and even worse
Than Mammon's vot'ries think an empty purse.

Methink I hear one softly whisper, "Hush—
To say you have no money makes me blush."
I have no money—blush again—to me
That kind of blush bespeaks degeneracy;
Crime, wickedness and folly bring disgrace—
For these should blushes mantle o'er the face:
I could name many things that figure worse
In life, than total absence of the purse.

I boast of wealth and richer streams than flow
From the most fruitful sources here below;
Mine is not wealth that stimulates with pride,
'Tis wealth that will eternally abide:
If I in faithfulness and patience wait,
I'd hold an heirship in a God's estate;
And even now, I'm richer, wealthier far
Than those who dip in Mammon's coffers are.
My Father's rich—I am His lawful child—
Not one by silly, fond caressing spoil'd,
I've through bereavement, not indulgence, grown
In strength, tho' woman never stands alone.

Who are my friends? Your worthy selves, I trust,
Whom I esteem wise, noble, good and just:
As such, each one I estimate a treasure;
In friendship, then, I'm rich in ample measure.

Who are my kindred? All the truly good,
Who've in the holy covenants faithful stood;
My kindred then, are all of royal line,
They each can claim an origin divine.

Who is my brother? Israel's Holy One—
Pertaining to the flesh, God's only Son;
He holds the birthright in eternity,
Through Him the heirship is conferred on me.

And who is my Father? Is He wise and great,
And well possess'd of rich and large estate?
Who is my Father? Does He dwell below?
Is He a worldly potentate? O no:
All earthly things must perish—crowns will rust,
While thrones and monarchs moulder into dust—
Who is my Father? ENDLESS is His name,
He is th' ETERNAL GOD—the Great I AM.

Prov'd or not prov'd, this axiom is sure,
A real Saint of God is never poor.

Sandwich Islands.

PORTS OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

HONOLULU Harbor, or Fairhaven as it was called, is situated on the leeward side of the Island of Oahu, in latitude 21 deg. 18 min. 23 sec. North and 157 deg. 48 min. 45 sec. West longitude. It was discovered and surveyed in 1794 by Capt. Brown of the English ship Butterworth, a northwest trader, and was first entered by the schooner Jackal, tender to the Butterworth, on the 1st day of January, 1795. The year in which our harbor was first entered is among the most noted of its history. Captain Brown, the discoverer, together with Capt. Gardner of the Prince Le Boo, were murdered by native pirates. The vessels were captured and taken out of the harbor round to Waikiki roads, which, till then, was the principal anchorage for vessels visiting Oahu, but were both re-taken again by the seamen belonging to them.

Kalanikapule, the King of Oahu, was one of the actors in this tragedy, and that too in the murder of his ally, who was principally instrumental in defeating Keao at Kalauao, a filibustering chief from the Island of Canai, who was bent upon subduing Oahu to vassalage. Capt. Brown, on return from his war expedition, fired a salute in honor of the victory; a wad from one of his guns entered the cabin window of the American sloop Lady Washington, and killed Capt. Kendrick. His interment, under the English burial service, is noted as the first at the islands accompanied with Christian rites. The ceremony was deemed by the natives then as a solemn sorcery. The grave was rifled the same night for the sake of the winding sheet. We give this piece of history as a notable starting point or "fixed monument," as the professionals say, in our survey of the harbor. It serves, too, in distinguishing rather vividly, the difference between the antagonism of civilization and slavery sixty-two years ago and the polka reunions of the races at the present day.

The harbor is a deep basin in the coral reef, through which the fresh water from the Nuuanu stream reaches the sea, capable of accommodating one hundred and eighty vessels in its present almost unimproved state. The depth of water varies from four to six and a half fathoms. The bottom is deep, stiff mud—the best of holding ground. Vessels at anchor in the harbor are perfectly secure at all seasons of the year. In the strongest southerly gales when the wind is directly in from the sea, the harbor is well protected by the reef outside of it. About one-third of the basin or harbor proper, at the north end, is filled with mud—a deposit from the Nuuanu Valley stream. This can be converted at pleasure into a harbor for ships by dredging.

The channel, which includes the outer harbor, is about one mile in length, narrow and rather tortuous. Its sides are bold coral reefs, and susceptible, when the wants of commerce demand it, of being converted into wharf fronts the entire length on both sides to the bar, making thereby a harbor of the present channel, which, under the mooring system, could be made to accommodate a number of vessels, little suspected by persons unacquainted with the real size of the basin and channel. The depth of water on the bar is twenty-one and a half feet at low tide, which rises and falls throughout our group about two feet. The bottom is sand and about one hundred yards in width, and can be deepened with small expense, under competent direction, so as to admit the largest vessels afloat. The shape of the harbor and channel is such as to offer as much wharf facilities as any harbor of its area in the world. The reefs on both sides are easy of improvement, and with extent enough of themselves for a first class city.

There are five good wharves, at which vessels of 1,500 tons can discharge or take in cargo. These wharves furnish about six hundred feet wharfage front. The Government are now constructing new piers, and it is probable that before the end of twelve months one thousand feet of additional wharfage will be ready for use.

This port is so easy of access that any sailing directions for it are almost superfluous. The trade wind blows over the islands about nine months of the year, from March to November; during the Winter months the south and west winds prevail, and bring usually a great quantity of rain. These months are generally stormy, and during them it is unsafe to anchor in the roads. Most of the marine disasters occurring about the islands are in December, January and February. When the trade wind prevails, vessels should approach the islands and run along to the northward of Hawaii, Maui and Molokai, distant from the land say fifteen or twenty miles, and passing through the channel between Molokai and Oahu, which is about eighteen miles in width, run along the shore from Coco Head (the most eastern part of Oahu) to Diamond Head, keeping the shore two or three miles distant. The reefs extend only about half a mile from the shore between these headlands.

Diamond Head is about four miles distant from the anchorage. Vessels wishing a pilot should hoist the usual pilot signal at the fore as soon as the town and shipping come in sight. Skillful pilots are always in readiness, and the port is provided with a steam tug, adapted to towing vessels out the harbor. Her service is generally needed when the trade wind is fresh. Vessels not wishing a pilot, can pass Diamond Head about one mile distant from the shore, and head for the entrance of the harbor. The anchorage is indicated by a white iron buoy in twelve fathoms, and ships not wishing to enter the harbor can anchor anywhere near the above buoy and outside the "spar buoy" at the entrance of the channel. The trade wind always blows off shore.

The site of Honolulu is good, rising gradually from the sea to an elevation of twenty feet. The ground is volcanic soil, with a coral rock basis—the very best foundation for building. The surrounding scenery, as oft told, is made up of everlasting green mountains and valleys. The immediate vicinity is diversified with hill and plain, susceptible of much adornment, as running water is abundant and can be led to all parts. Much has been done to beautify the environs in the shape of cottages and trees, but it is only the beginning of what we shall see. The scenery of this island is picturesque, it is well watered, salubrous and fertile throughout, and its topography such that a railroad may be constructed around it at a moderate expense, and doubtless will be whenever it will pay.

Its productions are various, mostly tropical fruits, vegetables and poultry, to supply the residents and shipping in port. Grazing is carried on largely and at a profit, and is the chief business of this island in the agricultural line. Being the centre of Hawaiian commerce, it draws its supply mainly from the other islands for consumption and shipping to foreign ports. A large fleet of coasters of every description, from the nonpareil clipper schooner to the sand barge, are employed in this trade, leaving daily for and returning from the other islands. One or more steamers adapted to the trade, and running regularly and permanently between the islands, is yet a desideratum.

The town of Honolulu and shipping in port are abundantly supplied with good water, brought down in iron pipes from exhaustless sources near the mountains. 2,000 barrels of domestic salt beef, about 3,000 barrels of domestic flour, equal to any imported, as well as large quantities of firewood, potatoes, pumpkins, vegetables and fruits of all kinds are annually furnished at this port to merchant and whale ships. Native as well as foreign seamen can be obtained at this port at short notice, for voyages to any part of the world; wages average about fifteen dollars per month for merchant service, and a hundred-and-fortieth lay for the whaling service.

The average value of imports at Honolulu for the last few years considerably exceed a million of dollars, coming from every quarter of the commercial world. This port seems to be a focus at which the commerce from every point of the compass in the Pacific concentrates. Its geographical position in relation to the Old and New World, tends unavoidably to make it such.

The population of Honolulu is somewhat fluctuating; during the Fall and Winter season it is as high as 10,000 or 12,000, caused by the influx of seamen, and also natives from the other islands of the group. At other seasons of the year it may be as low as 7,000 to 8,000. There are four ship chandlery stores, about twenty importing houses, and from fixty to sixty retail stores, twelve hotels, nine or ten physicians, and five printing offices. There are six church edifices, some of them very substantial specimens of architecture, and capable of accommodating each from 300 to 3,000 persons. The schools are numerous, both for the native and foreign children, and it is generally thought, by those most capable of judging, that the advantages afforded in Honolulu for a thorough education are equal to those of New England, excepting only her universities and colleges.

Aside from these elements of material prosperity, there are gathered together in Honolulu many facilities for real intellectual and social enjoyments; also many other diversions, said to be enjoyments, which are not so intellectual. We have a college of physicians, an incorporated college for students, delightfully located at Punahou; our postal arrangements with the Old World are complete, and correspondence is carried on with all parts of the world, regularly and without confusion.

Under the patronizing spirit of our treaties with some foreign nations, we are forced to offer many amusements and attractions to visitors which are more fascinating than healthy.

There are three weekly and two monthly journals printed here in both the Hawaiian and English languages. They are conducted with more or less ability, with a high or low moral tone, according to the editorial calibre and the intellectual and moral wants of their respective supporters.

We avoid drawing comparisons between this harbor and any of the other harbors of the Hawaiian group. Commerce, with its true instincts, always alights upon the best, and converts it into a metropolis. This harbor is an exemplification of the assertion not to be disputed by those interested in the prosperity of the kingdom, and we think it would be well for all to lend their good will to make it the centre of that wide commerce for which it is so favorably situated, and thereby benefit themselves in a wise way.

Before closing our remarks on the harbor of Honolulu, perhaps we ought to allude to its wants. A light-house ought to be erected forthwith at the entrance of the harbor. The necessities of our commerce demand this improvement. The fearful disasters and losses near and at the mouth of the harbor for the last few years, and all for the want of one, call loudly for such a safeguard. Aside from the losses which it would be the means of preventing, it would be the greatest accommodation to vessels in enabling them to come and go out at all times, night or day, thus saving "time, which is money," or will be as the "star of empire" approaches our meridian. We believe a proper light-house might be built by private parties, and that ships visiting this port would consent willingly to be taxed here as well as elsewhere for this kind of insurance or safeguard, and that the amount of tax so levied would be nearly or quite sufficient to induce private parties to erect one without delay.

But a want much more felt is a marine railroad for repairing ships. We are surprised that no attempt to construct a railroad has never been carried out here. The statistics which we publish to-day show the arrival of a large number of vessels, one-fifth of which come into this port for repairs. The present mode of repairing vessels is very expensive, while the repairing of the hull of large steamers at this port is almost impracticable at present. We are assured that the cost of a substantial railroad for the present wants of our commerce will not exceed $25,000; and it would be a fortune to any person or company who undertook it with a practical knowledge of the subject. But the length to which our article has run compels us to stop here. We shall, however, recur to the subject, and furnish some figures to show the necessity of a railroad.

[Pacific Commercial Advertiser.

The Sphere of Woman.

THE noble and interesting struggle in which you are engaged for the elevation of woman, should command the approbation of every intelligent being. When you propose to enlarge or elevate the sphere of woman's existence, you are met by the objection, that her present sphere is sufficiently enlarged and elevated for the development of the best qualities of her character, and, that when we remove existing restrictions, so as to give her equality of opportunities with man, we but tempt her to enter a career in which her true womanhood will be sacrificed, her distinctive virtues lost, and all the views of man assumed. If this were true, no such reform in woman's relations would be desirable; but, believing it untrue, I propose to show, by the evidence of science, what is the proper sphere of woman. The most important fact in the history of woman is, that she is the mother of all future generations of the human race, and that they are blessed or cursed by her influence, in proportion as she has been well or ill qualified for the duties of maternity. Upon her it depends whether the incalculable millions of all coming time shall be a pallid, scrofulous, feeble and consumptive race, or shall be hardy, healthy and powerful; whether they shall be gluttonous, intemperate, passionate, murderous and knavish, or honorable, philanthropic, temperate and holy; whether they shall move right on, through science, to harmony and happiness, or shall still struggle, through ignorance and crime—through pauperism, strife and war, inflicting incalculable misery upon each other. All this depends upon the character which woman transmits to her offspring, and that depends upon the character which she achieves for herself, as it is beyond a doubt that whatever exists in herself, is, in a greater or less degree, reproduced in her own offspring. Hence the great question in determining the proper sphere of woman is, what is the sphere of life in which she may best develope her whole nature? What is the sphere of life in which she can obtain and store up for posterity the greatest amount of health and happiness, of intellectual or moral improvement? If we ascertain such a sphere, it is our duty to place her in it, and he who would surround her with restraints to prevent her obtaining such a position, becomes guilty of all the direful consequences inflicted upon the future millions, as well as upon the present generation. There is not in the nature of things any reason why the world should not be filled with every human excellence. There is no reason why men should not be invulnerable in health, incorruptible in morals, gigantic in stature, and godlike in intellect, knowledge and virtue. According to the laws of nature, it is not more difficult or mysterious to fill the world with the strength of Hercules or the beauty of Apollo, than to cover it with scrofulous misery and baboon-like deformity. In accordance with the general laws of human improvement and hereditary descent, one result is just as intelligible and as accessible as the other. Which of these results shall be attained, depends mainly upon the sphere of woman. Whether the future of this world shall be bright or dark—whether it shall be painted with the hues of heaven or of hell, depends upon the sphere which we now give to woman. For as the future is ever imbedded in the present, and angelic beings read in present facts all future facts, the future of humanity lies in the present generation, and more especially in woman, who is the connecting link of the past and future. If, then, the sphere of woman is a sphere of happiness, the same bright sky which overhangs her head surrounds the future world of humanity. If her sphere is a sphere of knowledge and intellectual power, then science and wisdom are the future destiny of mankind. If her sphere is that of good and great deeds, then goodness and greatness are the future destiny of the world. If women are trained like Spartan mothers, their offspring will be warriors. If degraded like the North American squaws, their offspring will be savages. If trained like the females of the present civilized races, in every conceivable variety of subordinate situation, their offspring will present every conceivable variety of deformity and beauty, of vice and virtue, of disease and health, of intelligence and ignorance; but we shall vainly look for great and enlightened men, with perfect bodies, powerful minds and souls, filled with justice, with love, and with truth. Such men are now rare and astonishing phenomena, and they must continue to be strange and marvellous exceptions to the usual course of nature, until woman is lifted up out of her petty sphere of brainless drudgery, of frivolous idleness, of luxurious indolence, of harrassing care, and of physical debility and disease. We deprive the greater portion of womankind of the best influences of life. All women are more or less subjected to some of the following evils: They are deprived of a liberal education, and, if in a few rare instances, such an education is given, they are deprived of all the opportunities of enjoying its benefits by giving their acquired talents and knowledge a proper sphere of operation. They are either deprived of healthy physical exercise and development, to the destruction of their constitutions, or they are overpowered by domestic drudgery of a fatiguing character, or, in many cases, they are subject to both of these misfortues in succession. They are deprived of personal pecuniary independence, enslaved by the inadequate wages of their toil, compelled to be dependent upon men, and deprived, by their restricted mode of life, even of the privilege of looking abroad sufficiently to make a judicious choice of the husband to whom they intrust their fate, and vow eternal submission, in accordance with law and usage.—[Woman's Advocate.

Female Beauty.

DEAN SWIFT proposed to tax female beauty, and to leave every lady to rate her own charms. He said the tax would be cheerfully paid, and very productive. Fautenelle daintily compliments the sex, when he compares women and clocks—the latter serve to point out the hours, the latter to make us forget them.

With the modern Greeks and other nations on the shores of the Mediterranean, corpulency is the perfection of form in woman; and those very attributes which disgust the western European, form the attraction of an oriental fair. It was from the common and admired shape of his country-women, that Rubens in his pictures delights so much in a vulgar and odious plumpness; when this master was desirous to represent the "beautiful," he had no idea of beauty under two hundred weight. His very graces are all fat. But it should be remembered that all his models were Dutch women. The hair is a beautiful ornament of women, but it has always been a disputed point which color most becomes it. We account red hair an abomination; but in the time of Elizabeth it found admirers, and was in fashion. Mary of Scotland, though she had exquisite hair of her own, wore red fronts. Cleopatra was red-haired; and the Venetian ladies to this day counterfeit yellow hair.

After all that may be said or sung about it, beauty is an undeniable fact, and its endowments not to be disparaged. Sydney Smith gives some good advice on the subject. "Never teach fulsome morality. How exquisitely absurd to teach a girl that beauty is of no value, and her whole prospects and happiness in life may often depend upon a new gown or a new bonnet; if she has five grains of common sense, she will find this out. The great thing is to teach her their just value, and that there must be something better under the bonnet than a pretty face, for real happiness. But never sacrifice truth."

BE kind to every one, and remember that a kind and gentle word does more good than harshness.

The "Dying Gladiator."

THE picture gallery of the Smithsonian Institution has lately received on deposit a very interesting acquisition, a marble copy of the celebrated statue of "The Dying Gladiator." This very admirable copy is the work of an English sculptor—Gott. It was purchased by a gentleman of the District of Columbia and is now on free exhibition at the gallery, where Professor Henry has had it placed on a pedestal, and appropriately posted for statuesque effect.

In this connexion, a few words about Gladiators may serve to refresh the memory of the visitor. Gladiatorial combats were originally exhibited at the graves of deceased persons at Rome. They were first introduced by the Bruti, upon the death of their father, and thus formed originally a kind of funeral service, the shades of the dead being supposed to be propitiated by their blood. Subsequently, the magistrates, to entertain the people, gave shows of the Gladiators at the Saturnalia and the Festival of Minerva.

Incredible numbers of these combatants were thus destroyed. After the triumph of Trajan over the Dacians, spectacles of this kind were exhibited for 123 days, in which 10,000 Gladiators fought. Gladiators were kept and maintained in schools, by persons who purchased and trained them, much as modern chicken-fighters purchase and train their game cocks.

At first the gladiators were composed of captives and slaves, or of condemned malefactors; afterwards free-born citizens, induced by hire or inclination, fought in the arena. Some of noble birth, and what is still more wonderful, women of rank and dwarfs.

When first brought upon the arena the gladiators walked around with great pomp and solemnity, after which they were matched in equal pairs with great nicety. They first had a skirmish with wooden foils. After this the effective weapons, such as swords, daggers, &c., were put in their hands, and at a signal given by a trumpet they entered upon the dreadful contest. As they previously bound themselves to contend till the last, the fight was bloody and obstinate, and when one signified his submission by surrendering his arms, the victor was not permitted to grant his opponent's life without the leave of the multitude.

These cruel exhibitions were abolished by order of Constantine the Great 600 years after their institution; were revived under the reign of Constantius, and finally put an end to by Honorius.

The statuary at the Smithsonian Institution represents the death scene of a gladiator. Supporting himself by one hand, his eyes are bent upon the tide of life-blood oozing from his breast. By his side rest his now useless weapons of attack and defence.

Two Laughable Occurrences

Two laughable occurrences, affording new demonstrations of the migratory propensities of our countrymen, have come to our notice. A gentleman recently found, amid the ruins of Palmyra, surrounded by all the decaying relics of Oriental grandeur, a New England farmer from Berkshire county, "keeping house" with his family. Again, a friend from Boston was traveling some years ago in Greece, and stopped in Athens. To while away evening, he visited the theatre. While amusing himself upon the topics which every scene around him suggested to his mind, and deeply burried in classic associations, he heard a voice behind him remark, "Pooh! this ain't nothing. You ought to see Tremont Theatre, Boston." Turning round, in utter amazement, he exclaimed to a gaunt Yankee on the next bench—"Where on earth did you come from?" Without moving a muscle of his face, the person rejoined—"Got a little vessel down here in Peireus. Just come from Thomaston, Maine." The effect can be imagined.

THE woman who was "buried in grief" is now alive and doing well. It was a case of premature interment.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 9, 1857.

The Political and Religious Rites of the Mormons Conceded.

We have for some time contended strenuously for the religious and political rights of the Mormons. Time and time again have we shown that they had nothing and claimed nothing but what was Constitutionally their rights in common with other American citizens; and when editors and priests have been ranting and raving about the Mormons, we have met their denunciations, for arguments they have none, and challenged them to a discussion of the facts in the case. We knew that the ground we had taken was right; we knew that morally, socially, religiously and politically, Mormonism was incontrovertible; and we have at all times stood prepared to meet the issue on these grounds. We have generally, however, been met either by trumped up stories, false accusations, foul calumny, or ribald abuse. We were, consequently, scarcely prepared, after so much ranting, to find so straightforward and honest an acknowledgement as is contained in the following from the New York Herald of May 3d:

"THE MORMON QUESTION.—The governorship of Utah has again been tendered to Major Ben. McCulloch of Texas, and it is not yet known whether he will accept or not. Should he definitely decline, the peace of the country and the very existence of the Salt Lake settlement will impose on the President the duty of appointing a man of equal nerve, courage and sagacity to the old Texan Ranger. For, of all the questions which embarrass the statesmen of the country at the present time, one of the most embarrassing is without doubt the question of Utah, and the Mormons. Whichever way it be examined, it bristles with difficulties.

"Regarded politically, the Mormons are obviously entitled, under the constitution, to adopt the form of religion and the social usages which suit them best. No authority to interfere with their religious institutions has been committed to the Executive, or to Congress, or to any other person, persons, or assembly: they alone bear the responsibility of them. And according to the popular and usual reading of the constitution, wheresoever the Mormons shall have gathered a population sufficient, and framed a constitution republican in its leading doctrines, the Congress of the United States is bound to vote for their admission to the Union as a sovereign State. Objection may be taken to their polygamy; but, according to the doctrine of the Nebraska law, which is the only true and safe doctrine for the country at large, such an objection as this would be impertinent and Congress would have no right to press it. The subject of matrimony is one of these domestic questions which the Nebraska law clearly places beyond the pale of Congressional interference. According to the political principles which form the present basis of the policy of the United States government, we are, in strictness, bound to admit Utah, with adequate population and a republican government, without making the least inquiry about her religious institutions."

The above is all that we have ever contended for, and are simply our rights; we ask no more. As American citizens, we feel that, in common with all other citizens of this great republic, these are our due, and as such we claim them. But why is it that it should be so "embarrassing" to grant us what is simply our rights? Has it become so hard for the great model Republic of the nineteenth century to give to her citizens their rights, that when they are simply demanded "the whole subject bristles with difficulties?" An honest man never has any difficulty in pursuing a legitimate, straightforward course; but if that man would turn burglar, and seek to rob his neighbor's house, in the face of locks, bars, a vigilant police, a court and a prison, then, of course, his position would be "embarrassing," and whichever way it was examined, it would "bristle with difficulties" for him. All the advice we can give at the present to the scribblers about "the Utah difficulty" is, retrace your steps, follow in the footsteps of your venerable predecessors, lay aside your narrow, contracted, bigoted ideas, accord to all what you yourselves profess—"equal rights"—and the bristling difficulties will disappear, and you will find, on sober second-thought, that honesty, after all, is the best policy. We quote further:

"Again, most of the assailants of the Mormons treat them as pagans and heathens, and call upon the American people to interfere 'as Christians' to put them down. But the men who talk this way do not, as it might seem, enjoy a monopoly of Christianity. The Mormons can quote the Bible with any D. D. of these parts. The only difference between their study and their inferences from the Inspired Record arises from their selecting, as their favorite portions of Scripture, the Old, while our parsons prefer the New Testament. But all the Christian churches admit that both are of equal authenticity and equal authority. Wherefore it follows that when the Mormons show us that Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the other patriarchs, Solomon, the wisest of men, and David, the man after God's own heart, were inveterate polygamists and kept harems to the extent of their means, our Christian reasoners are necessarily silenced. They are shown, by unanswerable evidence, that the vice which is reproached to the Mormons, was practised by God's peculiar people, and, seemingly, with particular unction by the very men among this people who were the most frequent recipients of the divine bounty. So far, therefore, as the Holy Bible is concerned, the Mormons are, according to strict logic, much better qualified to persuade us to take four wives, than we are to induce them to stick to one."

If those D.D.'s referred to believe what they preach, why don't they come out and meet the Mormons face to face, and exhibit the superiority of their systems? They know, just as well as the Mormons do, that they can't do it to their advantage, and hence they skulk in the background, and cry, whine and rave, and in the absence of argument would call on government to light the inquisitorial fires and re-enact the scenes of St. Bartholomew and Smithfield. Why, the poor craven hypocrites, if it is a religious question, and they are the professed exponents of religion, can't they overturn by truth, if they have it, the alleged error of the Mormons, which is so outrageous as to require the intervention of the civil power? Oh ye hypocrites! why, a secular editor can see through the flimsiness of your covering. Thank God the State has not fallen so low as the Church.

The Herald fairly gives us credit for our position, religiously and politically, and so far as politics are concerned, it might have been a Mormon article. We beg here to state, however, that, if those D.D.'s to which he refers, believe only "in the New Testament," the Mormons do not only "believe in the Old," but in the New also. It is from those two sources that the Mormons principally sustain their religious faith, and from the Constitution their political faith. But Mormonism shrinks not from an investigation, moral, philosophical, or social, as well as political or religious. We again quote:

"Politically and religiously then, the Mormons have the whiphand of us, and know it. They know that the safety of the Union will not permit us to establish such a precedent as interference by Congress with the religious institutions of a Territory or State; and they are aware of the vantage ground which their adversaries give them by appealing to Heaven and the Scriptures to condemn their depravities."

"Whiphand of us!" The Mormons have all that, and know it well, of course they do; and how can they help knowing it in the face of such facts? But really, Mr. Bennett, is not this conceding too much? Why you must have forgotten yourself? What will people think of you for making such concessions as these? Why you are giving the Mormons credit for being about as good as the christians, and acknowledging, too, that neither parsons nor editors can controvert their principles. Would it not have been better to have taken another course, and suppressed the truth? What will the editor of the Richmond Enquirer say? What will the very meek "Philosopher," and that exquisite model of perfection, the "Little Villain," say? What will the religious press say? What will be said by the pious, humble shriekers for freedom? And, above all, what will the "three thousand clergymen" say? Surely the whole subject "bristles with difficulties." Mr. Bennett seems fully to realize this; and after, in a fit of honesty, acknowledging their true position, cries out, "What, then, are we to do?" Do! why be honest, that's all, and then the difficulties will all vanish. Why not be as honest in granting rights as in acknowledging them? If the Mormons are entitled, religiously and politically, to the rights you mention, why not accord them? You are polygamists. Yes, but then you admit that that is none of your business and besides that the best of men—"Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and the other Patriarchs, Solomon the wisest of men, and David, the man after God's own heart, were polygamists;" that the "christian reasoners are silenced," and that "politically and religiously the Mormons have the whip hand of us." Very well then, why not give them their rights? There is nothing that we know against them. Shall we object to them because of something imaginary, an ignis fatuus, a mere chimera of the brain? It is this eternal fighting with shadows which creates all the difficulty. You obtain false and villanous reports, from corrupt, unprincipled men, fight hob goblins of your own creation and then like Macbeth are horrified at the phantoms that float before your bewildered imagination. "The Mormon question, then, bristles with difficulty"—of course it does. Shadows are always difficult to fight and hence the struggling and wriggling and lying and misrepresenting. At last out comes the simple truth and you exclaim:

"What then, are we to do? Shall we confess ourselves incapable of keeping these polygamists out of the Union? We think not."

No we won't give in, like Macbeth we are not crazy, it is but a slight, a temporary insanity. The fates are against us, but we'll try it again. "Lay on Macduff." We will not acknowledge ourselves incapable of keeping these polygamists out of the Union. But what shall be done next? We have tried political and constitutional arguments and these have failed. The D. D's have tried religious arguments, including opposition to polygamy, and these have failed; but yet we won't despair; like the fox we have a good many shifts. We again quote:

"In the first place, though long usage seems to have given to 'may' the force of 'must' in the section of the constitution referring to the admission of new States, it does not appear at all certain that such a construction of the sentence is warranted. 'May' is not the same as 'must;' Congress may well have been endowed with a power, without being charged with a duty. It 'may' admit Utah if the interest of the Union would be extended thereby; but it 'must' meet at regular intervals to take counsel on the affairs of the nation. We suggest to the administration and to the scattered members of Congress to give this point proper thought."

The above is simply a dodge, a palpable piece of trickery, and finds an answer in the former part of the Herald's article, where he says that:

"According to the popular and usual reading of the constitution, wheresoever the Mormons shall have gathered a population sufficient, and framed a constitution republican in its leading doctrines, the Congress of the United States is bound to vote for their admission to the Union as a sovereign State. Objection may be taken to their polygamy; but, according to the doctrine of the Nebraska law, which is the only true and safe doctrine for the country at large, such an objection as this would be impertinent and Congress would have no right to press it. The subject of matrimony is one of these domestic questions which the Nebraska law clearly places beyond the pale of Congressional interference. According to the political principles which form the present basis of the policy of the United States government, we are, in strictness, bound to admit Utah, with adequate population and a republican government, without making the least inquiry about her religious institutions."

We are at a loss to reconcile the two; the one is a clear, straight forward, honest sentiment: the other, a slip-noose, a simple dodge; but we will briefly glance at his remarks about the word "may" which is recommended to Congress in so comic-serious a manner. Suppose the Congress "may" refuse, which Mr. Bennet has just told us before they have no right to do; but that they "are bound to vote for their admission into the Union as a sovereign State." What then? They refuse to the Utonians a right which has been ceded and guarranteed to eighteen territories, without, according to his own admission, any just reason whatever. They place themselves in the position of capricious tyrants, depart from the common usages of the nation, make invidious distinctions, and according to the Herald's own showing, violate the spirit and genius of our institutions and constitution, usurp a power which has never been "committed to the Executive or to Congress, or to any other person, persons or assembly." They place themselves in the wrong and the Mormons in the right. They use for oppression a power that was given them to promote justice and maintain equal rights. Still the Mormons have never contended that they shall be admitted; but they do think with the Herald that if they are not, the above will be the true position of those who oppose their admission. But again:

"If the apprehension of the South—that the Northern men will vote against the admission of every new slave State—renders Congress obdurate on this head, the only remaining resource of the administration will be to act upon the evidences of rebellion now before the world. It is notorious that the United States Court has been despoiled, and the records stolen; for this it is competent for the government to demand and exact satisfaction. Our cotemporary the Richmond Enquirer wishes to see the fair 'fields of Utah laid waste, and the Mormons hung by hundreds.' We are not so comprehensive in our project of subjugation. A sensible, judicious Governor, with soldiers enough to constitute him a body guard, would very possibly achieve the same end by the more pacific agencies of example, precept, and private management. A split among the Saints would demolish them all; and if Mr. Buchanan's Governor be wise—be he who he may—he will infallibly produce this split, then undertake wars, and so win glory and profit."

Here then are two fresh shifts to get rid of the Mormon difficulty. The one is founded on a charge of rebellion and its necessary and just punishment, and the second division. They must be cudgelled, beaten, killed and eaten and then divided.

Unfortunately however for the first of these projects there is no such thing as rebellion among the Mormons, all the fuss and feathers that we have had lately originate in the base misrepresentations, foul-mouthed slander, and abuse of an imbecile and corrupt judge who is seeking to kick up dust to cover his retreat and that of a small bevy of his immaculate coadjutors. And while in the states they are crying "war to the knife and knife to the hilt," the Mormons are as quiet and peaceable in the mountains as sucking babies and very few of them are even aware how grossly the Eastern public have been gulled and imposed upon by a few contemptable correspondents, some of whom strut about in robes of state. So this rebellion vanishes into thin air, eludes the eager grasp of the Herald and leaves him again at sea, fighting shadows, and pursuing phantoms.

We come now to the last shift, which is division. "Divide and conquer" has been the motto of usurpers and tyrants, from time immemorial. Does Mr. Bennett remember the story of that sage Philosopher Franklin about the bundle of sticks? We would advise him to read it over again. It is the union of the Mormons which, after all, is the great bugbear; and neither their polygamy, rebellion or anything else. They are now strong; strong in religious union; strong in political union, and strong in religious, political, social and constitutional rights. If we could only sever them, they would be weak as us; but they are now based and entrenched behind the strong bulwarks of religious and political rights, sustained by the Bible and the Constitution, and we acknowledge we can't gainsay it. When men talk about dividing the Mormons they show themselves most egregiously ignorant of the principles that unite them. Well, gentlemen, try, try,—that's all; but when you get them divided, pray "save the pieces."

Some time ago, Mr. Bennett was in favor of sending out a number of ladies, strong minded women, creoles, nymphs du pave, &c., to help to christianize the Mormons, with some of the foul effete and polluted christian institutions of this country. We believe that the lack of houses of assignation and other facilities for prostitution, that great appendage of christian monogamic civilization, is the great cause of all the trouble among the sojourners in Utah. And so far as Uncle Sam's officers are concerned, we would advise them to take some of their spare ladies with them—it would save some rather disreputable court scenes about squaws, blankets, paints, &c., &c. We would advise, however, that they keep them to themselves, and not exhibit them as wives, a la mode Drummond. The Mormons generally know how to keep clear of such filth; and we are afraid, Mr. Bennett, that your plan of introducing your christian institutions will not succeed so well as that of Balaam with the Israelites.

In conclusion, we would say that the Mormons have, neither directly or indirectly, sought to embarrass the Federal administration, nor do they now seek to do it. They are now at this day, and always have been, as loyal and patriotic as any other American citizens. If there has ever been any trouble it has been with the officious interference of political demagogues and self-constituted censors. If the Mormon question is now surrounded with difficulties, it is very obvious to all that those difficulties originate with others and not with the Mormons. The Mormons have pursued a steady, even course. They have never agitated or disturbed society a la mode Kansas, or Kinney, Walker and others; and whenever the community at large, including judges, priests and editors, come to their senses, and can find time to mind their own business, the Mormons will be found "right side up with care" and the "Mormon question" will vanish into thin air.

Utah.

We have this week another mail from the mountains. By this arrival we have received a considerable number of letters, but no Deseret News; we have, however, through the politeness of a friend, had the perusal of that journal for Feb. 11th, 18th and 25th.

The most stirring and refreshing intelligence is the Reformation, and its good effects upon the community. Arrangements on a grand scale are entered into for the successful prosecution of the Public Works. About 300 men have engaged to labor on the Cotton Wood canal till its completion, in order that the block for the Temple may be brought with facility from its rugged bed to the shed of the workmen. The city will likewise be greatly benefitted by the greater accession of water conveyed to it by this channel.

The News of the 25th speaks of a mail from the East stuck into some corner "a long time ago at the Platte bridge." If the conductor, or contractor rather, had stuck there himself and let the mail go on, it would have been a greater favor and something more like how things should be. We have hopes of better things under the new contractor.

The Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society have already published the list of premiums to be awarded at the Second Annual Exhibition—to take place in October next—for Stock—Field Crops—Vegetables—Fruits and Flowers—Miscellaneous Farming Implements—Agricultural Machines, and Machinery.

The Utonians had only learned of the election of President James Buchanan on the 7th of February, and, of course, are still in glorious ignorance of their extensive preparations for war, their awful outrages upon five or six American citizens from Missouri and Iowa, their tortures of the dumb boy, and their profanation and sacrilege (ain't it) in burning 700 volumes of law. What wicked folks these Utonians must be, to do all that and never know anything of it till that slush-pot and "slanderer," The N. Y. Tribune, gets to their Territory—the echo of the "horse-trader judge," Drummond. We may as well add here that the poor "horse-trader" has got out another letter. He has addressed the widow of Capt. Gunnison, and adds to his former charges, the names of the persons whom he believes accomplished the bloody deed under the guise of Indians. A person so charged, now in this State, informed us the other day of his intention to prosecute Drummond, as he can prove that he was in California at the time of Gunnison's murder. Did the others charged think him worth notice and any chance of getting at him, the poor "horse-trader judge" would cut another figure in the courts here than when the Washington lady sat by his side with him on the bench in the Fillmore Court.

Won't some of the pious get up special prayers for poor Drummond? Poor man, he ought to be an object of commisseration. He has got himself into a "quandum" worse than that of Peck, and he knows it; and what is worse for his peace of mind, he knows that WE KNOW IT, and are likely to give, some of these days, the advantage of our ken as widely as he has spread his fulsome calumnies.

My Bankrupt Bill.

We desire to draw the attention of the Saints to the poetry on our front page, under the above heading, from the pen of Miss E. R. Snow. Anything from the pen of that gifted lady will ever command the attention of those who have the honor of her acquaintance, personally or by reputation; but when she touches experience her pen reveals the riches of her soul—treasures for the souls of others. Read it, reflect over it, and let the principle take deep root in your hearts, all who talk poverty and behold your day is over.

Elder M. C. Nickerson.

We received the other day a lengthy communication—28 pages of foolscap—from Mr. M. C. Nickerson, of Port Dover, C. W., on the Gospel of Christ, the Apostacy, and the restoration of the Gospel in the last days. The article is well written and shows that Mr. N. understands well the subjects, and is well qualified to write upon them; but its length prevents us from publishing it. What thoughts rush into our mind—more than twenty years ago we first hard Mormonism from the lips of Elder Nickerson, believed it and rejoiced with him in its hopes, and to show our faith we sold up and marched off for Zion. Obedient to every word, we have travelled nearly all over creation, been up, down, down and up again, and are just preparing to set off for Utah. When shall we see Elder Nickerson there? Our heart beats true to old friends, as well as to new ones, and we ask again, with the kindest interest; when shall we see Elder M. C. Nickerson there?

We shall ever be pleased to receive from our brethren articles on anything connected with the great movement to which THE MORMON is devoted, but brevity is a great and agreeable quality. When subjects cannot be squeezed into a small compass, cut them up, divide them and send them on under seperate headings.

Personal Intelligence.

Elder APPLEBY left here last Saturday for Westport, Connecticut, preached at Norwalk on Sunday, returned here on Thursday morning.

President Angus M. Cannon arrived here from Philadelphia, on Wednesday.

Presidents Taylor, Appleby, Cannon and friends, leave here for Toms River, New Jersey, on Saturday morning.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

ENGLAND.—The Queen has given birth to her ninth child—a princess, at which important event certainly all her royal subjects will rejoice exceedingly, having now the cheering prospects of supporting another of the royal paupers. The London Times laughs at the anticipated downfall of General Walker, and would fain enjoin upon Uncle Sam the necessity of putting down all similar movements in future. That journal talks also of dividing Nicaragua among the other States of Central America. Walker has had many narrow escapes before this, and his fate may yet keep him above water. Great reinforcements are being sent to China, Lord Elgin, the newly appointed plenipotentiary to the Celestial Empire was to leave immediately for the field of his mission. His lordship is to request of the celestials, that England should enjoy equal rights and privileges with Prussia at Pekin, that English vessels, when in distress, should have access to all Chinese ports, and that three more ports be opened for commercial purposes, independent of the five mentioned in the former treaty.

FRANCE.—There is much talk of the Emperor's intended visit to Algeria, soon after the visit of the Grand Duke Constantine to Paris. The French republicans have a notion of electing Cavaignac, conqueror of the June revolution of 1849, Carnot and others as candidates for the legislative chamber. Constant rumors of conspiracies against the Emperor's life are afloat, and show in connection with other momentous manifestations of popular dislike, that the political atmosphere is very close and a storm preparing. According to an on dit, Louis Napoleon is about to settle the impending difficulties between Spain and Mexico, Turkey and Persia, and is endeavoring likewise to remove the obstacles thrown in the way of a commercial intercourse between the celestials and other nations. French diplomacy is likewise laboring to establish friendly relations between Austria and Sardinia. The cunning craftiness of Mr. Von Manteuffel, the Prussian Premier, is still leading the mediating powers by the nose, relative to a speedy settlement of the Neufchatel question.

PRUSSIA.—The cattle plague is raging to an alarming extent in Upper Silesia, to which place a company of soldiers has been despatched to form un cordon de sanite.

AUSTRIA.—The Magyars appear to have been inoculated with a little sprinkling of loyalty recently as great preparations are being made for the solemn reception of the Emperor Joseph.

NAPLES.—The spirit of the troops assumes an alarming character, in fact, Bomba stands on a volcano, an eruption of which is speedily anticipated.

ITALY.—An Austrian corps of observation is to be formed at the southern extremity of the Lago Maggiore to counterbalance the concentration of a Sardinian army.

RUSSIA.—Grand Duke Michel is spoken of as appointed Viceroy or Stadthalter of the Kingdom of Poland, the administration of which is to be separated from that of Russia. The latter fact is very doubtful: since Peter the Great, the policy of the cabinet has been to efface every trace of the former independence of the conquered provinces by an absolute Russianization of the same. The spring campaign in the Caucasus has opened, with partial success to the brave Circassians. Russian engineers have succeeded in raising twenty-five vessels of war sunk in the harbor of Sebastopol.

TURKEY.—The English fleet has left the Dardanelles and is now at Smyrna. Directly after the reception of these news, a circular of the High Porte announced that men of war of all nations are henceforth prohibited from entering the Dardanelles, unless they are provided with a special firman as a passport. Colonization operations with a small number of Poles have commenced on the domains of Redschid Pasha in Thessaly.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE Marcy-Clarendon Treaty, which was to take the place of the famous Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, and swallow up all the difficulties between John and Jonathan, has got back to where it started. This treaty, at the signing of which there was so much satisfaction on both sides of the big waters, came over from London some time ago for ratification. The Senate was opposed to it, and President Buchanan and Cabinet cut and carved it, and sent it back to her Majesty's Cabinet "amended." The last mail brings the intelligence that Palmerston rejects the treaty as amended—so here we are back again to 1851.

There is still considerable talk and writing over the Washington National Hotel epidemic. Rumors have been in circulation that the water was poisoned, and a high reward offered for the detection of the guilty parties; while, at the same time, others affirm that there is abundant evidence to prove that the disorder arose from gaseous emanations from the drains connected with the common sewers.

The Burdel murder is again before the public. The trial of Mrs. Cunningham, implicated with Eckel, commenced on Monday in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, before Judge Henry E. Davis. Up to the present writing nothing new has been elicited.

Another mysterious and horrid affair has been brought to light during the past week. A lady of New Jersey started in company with a lawyer, a friend of hers, to New Orleans, but returned a short time after with his corpse and a will purporting to have been made by him in her favor. On inquiry she stated that he died suddenly; but from certain circumstances that have transpired since her return, the marvel-loving public have reconciled it to their own peculiar belief—that she poisoned him!

In Orange County, N. J., the body of a very respectable female was found in a field almost naked, and bearing marks of strangulation and other violence. The body was supposed to be that of a Miss Bloom, whose absence lent confirmation to the rumor, and led to the apprehension of the person in whose company she had been last seen. Very singularly the body corresponded in every particular so much with Miss Bloom that her own sister recognized it as hers and none other. Fortunately for Mr. Jenkins Miss Bloom arrived early enough in court to swear to her own identity and his innocence.

The Rev. Mr. Kallock, of Tremont Chapel, Boston, who was lately tried for adultery and had a narrow escape from legal conviction to sustain the public one, is now quite a lion in the preaching line in that city. Crowds go to hear him, or rather, to see him, and—in the Brougham and Burton style—"he draws a fine house."

Another row in Washington. The Engineer of the Brooklyn Navy Yard has been caneing Mr. Daniel E. Sickles. The Engineer thought he had grounds for complaint, and getting bluffed off when he demanded an explanation, and Mr. S. would'nt fight, the former went to the bedroom of the latter and attempted to Brooks him; but was less successful than that gentleman with Mr. Sumner. The affair is not over.

The freight conductors on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad have had a strike—and this last week a horrible row—stopping the cars and doing considerable mischief. The military succeeded in driving the rioters, but not without loss of life.

ON BOARD STEAMER "A. B. CHAMBERS,"
Lexington, Mo., April 25, 1857.

DEAR FATHER—I have written to you several times, but I think not since I left St. Louis. My reason for not writing before is that I had nothing definite in relation to the object of my journey to communicate until the day before yesterday, when I made arrangements for the delivery of some cattle at Iowa City; since then I have not had an opportunity of writing until now.

I left St. Louis, after having obtained and communicated to you all the information I could gather from Bros. Snow and Little, on Friday at two o'clock, accompanied by Bros. Geo. A. Smith and Ephraim Hanks, who were on their way to Leavenworth City.

We had each of us to talk Mormonism all the way up, as the people discovered that we were from Utah almost as soon as we got fairly started; and from the multiplicity of questions asked by them, I should think they were principally from "Down East." The cars took us to Jefferson City, and we then went on board the "Trophic," one of the boats of the "Lightning Line," but which, notwithstanding the lightning, is rather a slow going thunderbolt. We remained there all night, and started on Saturday morning very early up the river; went on that day and most of the night without "tying up." The next day being Sunday, some of the passengers wanted us to preach to them; and having obtained Bro. Smith's consent to hold forth, provided the captain and passengers were agreeable, they went to the captain and requested permission, but he refused to comply, saying, "There might be some who were not gentlemen on board, who would create a disturbance;" consequently it was dropped. This, however, did not prevent the passengers from gathering around and listening to our conversation, and occasionally putting a question, all of which we were enabled to answer satisfactorily, much more so, I thought, to ourselves sometimes than to some of our interrogators, who would come up occasionally with: "What about Brigham's ninety wives?" and would walk off again with a red face, and a "ha! ha!" from the little knot around us. I believe Solomon justifies a person answering a fool according to his folly. It was quite a picture sometimes to see Bro. Hanks, with a crowd around him, in one part of the boat, myself similarly situated at another part, and Bro. Smith's portly figure projecting out in bold relief, as he sat in the centre of the cabin with THE MORMON spread out before him, conversing with another lot of passengers, one or two of whom, he said, had informed him of their intention to subscribe for it.

We arrived at Parkville at 12 o'clock on Monday all right, though not through, as reported, in forty eight hours. The boats are all crowded with emigrants to "Bleeding Kansas" and persons on their way to look out locations there. I also find quite a crowd on the return boats who have "seen the elephant" and think they have paid too much for their whistle, although there are not quite so many returning at present, as there are going up. When I went up, the cabin floor was covered with mattrasses, with the backs of the chairs turned under the ends of the layers, as they were spread across the cabin for pillows.

The weather has been cold and windy almost every day since I left New York, and the grass has not yet made its appearance, however, I think it will now get a start as we have had one or two fine days, and it has been raining a little to day, which, I think, will give it a fair start; but even if it should commence growing as fast as possible, it will probably be two or three weeks before it will be up high enough to furnish good feed for animals, so that the arrangement that Bro. Young and I have entered into with . . . to receive the cattle here on the 12th of May, will be just right. Cattle, cows and horses are very high, the latter ranging from $150 to $200. We have had to pay high prices for the cattle we have purchased; but if we did not take them according to agreement, there are plenty of emigrants to Kansas that would pay eastern prices for them. I have got the cattle as cheap as Bro. Young who has been round the country for two months, having had the benefit of his experience.

Yours affectionately, GEORGE TAYLOR.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 2, '57.

PREST. TAYLOR—Dear Uncle: I returned this afternoon from Baltimore, whither I had accompanied the Saints who left here on Thursday for Utah. They number about seventy persons, and leave with hearts rejoicing in so glorious a prospect of a deliverance from Babylon, with her corruptions.

The company was placed under the guidance of Elder Martin Lenzi, who has ever proved a good man in the work of God, and has heretofore held the office of First Counsellor to President Harrison of Philadelphia.

These Saints were from Philadelphia and the vicinity of Centreville, Delaware.

From the latter place were several farmers, among whom was one Titus Mousley, who, although not a Mormon by baptism, has proved himself true in responding to the call to gather, and sold his home, and now takes his whole family, who are in the Church, whom he desires to save with several others, toward the tabernacle of God. His heart was ever glad when doing good to the servants of the Lord, and his house was ever open to the homeless Saints; and while he journeys West, I feel there is not a Saint who knows Father Mousley but will pray for his prosperity.

The cars upon the Ohio and Baltimore Railroad I observed were very comfortable and nicely fitted up to Wheeling.

I called upon Elder Crump, who, although afflicted, looks forward with fond anticipation to the day of his deliverance from the scenes to be witnessed here. I remained in Baltimore over the 1st instant, visiting and enjoying an agreeable chat with our friend Mr. Johnson, whom I accompanied to listen to a discussion in one of their institutes upon the all-absorbing question i. e., "shall Utah be admited into the Union with her present institutions?" The debate was carried on with some warmth, while I looked on and smiled in witnessing the display made by some, who arose as though to take the "bull by the horns," but instead of achieving anything they made a perfect "flat out."

Through their zeal to oppose something that is "every where spoken against," they had forgot to furnish themselves with valid evidence, but went by popular rumors, and sought to vindicate their position through newspaper stories, such as any one might get written at a penny a line, or a glass of punch with a promise to favor them in a political race in a day to come. It was wonderful to hear them set the Mormons out of Christian society by pronouncing them "murderers," "thieves," "adulterers" and "traitors" to the Union, "because they are thieves, murderers, adulterers and traitors," and should be prevented from coming into the Union, "because they should be prevented." One reason they did produce to justify themselves in rejecting Utah was on account of the practice of polygamy which was not only immoral in its tendency to corrupt the virtuous of this pure (?) nation, but calculated to ruin and destroy the advantages of our country's wealth in preventing the developement of the natural resources of so choice a land, for "in accordance with the laws of Physiology it is calculated to produce more females than males." I suppose they infer this through Jacob having twelve sons yet but one daughter.

Several did take hold and maintain our right to worship God according to the dictates of our consciences, which privelege was guaranteed us in the constitution, more especially when those principles adhered to by us, are those, as they asserted, which the best and most favored people of God cherished and proclaimed. This astonished me when I heard them state these things knowing they did not advocate the cause of God through a love for Him, but for argument's sake as they avowed it was not because they wished to favor it.

These gentlemen likewise denied it being what was calculated to produce more females than males, and defied their opponents to prove it true by physiology. The subject was left over for further debate next week, when I expect the poor creatures will try to decide the fate of God's work. I am thus led to say, oh! man who art thou to attempt to call to an account the God of heaven whose right it is to speak to his children, and now as He lives has said He would redeem them.

I am your humble and obedient Nephew,
ANGUS M. CANNON.

Correspondence of David O. Calder.

PREST. WM. H. MILES has handed us a letter he received by the last Utah mail from Elder Calder, who was formerly associated with him in the Presidency of the branch of the Church in Cincinnati, Ohio. As Elder Calder is well known to many of the Saints in this country and in Auld Scotland, for an honorable, upright, God-fearing man we readily give place to his correspondence. The former part of the letter being devoted to their previous associations and family relationship, we pass over and extract his allusions to men and things in Utah, yet badly understood in the States.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY,
Feb. 28, 1857.

WM. H. MILES—Dear Bro.: * * * No doubt many persons will be astonished to hear it acknowledged that it is necessary the Mormons in Salt Lake should reform; while others will say it is a confirmation of the truth of previous reports of the excessive immorality of the inhabitants of Utah, and that they now find it positively necessary to become civilized and christianized before they can be acknowledged and treated as American citizens, and enjoy the blessings and privileges guaranteed by the Constitution. When this reformation commenced, there was not a distillery, brewery, grog shop, gambling saloon or house of ill-fame in the Territory: no rowdyism, incendiarism, prostitution, homicides, suicides, infanticides, forgeries or murders; no practice for doctors, lawyes, police or magistrates; no balls or theatrical performances among the people. One would suppose that such a community had nothing to repent of and no place for reform; and Utah might be called the seat of perfection in morals. (I would not wish it to be understood that there are not individuals here who have not been guilty of cheating and stealing, but they find it rather a tight place for them and make tracks for the East and California with all speed.) You may ask: "What then is the condition of the people that they require reform?" They have been so much persecuted and driven from their comfortable homes so often, and have had to labor so excessively hard to build up a home in this far-distant and barren country, that they measurably become wearied and fell asleep, and thereby neglected the performance of many important duties tending to hasten on the time, when the Lord will more fully acknowledge His people before the eyes of all nations. It therefore became necessary for them to arise and shake off their lethargy, and no more rest, until the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of the Lord; and they have arisen and clothed themselves with the Spirit of God, and gone forth with renewed zeal and energy, and their works have already declared that they are fully determined that the building up of the Kingdom of God will be first in all their thoughts and actions. Never in the history of this Church have the Saints manifested their works to such an extent as at present; the consequence is, that as soon as the spring opens, hundreds will be engaged in building the Temple; the store houses being filled with provisions to carry on that work with energy. This reformation bears no resemblance whatever to sectarian revivals; there is no excitement—no enthusiasm—no working upon the feelings of the people, nothing but a calm appeal to their judgments, hence the fruits are different.

Were it not that we have a most corrupt set of scoundrels here in the capacity of U. S. Officers and their Gentile associates all would be peace and quietness in our young and thriving Territory. It is a notorious fact, that with but one exception, all the official appointments for this Territory are filled by persons who are not only strangers to this community, but bitterly opposed to, and trample under foot the Territorial laws, and do all they can to perplex, bring about a collision between this people and the Parent Government. I suppose that we will have to submit to this imposition, so long as the Government will select persons outside of this Territory, as no man who could make a living honestly, or was smart enough to do it dishonestly in the East, would come so far from home for so small a salary as they receive: but the fact is, some place must be found for corrupt politicians—the tail-end of society, and the Department dare not send them anywhere else. I just know that there is not a community in any country town in the United States that would tolerate such a set of villains to live among them, and that they would not dare to act in their official capacity as they do here, in any other part of the Republic. The reason is, that any other people could punish them without bringing the United States Government upon them to their destruction; but well do they know that the Mormons will suffer a little longer rather than have the scenes enacted in Missouri and Illinois repeated here.

You have no doubt read much that has been published against the Mormons in the Herald and other eastern newspapers. One would suppose that these productions must have come from the hands of a very pious and philanthropic set of men. Who are the Utah Correspondents? Men who delight to gamble, drink, whore and use any amount of profane language—and who are known here as the dregs of immorality, and receive their titles and their pay from Uncle Sam. But it may be that we, barbarians, are too hard on those fine specimens of civilization and refinement, as they assure us that such conduct is quite fashionable and very extensively practiced in the country whence they came; yet we can scarcely believe in their civilization, for we know that we are not guilty of one of these acts; and, notwithstanding the people of their country consider that we are not virtuous enough to be admitted into the Union and enjoy the privileges and blessings of American citizens; and certainly if they indulged in the vices and corruptions with which they are charged, they would be so ashamed of themselves that they could not—dare not find fault with, or preach virtue to a people so infinitely their superiors.

Give my love to your family, and let me hear from you soon. Yours, as ever,
DAVID O. CALDER.

FOR THE MORMON.

Philosophical Certainty of a Future State.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONTINUED.

The intellectual faculties, when fully exercised, prove the consistency of a future state. Is it then reasonable to act contrary to deductions made by sound arguing, and stand in opposition to the results of that mental illumination which enables man to comprehend, to a certain extent, his relationship with God, and His purposes regarding the future destiny of created beings? We are endowed with noble gifts, that we may understand the bearings existing between us and the phenomenal world; that we may know that Time is constituted of the past, present and future, and that all physical and mental operations refer to these three periods; that everything is in a scale of continual progression, and has consequently to undergo an endless variety of changes through all the ages of eternity to fulfil the measure of its creation, hence a denial of the immortality of the soul and of a future state, is an open violation of those heavenly laws and principles which are implanted in the human mind, and tend to open everlastingly new fields of intelligence, and to bring man gradually on a level with celestial beings.

If so many nations, however heterogeneous their religious ideas may be, agree in the belief in a Supreme Ruler, we may upon the same basis admit, that their notions of a future state are correct. It is a strange but common phenomenon of the mind, that when the capacities of man are allowed to have a free course in their operations; when we consider him in his primitive state, free from the bewildering ideas of so-called civilization, enlightenment and its absurd appendages; in short, when we take the natural man, as he is gone forth out of the Creator's hand, we find, that even the crudest mind is led from the operations in the physical economy of Nature, to refer to a supreme Being or Intelligence, from whose source every principle of Truth is emanating; further the peculiarities and capacities of the spirit which operates, makes and receives impressions, conceives ideas, etc., show that the mind is continually longing for something new, that it is making constant exertions to realize something that is different from what it possessed before, all this is a sufficient hint of a future existence.

Would the short period of this life suffice to satisfy the craving appetite of the inner man, to meet the desires of the soul, to soar in the fields of higher intelligence? Where does this peculiar phenomenon of the soul never being satisfied with its position, with its physical and mental triumphs, emanate? It comes from God, and if so, we must naturally conclude from His wisdom, rectitude and other attributes of His divine perfection, that it is for a certain purpose, viz: for an eternal improvement in the scale of being, hence, as everything in the physical and mental creation is going on gradually, and we, relative to our advancement in the scale of being, receive precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little, and all this in strict accordance with the natural position we occupy, we have to conclude that we get but very little intelligence in this sublunary existence on account of the gross senses of mortality, consequently we anticipate moving at some future time in higher and more exalted spheres, in which those physical and mental deficiencies and anomalies are made up by endowments of a celestial character. From the foregoing we infer the rationality of a future state, the certainty of which also shows the mercy and rectitude of our Heavenly Father, who is implanting in us a boundless desire for intellectual and bodily enjoyments, and satisfies the same by an after-existence beyond this vale of tears.

It is true that from time to time men like Voltaire, Rousseau, Hegel, Schlegel, Buffon and others have disbelieved or denied the existence of a Supreme Ruler and future life; but these few skeptics have not been sufficient to suffocate the voice of reason, nature and experience; and their strange doctrines of infidelity and fatality have their cause either in a wilful ignorance, in the vain, ridiculous pride of not sharing the fears and hopes of the multitude, and thus placing themselves above the level of the universal intellect of the age, or corruption, wickedness and fear of a future punishment may have induced them to blind themselves willingly against the truth, which is a poor argument originating merely in sophistry and licentiousness.

The rewards, blessings, punishments of a future world are as little removed by disbelief and skepticism, as the dangers of the sea are by the mariner's constant habit of traversing the same; he becomes so familiar with the mighty deep, that he forgets the dangers of that treacherous element, but still those dangers exist only unknown to him, and so in relation to an infidel, he may, by sophistry, willingly blind his eyes and endeavor to convince himself quite contrary to the dictates of his conscience, against the consequences of a future world; but that incredulity does not remove the fact of an after-existence with blessings and punishments. Still it is natural that persons who are rotten and corrupt, should shun or fear the consequences of their evil deeds, and therefore do everything to drown the voice of reason and virtue. As light cleaveth to light, and darkness to darkness, the wicked endeavor to pacify the rising storm of the inner-man by the idea of getting, at their final exit from this stage of action, launched into a state of nonentity in which their evil deeds are buried in everlasting oblivion, whereas the honest-hearted and virtuous have nothing to fear, and are always willing to see their actions of this life brought to light before the tribunal of an after-existence.

If there is no future life, where then, does that uncertain, vague fear come, with which man is seized, when in the agonies of death or previous to them, when about to enter that strange land, from which no traveler has yet returned, and which psychological phenomenon has been observed even among the greatest skeptics and infidels with few exceptions.

How far the principles of materialism, which involves an entire abnegation of immortality and a future life, (I want the reader to understand that I do not refer to the absurdities of immaterialism, but to a certain philosophical system or school called the materialists,) is calculated to satisfy or convince the mind of the correctness of denying the immortality of the soul and an after-existence, is illustrated in Voltaire who, on account of the consciousness of his evil deeds, desired a state of annihilation, which he always advocated, fearing that there might be something more than a state of nonentity, but that, as Shakspeare says, he might have to dream the fearful realities of an after life. Voltaire in his last illness, whenever the hour of dissolution seemed to approach, felt to confess his sins and to prepare himself to meet the atoning justice of Heaven, but whenever he recovered, he was ashamed of his fears, and abnegated again the principles of religion.

It is a strange fact that the human mind, the acting part of the spirit, is so constituted, as remarked above, that it should long for a future state. The principle of this instinctive desire for an existence beyond the limits of this little world, is manifesting itself in all our mental and physical operations.

For the better understanding of the reader, I will illustrate a little more the subject. Is there a being that is perfectly satisfied with its present condition, with the present realization of things whether abstract or concrete? No, because it feels that there is still a vacuum in the inmost chambers of the inner man, that there is something more for him to know, and to realize; hence he anticipates entering continually new fields of intelligence and improvement. If it was not so, that is to say, if we had not that instinctive desire or longing after more knowledge, there would be a standing still in the development of the physical and mental powers, there would be a stagnation in the scale of progression. Only observe the operations of the human mind, and you will find that man is continually on the lookout for something new. Surround a man with wealth, let him have a variety of enjoyments and pleasures, he will soon get tired of them, for want of something new. No matter how interesting certain enjoyments, occupations and positions may be, the restless soul of man requires a change, a variety. Let a person hear the most delightful music, attend the most interesting meetings, he will soon become tired of hearing the same thing over and over again. It is always the novelty which attracts the mind, as the refined organs of the spirit and the body are so constituted, that every nerve when exercised too much, becomes dull and benumbed, because the physical and mental functions of the human system require an alternate operation.

The man of science may ponder over volumes of dead knowledge, and discover hidden truths, but his triumph, his joy and happiness is only momentary; on he goes again to surmount new Rubicons, and strange to say, the greater the difficulties are which the enquiring mind has to conquer, the more eager and anxious it is to exercise all its faculties and energies to overcome them.

The celebrated mathematician Archimedes, on discovering the principle of determining the relative quantities of gold and silver in Hiero's crown, was by no means satisfied with his triumph. It is true, that on making this discovery, he left his bath, and ran naked through the streets of Syracusae, crying, "Eureka! Eureka!" (I have found it, I have found it,) but his joy and happiness soon gave way to new exertions; in fact it only served as a stimulus for new discoveries. Alexander the Great, King of Macedonia, after he had brought the greater part of the then known world under his subjection was by no means willing to sit down quietly to enjoy the results of his victories; he formed new plans, he conceived new ideas of conquest, and the principle of his towering ambition prompted him to weep, when the celebrated philosopher Anaxarchus acquainted him with the fact of there being an infinite number of worlds; yet the great monarch wept, because he could not conquer them all.

It is a fact, that these unbounded and restless desires manifest themselves in every position in life, among the rich and the poor, among the high and the low; whether we mingle with the learned or illiterate; no matter what we do, in what capacity we act, we feel a certain undefined vacuum in our hearts which no earthly gratification can fill up. Unmindful of the present and the past, we are continually feasting ourselves on the anticipations of enjoyments and pleasures which we have not yet realized.

If the immortality of the soul and a future state are to be discarded, how do we account for man's anxiety to have a good name, to enjoy a certain reputation, to be niched in a prominent position in the temple of Fame, and to eternize thereby his name? A variety of actions, as for instance, the erection of magnificent monuments, lofty pyramids and statues, buildings and other prominent establishments, so as to be eloquent and emphatic mementoes of human achievements in former ages, illustrate the above. If the soul is to be destroyed or annihilated in the hour of death; if we are launched in a state of non-entity, unconscious of everything around us; if we are to become soulless, lifeless, inanimate matter, a mere nothing, why is man so desirous of seeing his name or reputation reserved to posterity? It would not be reasonable to take an interest in anything transpiring on a world from which we are entirely thrust, unconscious of every physical and mental operation on the stage of action—what pleasure and interest could we have in securing the everlasting remembrance of our names and deeds? We may strive to have a fame while we are living, but we could not have the least interest in the popularity or unpopularity of our names after our death.

Reader, didst thou ever reflect, why it is that you have a desire to see you well spoken of after this life? Should this longing after a good name after death amount from the immortal spirit, which, after leaving this stage of action, is anxious to see its earthly career well remembered by coming ages? If we examine the secret strivings and listen to the prophetic voice of the soul, we find that although being confined to a prison of clay, it is sometimes allowed to penetrate the veil of futurity, to communicate with unseen messengers, receiving information of coming events in the shape of anticipations and forebodings. It appears further, that every intelligent being has a desire for a constant progression and improvement and not for a state of annihilation. It would be the climax of inconsistency to implant into us the restless and boundless desires for advancement in the scale of creation, and then be annihilated. Is it reasonable and rational to desire a grasp after shadows, to wish for a state of nonentity? No, because as far as we know God's object is to put His creations in the possession of a certain amount of light, knowledge, power, glory and happiness, but non-existence excludes every physical and intellectual enjoyment, and involves merely a state of everlasting insensibility.

FOR THE MORMON.

A Glance at Modern Progression.

BY JOHN F. SNEDAKER.

THIS is said to be a fast age, and I think the conduct of the people fully justifies the assertion. When we take a retrospective view of the career of this nation during the last century, and compare the present state of things with those that existed about eighty years ago, we will be at once forced to admit that great changes have taken place, politically, financially, morally and religiously. But when we examine the history of revolutionary times and infancy of this nation, and become acquainted with the spirit which then prevailed, and compare the same with modern history and the proceeding of men, we will be forced to conclude—painful as it may be—that the change, politically, morally and religiously particularly, is not altogether for the best, nor has the progress been towards perfection. A painful picture of degeneracy presents itself; we now look in vain for that noble, generous, tolerant, and wise spirit which characterized the Revolutionary Fathers, and pioneers of liberty and equal rights.

Our legislative halls very seldom reverberate now with the eloquence of true Patriots, and disinterested legislators; but self aggrandizement rules predominent, and seems to be almost the only motive of action. And this spirit may be said to pervade, to a good degree, in every department of the nation, from the head down through the different ramifications of the federal body. In the place of the generous and noble defenders of the rights of man, we find the modern demagogue and speculator.

The founders of our government and nation declared, that man possessed inalienable rights; and, that among the rest, all possessed the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience; and that no community had a right to interfere with the domestic relations of another, so long as they did not violate mutual or common rights. But now, these sentiments are fast being changed, and giving way to a spirit of intolerance as is plainly evinced from the fact, that at the present time the country resounds with clamors for a military force, to march against a community inhabiting the desert wilds of the Rocky Mountains, simply because they have seen fit to differ from their neighbors in their religious belief and social institutions, and because they have resisted with praiseworthy obstinacy, the vices and intrigues of corrupt demagogues, and have dared to expose publicly the abominations of government officials in their midst, and to spurn them from their firesides as characters altogether unworthy of the society of a virtuous community.

In days of yore, when the people of England, with George III. at their head, sought to trample upon and violate certain inalienable rights of the American Colonists, it was looked upon as a despotic encroachment, and remonstrated against by every available means. When the news went back to the British Capitol, that the Americans had resisted the measures of the British Crown and Parliament, the popular clamor was: "We will teach those presumptious and ignorant Yankees how to respect their betters; we'll make them feel the consequences of daring to oppose us, and their audacity to cherish opinions different from us. We will send them over Governors, Judges and Officers well supported with strong detachments of troops, and they shall go in among those impudent Colonists and teach them better manners." And, when the news went booming back again over the waters, that the Colonists had still further resisted the mercenary and imbecile officers of the British Crown, Old England felt herself mightily offended and insulted, and a greater call for troops was made, and more energetic measures entered into, to let the dogs of war loose upon what was considered by them, the rebellious Colonists, simply because these Colonists contended that they had rights as well as the people of England. The result of that struggle is well known to every American. All are well aware how our Patriotic Forefathers struggled for their rights, and repelled the invaders of their peaceful homes and firesides, and drove back the mercenary aids of despotism. The God of liberty and Justice awarded the victory to the oppressed; and thereby the lesson was taught to usurpers, that every people and community inherit certain inalienable rights, which can not be trampled upon with impunity. But how far do the sons of these patriotic sires respect and appreciate the Liberty wrought out for them? Alas! a mournful contrast presents itself; the love of Liberty and equal rights no longer burns in the bosom of this nation; the sacred guarantees of the Constitution are disregarded; and the same desire for arrogant usurpation which characterized the British nation before and at the time of the American Revolution, is now rank among the people of these States, the descendants of glorious, honorable sires. One's ears are almost daily saluted now with clamors like the following: "Let us go up and teach the people of the Territory of Utah, by force of arms, to believe as we do, and to adopt our religious creeds and social institutions; let us send them a governor and judges, accompanied by strong military forces, to rule and reign over them, and make laws and regulations for them. And, should the Mormons dare to oppose these our officers in the least, or have the audacity to withhold the free use of their houses, or forbid them the society of their wives and daughters, we will go en masse and exterminate the whole race."

I would ask editors, priests, and others who advocate this course, if they can discern any similarity between the treatment which they propose for the people of Utah and the treatment which our forefathers received at the hands of the British nation and its pusillanimous king? What right have the people of one State, according to the principles of the Constitution, to interfere with the religious faith and social institutions of another State or Territory, so long as mutual rights and the federal compact are not violated? Does not the Constitution of this Confederacy grant to every Commonwealth the right to make its own laws and form its own domestic institutions? And, above all, does it not grant religious liberty to all, so long as the exercise thereof does not violate any Federal law? Can it be proved that the people of Utah have violated this Federal compact, or broken any Federal law? No! it cannot. Then what is this clamor about Utah, and this speaking for military force to invade the sacred rights of a brave but calumniated and persecuted people, who honestly differ from some of their neighbors in their religious belief? The cause is plain to every honest and observing mind. It is a deplorable departure from the principles of Democracy, from honesty and religious toleration—those very principles which the Revolutionary heroes toiled and bled to establish. Everyone gifted with the smallest amount of discernment and a lingering desire for equal rights, can discover the "cat's paw" behind the screen—the hydra-headed monster of intolerance, bigotry, and oppression.

Let the enquirer but step into some of the churches, where equal rights and religious tolerance should be propagated, and he will many times be saluted and overwhelmed with the well polished, but rancorous harangue of the intolerant and bigoted hireling; endeavoring, under the garb of sanctity and piety, to excite the uninformed to deeds which would put to the blush the crusaders of the dark ages. Let him step into some of the public schools, and there he will find, on some occasions, those who have the training of the young, and who ought to endeavor by every means in their power to instil truth into their minds, sowing the seeds of intolerance and hatred towards an innocent people. Yes, he may at times find the Principals of schools actually engaged, in filling the minds of the children with the basest falsehoods, and most malicious misrepresentations concerning a people, of whose real merits, principles, and institutions they (the teachers) are as ignorant as the dumb beasts that walk the streets. Again, should he take up a newspaper, these scavengers of moral uncleanliness, who are fast becoming a curse instead of a blessing to society,—from the Philistine Giants of Gotham down to the smallest village scribler, his eyes will meet with the grossest falsehoods, and most wholesale slanders, that the most abandoned fiends of the infernal regions can invent, and which is sought after, and swallowed down with the greatest avidity, by a great majority of the people, without once thinking to examine whether these sugared dates, after which their appetite crave so much, are full of gall and bitterness or not.

With all these things before us, who can say that this is not a fast generation? But to their shame and reproach, the advancement is not in honesty, virtue, morality, religious tollerance, and true democracy. But in intolerance, bigotry and arrogance. The once noble American character is now fast sinking into the unprincipled speculator, boisterous politician, and intolerant religious bigot. Still, with all this, will they be able to crush the truth? to stifle the germ of liberty, which has been planted in the chambers of the Rocky Mountains? No; for there the air is pure and uncontaminated with the filth of these moral lowland bogs. Besides, the God of Heaven has an eye on all these proceedings; He has promised to protect and deliver His people, and He is far more powerful than all the hosts of earth.

CONTRACTIONS.

CASE 1.—When Cyphers are annexed to the Divisor.

RULE.—Cut off the cyphers from the divisor, and the same number of figures from the right hand of the dividend; then divide the remaining figures by each other, as usual, and the quotient will be the answer in whole numbers.

And if anything remains, after this division, place the figures cut off from the dividend to the right hand of it, and then set the result over the divisor, for the fractional part.

EXAMPLES.

1. Divide 46748696 by 20.

$2337434\frac{16}{20}$ the quotient.

2. Divide 31086917 by 7100.

CASE 2.—When the Divisor is the product of two or more numbers each of which does not exceed 12.

RULE.—Divide first by one of those numbers, and then the quotient thus arising by another and so on; and the last result will be the answer required.

EXAMPLES.

CASE 3.—To perform Division more concisely.

RULE.—Multiply the divisor by the quotient figures as before, and subtract each figure of the product from the dividend, as you produce it; always remembering to carry as many units to the next figure as were borrowed before.

EXAMPLES.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are he kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

B.—We, the undersigned, being practical men in all matters appertaining to the arming and equipping of Emigrant and Merchant wagon trains for crossing the plains, renders our experience worthy of consultation, to make it the more easy for the emigrant and trader to supply themselves with the necessary articles, viz: FIRE ARMS, FIXED AMUNITION, PROVISIONS AND GROCERIES, of all kinds; Wagons, Tents, Horses, Mules, Oxen; in short, everything necessary for their comfort.

We also beg leave to call the attention of EASTERN HUNTING PARTIES, that wish to spend a few months on the plains, that we have all the necessary arms and equipments, and at prices as low as they can be furnished in any Eastern city.

We keep constantly on hand, (or make to order,) TARGET, HUNTING, and MINNIE RIFLES, which we guarantee to be superior to any in the country.

We also keep constantly on hand the CELEBRATED SHARP'S PATENT RIFLE, which is the safest and most destructive weapon ever invented, for sale at the Manufacturer's prices, for cash.

Please call and examine for yourselves, as it is no trouble for us to answer questions, or show goods. Remember the place, No. 42 North Main street.

Prayer.

BY G. F. STANTON.

When man had fallen from the lofty place,
Which God, in love, intended he should grace;
When sunk in dark despair, and clouds of night
Closed round his soul, excluding joy's pure light;
When bowed with sorrow, and by sin distressed,
And anguish and remorse deep stung his breast;
When shut from Eden, and the flaming sword
Forbade the place where once he met his Lord,
Then Love, eternal, infinite and pure,
Relumed the darkness man could not endure;
Reop'd the portals to the Heav'nly Throne;
To man the path from earth to Heav'n made known.
Dropp'd from the holy entrance to the skies,
A sacred ladder, such as Israel's eyes,
In happy vision, saw from earth ascend,
And to the distant Heaven its top extend;
On which the soul might climb to Faith and Hope,
And now no longer 'mid earth's darkness grope;
On which the heart might send its pure desire,
By angel bearers, to the Eternal Sire;
They, back to earth, the granted blessing, bear
On this the link 'tween man and Heav'n, True Prayer.
This sacred way to Heav'n is open now,
Nor will be closed, while earth has souls to bow,
While here remains one wand'rer sunk in sin,
Whom Love can back to Truth and Duty win.

A holy, sacred privilege is Pray'r;
It has a balm for sorrow, lightens care;
It lifts the heart bowed down with pain and grief,
And to the suff'rer, brings a sweet relief;
It gives new strength to aid the fainting soul,
When sin's temptations may around it roll;
It lifts the soul above earth's care and pain,
Above its sorrows, and its pleasures vain,
And draws from Heav'n a Faith, Hope, Peace and Love,
Which prove sweet foretaste of the bliss above.

'Tis sacred to the wand'rer, when away
From home and friends, his roving feet may stray.
'Tis holy to the mother, when she bends,
And for her absent one, her pray'r ascends.
And to the mourner, when the hand of Death
Has stopped a lov'd one's heart, a dear one's breath,
And to the suff'rer on the couch of pain,
O'er whom disease asserts its tyrant reign.
'Tis holy, priceless to the soul that wears
A sense of guilt, and true repentance, bears,
That feels the need of more than mortal pow'r,
To guide it safely through temptation's hour,
That knows the entrance to the courts above,
Op'd not to Justice, but Redeeming Love.
'Tis sweet, and holy, too, to those who raise
The mutual pray'r, and join in sacred praise;
Who humbly gather, and from week to week,
The guidance of our Heav'nly Father seek.

We tell you this, for we have tried it too,
And know the thing that we affirm is true.
To-day a year of trial ends, we meet
To bear you witness, that True Prayer is sweet;
We tell you that it bids dark doubt depart,
And brings true joy to ev'ry sincere heart;
It lightens care, and bids our sorrows cease,
And to the troubled soul it whispers, peace;
It ever fills the heart and ever can,
With love for God, and charity to man;
It strengthens Faith, and gives its piercing eye
Bright glimpses of the joys beyond the sky;
It shows to Hope, the pleasures which await
The soul's pure entrance through the Pearly gate;
It gives a strength, when earth's temptations low'r,
When sin attempts the soul to overpow'r,
Which makes the soul superior to the wiles
With which the Tempter oft the heart beguiles;
Knits heart to heart, about the soul are wove
The strange, mysterious ties of Christian Love;
We tell you this, and urge you now to learn,
By solemn trial, what we here affirm;
We bid you call on God in fervent prayer,
And you shall know what we in truth declare.

Fathers, would you have cluster round the hearth,
The purest, sweetest pleasures known to earth,
And have your children, early find the way
Which will conduct them to eternal day?
Mothers, would you have home a sacred place,
Which warm affection and pure love shall grace,
Where those, who meet the social board around,
Shall in the purest, holiest ties be bound?
Then to our God erect an altar there,
And daily offer morning, evening prayer.
Children and Youth, would you escape the pain
Which clings to those who live their lives in vain?
Would you the path of Truth and Duty tread?
Then humbly pray, and you'll be safely led.
Mourners, on whom dark clouds of sorrow rest,
Seek you relief, whom grief has sore oppress'd?
Do you desire that comfort may illume
Your darken'd way, and scatter clouds of gloom,
And may from sorrow's cheek wipe off the tear?
Then truly pray, and God will surely hear.
Sinners, would you find pardon full and free,
And all the blessings of forgiveness see?
Would you have on your pathway shed a light
Which shall direct you in the way of right?
Wish you a hope of those bright joys above,
Prepared for those who trust a Saviour's love?
Then in contrition at the footstool fall,
And raise to Heav'n the earnest, sincere call,
And you shall find, as 'fore the Throne you bend,
That purer hopes shall on your soul descend.

Trav'lers, sojourners on the shores of Time,
Whose souls are longing for some purer clime,
Let us on this, the only way we know,
Together to our Father's Mansion go;
Though clouds and darkness may surround us here,
If we in prayer are earnest and sincere,
If love to God and man shall fill the breast,
We all may find a home of endless rest;
And when the summons bids us to the tomb,
'Twill bring no dread, and fill us with no gloom,
But we in Faith shall sink to our repose,
"Calmly at evening's hour as shuts the rose,"
Hoping to wake in realms where dwell the blest,
The wicked trouble not, the weary rest.

The Licentiousness and Immorality of the Provincial Press

The New York Herald of May the 4th, in taking the provincial press to task, in an article under the above heading, makes some remarks about the growing disposition in editors to pander to the depraved tastes of the public, which are doubtless well-founded charges and worthy of a place in our columns, as it serves to exhibit to our readers the true character of the persons who are in general the loudest in their professions of sanctity. The writer compliments himself and city cotemporaries on the progress they have made in the use of decent language. If the Herald would only endeavor to speak the truth, at all times and on all subjects, that decent language would be still more worthy of compliment—try it! But here goes an extract from the article in question:

"While we congratulate our cotemporaries of the metropolitan press upon this reform, so much needed and so quietly effected, we feel it to be our duty to condemn the licentious and immoral tone of the press in other great cities—such cities especially like Boston, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, &c., &c. Their columns teem with the most disgusting details of crime in every shape. Boston, which was once so highly esteemed for the supposed morality of its men, the virtue of its young women and the chastity of its matrons, leads the licentious army. For the last month the Boston papers have been filled with reports of trials for seduction, rape and adultery. The staple literary food of the modern Athenians is more beastly than the obscene stuff which is prohibited by law in New York.

"Not only do these journals give the reports with every obscene word carefully preserved, but editorial comments are made, in which the filthy details are reiterated and spiced up to whet the almost satiated appetite of a sensual and depraved public—made sensual and depraved by a licentious and immoral press. Attention is called to the reports by advertisements, in which the worse features of the cases are temptingly set forward, as the proprietors of the Broadway bazaars placard their new and choice wares. The newspapers vie with each other in hunting up the evidence of man's beastiality and woman's weakness, and the skill of the writers is exhausted in giving the prurient stuff in a piquant shape.

"The influence of these reports and editorials upon a small community like Boston may readily be imagined. The drawing room resounds with the slang of the brothel and the grog shops. The youthful mind becomes early familiarized with vice, and eager to embrace it.

"The remarks on this subject should not be leveled at Boston alone, although that city stands pre-eminent in the ranks of licentiousness just at present. In glancing over our exchanges from Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other interior cities, we find a similar longing after forbidden fruit, and a similar anxiety to direct the public attention to it. It seems to be a sort of rivalry to see which paper shall be the dirtiest. The journals in these cities are generally in a sickly condition, and their conductors eagerly seize at any stuff, however disgusting, that will pander to a depraved appetite, and, by a temporary increase of their circulation, put a few coppers in their pockets. In the West there are three great cities—Cincinnati, St. Louis and Chicago—and we have not really been able to distinguish which of the journals in those places can claim pre-eminence in licentiousness. It is almost an even race.

"It is not safe, then, for a resident of the cities we have mentioned to introduce a local journal to his domestic hearth. In fact, if he has any regard for the well being, the happiness, the reputation, the moral character of his wife, sister, son or daughter, he will avoid the local press as a pestilence more dangerous than the cholera or the yellow fever, for they can only kill the body, while a wicked press kills the body and the soul together. In this country we have no official censorship, and it is right there should be none; but we do have a law prohibiting the printing and sale of obscene books or newspapers. Either this law should be enforced against the provincial press, or the good citizens of every community afflicted in the manner we have described should combine together and ignore the existence of the licentious journals until they have undergone a full share of penance, purgation and purification."

Louis Bonaparte, Father of Louis Napoleon.

He was a Sub-Lieutenant at fourteen, and distinguished himself both in Italy and Egypt. His philosophical turn of mind accompanied him to the field; and when he found himself among the dirty, ferocious and strong-smelling Bedouins, he expressed a wish that Jean-Jacques Rousseau could have been compelled to dwell with the "man of nature" whom he lauded so much and of whom he knew so little. It was the longing wish of Josephine, and the desire of Napoleon, to see Louis united to Hortense—Josephine's daughter. The lady was beautiful, accomplished, and—nineteen. But Louis, though only twenty-three years of age, was too reserved, too mild, and too little susceptible, to be attracted by the brilliancy of Hortense. The first marriages, at all events, of all the Bonapartes, were honest love-matches.

Louis struggled hard to escape an engagement which, he was convinced, would fail to secure happiness for either of the contracting parties. Those parties, however, were under influences which they could not withstand; and without affection on either side, Hortense and Louis were married in the year 1802. Never was a marriage more insisted on by one side and resisted by the other than this. It was urged by Josephine and Napoleon, as if the existence of the empire depended thereon. And it proved to be a marriage of the highest interest to the empire. Of the three sons born of it, the survivor is he who suppressed the second Republic, honestly confessed himself to be a "parvenu," was elected Emperor, and formed the Anglo-French alliance. Such an alliance had not been known in France since Athelstan sent a fleet in aid of Louis d'Outre Mer.

When the crown of Holland was pressed upon Louis Bonaparte, he resisted the offer as long as he had withstood the project to unite him with Hortense. He was then smitten with paralysis and racked with rheumatism. He may be said to have been carried to the new throne, rather than to have ascended it. Nevertheless he acted with energy and honesty. When Joseph mounted the Spanish throne, he told his new subjects that although he must remain a Frenchman by patriotism, he would always be found a Spaniard by religion. Louis was more satisfactorily explicit in Holland. "Henceforth," he said, "I am in all things a true Dutchman."

The assertion was not idly made, for Louis struggled to preserve the rights of his subjects and their commercial prosperity against a policy destructive of both. The struggle was ineffectual. He was only the lieutenant of his brother. Scorning to be that, while he wore the name of King, Louis descended from the throne in 1810; and Napoleon annexed Holland to the Empire of France. The ex-king left Haarlem in strict privacy. For some years after there might be seen at various German "baths" an invalid of mild, yet not melancholy aspect, affable in his manners, and of extreme simplicity in his way of life. This was Louis, Count St. Leu, whose consort resided in Paris, with the courtesy title of "queen." His residence was for some time at Gratz, in Styria. He refused all pecuniary aid offered him by Napoleon, but repaired to Paris to welcome him, after the Emperor had landed in France from Elba.

Subsequent to the second downfall of the Empire, the Count de St. Leu obtained the Papal permission to reside in Rome. Thirty-two years were spent by him almost entirely in Italy; and the routine of his life there may be told in as many lines. His days were devoted to pursuits which became a country gentleman of cultivated intellect and declining health. His principal enjoyment was derived from literature, in which the ex-king himself took a respectable position. He was visited by his sons, but took no part in the aspiring views of any; yet he evinced his paternal sympathy after the "affair of Boulogne" deprived one of those sons of his liberty.

Louis died at Leghorn, in June of the year 1846. Three months subsequently his body was interred at St. Leu. The liberality of the Government of Louis Philippe allowed of the reunion of the exiled family around the grave of the honest exking. Within two years the condition of the families strangely reversed. Louis XVIII. had made the wife of Louis, ex-King of Holland, Duchess of St. Leu, for which honor the ex-Queen Hortense thanked him in person. After the "Hundred Days," the duchess retired to Switzerland, where her son, Louis Napoleon, became for a time an artillery officer of the Swiss Confederation.

The Great Modern Babylon.

From Mr. Ritchie's Book, "The Night Side of London."

Think of what London is! At the last census there were 2,362,236 persons of both sexes in it; 1,106,558 males, of whom 146,449 were under 5 years of age. The unmarried males were 670,360; ditto females, 735,871; the married men were 399,098; the wives, 409,731; the widowers were 37,089; the widows, 110,076.

On the night of the census there were 28,598 husbands whose wives were not with them, and 39,231 wives mourning their absent lords.

Last year the number of children born in London was 86,833. In the same period 56,786 persons died.

The Registrar-General assumes that with the additional births, and by the fact of soldiers and sailors returning from the seat of war, and of persons engaged in peaceful pursuits settling in the capital, sustenance, clothing, and house accommodation must now be found in London for above 60,000 inhabitants more than it contained at the end of 1855.

Think of that—the population of a large city absorbed in London, and no perceptible inconvenience occasioned by it!—Houses are still to let; there are still the usual tickets hung up in the windows in quiet neighborhoods, intimating that apartments furnished for the use of single gentlemen can be had within; the country still supplies the town with meat and bread, and we hear of no starvation in consequence of deficient supply.

London is the healthiest city in the world.

During the last ten years the annual deaths have been on the average 25 to 1,000 of the population; in 1856 the proportion was 22 to 1,000; yet, in spite of this, half of the deaths that happen on an average in London, between the ages of 20 and 40, are from consumption and diseases of the respiratory organs.

The Registrar traces this to the state of the streets. He says: There can be no doubt that the dirty dust suspended in the air that the people of London breathe, often excites diseases of the respiratory organs. The dirt of the streets is produced and ground now by innumerable horses, omnibuses and carriages, and then beat up in fine dust, which fills the mouth and inevitably enters the air passages in large quantities. The dust is not removed every day, but, saturated with water in the great thoroughfares, sometimes ferments in damp weather; and at other times ascends again under the heat of the sun as atmospheric dust.

"London," says Henry Mayhew, "may be safely asserted to be the most densely populated city in all the world; containing one-fourth more people than Pekin, and two-thirds more than Paris, more than twice as many as Constantinople, four times as many as St. Petersburg, five times as many as Vienna, or New York, or Madrid, nearly seven times as many as Berlin, eight times as many as Amsterdam, nine times as many as Rome, fifteen times as many as Copenhagen, and seventeen times as many as Stockholm."

"London," says Horace Jay, "c'est province couverte de maisons."

It covers an area of 122 square miles in extent, or 78,029 statute acres, and contains 327,391 houses.

Annually 4,000 new houses are in course of erection for upward of 40,000 new comers.

The continuous line of buildings stretching from Holloway to Chamberwell is said to be 12 miles long.

It is computed that if the buildings were set in a row they would reach across the whole of England and France, from York to the Pyrenees.

London has 10,500 distinct streets, squares, circuses, crescents, terraces, villas, rows, buildings, places, lanes, courts, alleys, mews, yards and rents.

The paved streets in London, according to a return published in 1856, number over 5,000, and exceed 2,000 miles in length; the cost of this paved roading was £14,000,000, and the repairs cost £1,800,000 per annum.

London contains 1,900 miles of gas pipes, with a capital of nearly £4,000,000 spent in the preparation of gas.

The cost of gas lighting is half a million. It has 360,000 lights; and 13,000,000 cubic feet of gas are burned every night.

Last year along these streets the enormous quantity of upward of 80,000,000 of gallons of water rushed for the supply of the inhabitants, being nearly double what it was in 1845.

Mr. Mayhew says: If the entire people of the capital were to be drawn up in marching order, two and two, the length of the great army of Londoners would be no less than 670 miles, and, supposing them to move at the rate of three miles an hour, it would require more than nine days and nights for the average population to pass by.

To accommodate this crowd, 125,000 vehicles pass through the thoroughfares in the course of twelve hours; 3000 cabs, 1000 omnibuses, 10,000 private job carriages and carts, ply daily in the streets; 3000 conveyances enter the metropolis daily from the surrounding country. Speaking generally, Tennyson tells us:

"Every minute dies a man,
Every minute one is born."

In London, Mr. Mayhew calculates 169 people die daily, and a babe is born every five minutes. The number of persons, says the Registrar-General, who died in 1856, in 116 public institutions, such as workhouses and hospitals, was 10,381.

It is really shocking to think, and a deep stigma on the people or on the artificial arrangements of society, by which so much poverty is perpetuated, that nearly one person out of five, who died last year, closed his days under a roof provided by law or public charity. It is calculated 500 people are drowned in the Thames every year. In the first week of the present year there were five deaths from intemperance alone. How much wretchedness lies in these two facts—for the deaths from actual intemperance bear but a small proportion to the deaths induced by the immoderate use of intoxicating liquors; and of the 500 drowned, by far the larger class, we have every reason to believe, are of the number of whom Hood wrote:

"Mad with life's history,
Glad to death's mystery,
Swift to be hurried,
Anywhere, anywhere,
Out of the world!"

According to the last reports, there were in London 143,000 vagrants admitted in one year into the casual wards of the workhouses.

Here we have always in our midst 107 burglars, 110 housebreakers, 38 highway robbers, 773 pickpockets, 3657 sneaksmen or common thieves, 11 horse stealers, 141 dog stealers, 3 forgers, 28 coiners, 317 utterers of base coin, 141 swindlers, 182 cheats, 343 receivers of stolen goods, 2708 habitual rioters, 1205 vagrants, 50 begging-letter writers, 86 bearers of begging-letters, 6371 prostitutes, beside 470 not otherwise described, making altogether a total of 16,900 criminals known to the police.

These persons are known to make away with £42,000 per annum; the prison population at any particular time is 6,000, costing for the year £170,000. Our juvenile thieves cost us £300 a piece.

Mr. Timbs calculates the number of professional beggars in London at 35,000, two-thirds of whom are Irish. Thirty thousand men, women and children are employed in the costermonger trade; besides, we have, according to Mr. Mayhew, 2,000 street sellers of green stuff, 4,000 street sellers of eatables and drinkables, 1,000 street sellers of stationery, 4,000 street sellers of other articles, whose receipts are three millions sterling, and whose incomes may be put down at one million.

Let us extend our survey, and we shall not wonder that the public houses, and gin-palaces, and the casinos, and the theaters, and the penny gaffs, and the lowest and vilest places of resort in London are full. In Spitalfields there are 70,000 weavers, with but 10s. per week; there are 22,479 tailors; 30,805 shoemakers; 43,928 milliners; 21,210 seamstresses; 1,769 bonnet-makers; and 1,277 cap-makers.

What hard, wretched work is theirs!

There are two worlds in London, with a gulf between—the rich and the poor. We have glanced at the latter; for the sake of contrast, let us look at the former. Emerson says the wealth of London determines prices all over the globe. In 1847 the money coined in the Mint was £5,158,440 in gold, £125,730 in silver, and £8,960 in copper.

The business of the Bank of England is conducted by about 800 clerks, whose salaries amount to about £190,000. The Bank in 1850 had about twenty millions of bank-notes in circulation. In the same year there were about five millions deposited in the savings banks of the metropolis.

The gross customs revenue of the port of London in 1849 was £11,070,176; sixty-five millions is the estimate formed by Mr. McCulloch of the total value of produce conveyed into and from London. The gross rental, as assessed by the property and income tax, is twelve and a half millions.

The gross property insured at £166,000,000, and only two-fifths of the houses are insured. The amount of capital at the command of the entire London bankers may be estimated at 64 millions; the insurance companies have always 10 millions of deposits ready for investment; 78 millions are employed in discounts. In 1841, the transactions of one London house alone amounted to 30 millions. In 1839, the payments made in the clearing-house were 954 millions—an enormous sum, which will appear still greater when we remember that all sums under £100 are omitted from this statement. All this business cannot be carried on without a considerable amount of eating and drinking. The population consumes annually 277,000 bullocks, 30,000 calves, 1,480,000 sheep, 34,000 pigs, 1,600,000 quarters of wheat, 310,464,000 pounds of potatoes, 89,672,000 cabbages. Of fish the returns are almost incredible. Besides, it eats 2,742,000 fowls, 1,281,000 game, exclusive of those brought from the different parts of the United Kingdom; from 70 to 75 millions of eggs are annually imported into London from France and other countries. About 13,000 cows are kept in the city and its environs for the supply of milk and cream; and if we add to their value that of the cheese, and butter, and milk brought from the country into the city, the expenditure on produce daily must be enormous. Then London consumes 65,000 pipes of wine, 2,000,000 gallons of spirits, 43,200,000 gallons of porter and ale, and burns 3,000,000 tuns of coals; and I have seen it estimated that one-fourth of the commerce of the nation is carried on in its port.

On boxing-night it was estimated that 60,000 persons visited the various theatres and places of amusement in London.

In London, in 1853, according to Sir R. Mayne, there were 3,613 beer-shops, 5,279 public houses, and 13 wine-rooms.

And now, to guard all this wealth, to preserve all this mass of industry honest, and to keep down all this crime, what have we? 6367 police, costing £378,966; 13 police courts, costing £48,650; and about a dozen criminal prisons, 69 unions relieving-officers, 316 officers of local boards, and 1256 other local officers.

We have 35 weekly magazines, 9 daily newspapers, 5 evening, and 72 weekly ones. Independently of the mechanics' institutions, colleges, and endowed schools, we have 14,000 children of both sexes clothed and educated gratis, in the National and British and Foreign schools in all parts of London, and Sunday schools.

The more direct religious agency may be estimated as follows. In the "Handbook to Places of Worship," published by Low in 1851, there is a list of 371 churches and chapels in connection with the Establishment; the number of church sittings, according to Mr. Mann, is 469,184; the Independents have about 140 places of worship, and 100,436 sittings; the Baptists, 130 chapels, and accommodation for 54,234; the Methodists, 154 chapels, 60,696 sittings; the Presbyterians, 23 chapels and 18,211 sittings; the Unitarians, 9 chapels and about 3300 sittings; the Roman Catholics, 35 chapels and 35,994 sittings; 4 Quaker chapels, with sittings for 3151; the Moravians have 2 chapels, with 1100 sittings; the Jews have 11 synagogues and 3692 sittings. There are 94 chapels belonging to the New Church, the Plymouth Brethren, the Irvingites, the Latter Day Saints, Sandemanians, Lutherans, French Protestants, Greeks, Germans, Italians, which chapels have sittings for 18,883.

We thus get 691,723 attendants on Divine exercises.

Business a Means of Grace.

We often hear Christians complain of their leanness and emptiness, and attribute it all to their business. If they are correct in the cause of their want of religious enjoyment, then either they are engaged in a wrong business, or they are pursuing it in a wrong manner. No lawful business—and a Christian cannot engage in any other—pursued in a proper manner, will injure the religious enjoyments of the child of God. He that has the love of God in his heart, and does his whole duty each day, towards God and man, will never find occasion to charge the blame of his leanness to his business. The true Christian, who does all that he does to the glory of God, is never more happy than when full of business. Let him connect his business with God; let him work for God every day in the week, and consecrate all his income to the furtherance of his cause on this earth, and he will find that his business, instead of being a hindrance, will be a holy—a real means of grace to him. Instead of letting his business swallow up his religion, his religion will swallow up his business. To all dear brethren who are crippled in their religious enjoyments by their daily calling, I would recommend the course pursued by Normand Smith:

"When roused to a more entire consecration to God, falling in with the common notion that a life of secular business is incompatible with a life of eminent usefulness and piety, he seriously purposes to abandon it. But more Scriptural views led him to continue in business, consecrating it to God. He put on record the 'purpose to engage in my business, that I may serve God in it, and with the expectation of getting to give.' From that time it was observable by all who knew him, that he made rapid progress in religion. There was a fervor and engagedness of spirit, a purity and elevation of aim, that could not be misunderstood or concealed. He rose toward heaven like the lark of the morning. From that time he found no tendency in his worldly engagements to chill his piety, or to enchain his affections to the earth. His business became to him a means of grace, and helped him forward in the divine life, just as truly as reading the Scriptures and prayer.—[University Magazine.

[The above is very fair for a sectarian—but after all it is only talk; christians don't live it. How curious it is that some clear sighted folks can see and talk about Consecration to God being a means of grace worthy of every child of heaven; and yet when they learn of the Mormons consecrating all they have and are to the building up of His Kingdom, they bellow out fanaticism and imposture.—Ed. Mormon.]

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1857.

The Little Villain Again at Utah.

It is only a few weeks since the New York Daily Times joined the crusade against the Mormons in Utah; but being old in the school of calumny he already equals, and promises soon to out distance, in bitterness, his dearly beloved friend and nigger-worshiping brother, the Tribune. The correspondence of both is "much of a muchness," being manufactured in the same style—very probably by the same person—from materials furnished by the same parties.

We have had correspondence and editorials on "The Utah Question," "The Utah Difficulty"—now we have a letter and an editorial from "The Little Villain," on "The Mormon Rebellion." Persons and circumstances have, of course, been changed, to produce effect; but the whole batch has been of the same black dye—what is familiarly known as "lies out of whole cloth."

The letter published on Monday professes to be correspondence from Washington, the writer of which, to accomplish his task, insinuates that he has been in the graces of somebody in authority at the Capitol, and was "permitted" to make known to the public some things that had recently reached the Departments, privately and officially, indicative of the further progress of "The Mormon Rebellion," "outrages upon the Gentiles," "shameful persecution of females," and "women forced into prostitution." That the correspondence in question came from Washington, and that the writer is in relationship with any such dignitary, will only be believed by the most verdant. That it came from one of the lonely garrets in this city to which "The Little Villain's" poor, half-starved, penny-a-line gentry are consigned, through the dribbling pay they receive for their fabrications at the counter of that soulless "vender of men's, women's and children's bones," is unquestionable—it bears upon its front every mark of home manufacture. It is dated, "Washington, Sunday, May 9th," and appeared in the Daily Times on Monday, the 11th. The poor miserable, half-starved ghost might well forget the day of the month, but not so easily the day of the week. Prevented by Sunday regulations from nosing his way into a police court or other public places open on other days—where he picks up an item or two on which he raises a few cents to keep soul and body together,—the last mail's correspondence from the drinking, gambling, whoring half dozen in Utah was handed to him, that he might earn enough for that sacred day and get his Monday's breakfast; hence the penny-a-liner, unconscious of "The Little Villain's" pressing want, honestly put the day of his task to the "Washington Correspondence;" for by no possible means could it have been written in that city, that day, and arrive here in time for the Monday's paper, which was published before daylight of that same morning.

That the Daily Times receives correspondence from Washington is not disputed by those who have read how, some months since, "The Little Villain" stood trembling, half-choked and confused, before the Corruption Investigating Committee, for what he had published as Washington Correspondence from a bosom friend and part proprietor of the stock-jobbing concern, corner of Beekman and Nassau; but that his last on Utah came from Washington, and that any of his correspondents can get a word from any respectable gentleman in the Departments, is an absurdity to all who have brains to read the letter, and who remember how that, on the 19th February last, the Daily Times correspondent was kicked out of the House as unfit for the society of gentlemen. After this much on the fabrication of correspondence for our city papers, we turn to the charges themselves.

For months past, persons have written from Utah to the Departments at Washington for the purpose of stirring up the gentlemen installed therein to influence President Buchanan to measures against the welfare of that Territory; and very adroitly, as they think, sent on, at the same time, correspondence to the New York press, in order that an outside pressure might act upon the Government to induce it to favor their plans; but Mr. Buchanan and his advisers have wisely taken their leisure and let the first blast of the storm blow past; and editors who took a prominent part in the hue and cry against Utah have had time to calm down, and have next to acknowledged that they have been imposed upon by the virulent lying calumniators who had, by ardent professions of patriotism and pharisaical claims to high morality, gained for their fulsome lies the attention of the public. The charges that they have preferred have been gross and palpable falsehoods; notwithstanding, such papers as the Daily Times have greedily seized them, and done their utmost to lash the nation into a rage against the inhabitants of Utah in general, and Governor Brigham Young in particular. If they would only exercise the small amount of brains they get credit for possessing they would at once discover the absurdity of the stories with which they are continually crammed. The professed Washington correspondence that has called forth this notice contains nothing more than the usual charges; Gov. Young has always been charged in New York city with rebellious sentiments against the General Government, and the people of Utah in general with hostility to the Gentiles. To these we have replied time and again, and demonstrated to the satisfaction of every rational, honest person, that not only were the particular charges specified false from one end to the other, but the editors to whom we have addressed these replies knew that their charges were trumped up, and never once dared to refute our statements. That they might not plead ignorance and say that they had never seen our replies, we have made it a practice to send them our paper, marked, to attract their attention.

This particular "Washington correspondence" says: "It is nearly or quite impossible to send a letter out of the Territory which contains anything like a truthful account of the condition of things there." None but a person blinded by passion would make such a statement. Can any person with claims to rationality believe that in a Territory like that of Utah, where thousands are annually passing to and returning from the gold mines of California, that letters could not leave for the States? The daily papers of this city bear evidence enough of the facility for receiving correspondence from Utah. Not a mail arrives but the Little Villain and his cotemporaries receive something against Utah. The lying firebrand that made the statement was either ignorant of the fact or too dishonest to write what he knew, or he might have said that the Postmaster in Great Salt Lake City is not a Mormon, but a "Gentile." But were he a Mormon it would change in nothing the facility for writing to the States. None but nervous, easily scared, hair brained folks would entertain the idea of an "organized system of espionage" over letters. It has not been done in Utah—it cannot be done; but the writers of calumy, the filthy, debauched low scoundrels who correspond with eastern papers know that they merit chastisement for their lies, and are fearful they might be discovered and get the very thing they dread. That is the explanation—that is the secret and there is none other.

Another charge is that the people are discontented and want away but can't get. That there are persons discontented in Utah is verily certain; that they want to leave and can't is likely to be in some degree true; but what has that to do with Mormonism or Brigham Young? Does it prove aught against either? Certainly not. Is there any society now under heaven, or was there ever one since records were kept by mortals, connected with which every body was satisfied? Verily no.

Many folks have gone to Utah who should have gone elsewhere or stopped at home, but the leaders of the Church are not responsible for any person who goes there. The plea of being deceived is a hoax. Every person can learn what is going on in Great Salt Lake City before they go there if they take the trouble to read the instructions, and discourses of President Young, his counsellors and others. And we know that thousands and tens of thousands can bear us witness that while we labor to build up Utah Territory by the emigration of honest, industrious people, our tongue and our pen are as devoted to warning the other class that may creep in amongst us from going there. And what is true of us is true of hundreds of Elders all over the world—it is worth and not numbers they seek to import to Utah. If "The Little Villain" who delights in abusing the Mormons only happened to have a seat in our assemblies, one of these times when his peculiarities, sometimes manifested among some calling themselves Mormons, got touched up, he would find it a hotter fire than that of the Corruption Investigating Committee—deceit, trickery and calumny might get shelter at Washington behind "I can't say," "I got it in confidence," and the other moves of a guilty man—but he may believe us it would'nt do among the Mormons.

We are not, therefore, to be charged either with the discontent of some, or with hindering their return to the States or to Europe. We know it is difficult to return from Utah to New York; but it is not more so than to go there. There are at the present moment fifty times more persons in the United States praying and sighing over the difficulties of getting to Utah, than what can be found in Utah praying and sighing to get to the States. Did our enemies summon to their aid a little common sense they would be saved the exposure of their ignorance. Discontent is not peculiar to Utah. Thousands this day would leave other Territories and States, including even the Golden State, and return to the paternal roof, jump into grandmother's chair, or stroll in the woodlands around the homestead, with hearts bursting with joy, and find no chair so easy, and nature nowhere so gay.

We could tell the Daily Times and the croakers over the discontentment of some persons in Utah that we have even had folks come from monarchical England to New York City, stay here a few months, apostatize from Mormonism, damn the Yankees and lie about us when they returned home—and all might have been saved if they had only made more money than in the old country. We are not surprised that short crops and grasshoppers have made many discontented in Utah: the stormy winter of '55 and '56 in New York, and consequent want of employment tried the faith of not a few about stopping in Gotham; some cleared out and returned to London with a mission to warn all the inhabitants of that great city against coming to such a bleak, poverty-stricken, roguish place as the very city that can boast of numbering among its elite "The Little Villain." The winter was severe; they had little or no work, and the Dutch grocers cheated them four cents out of the paper dollar by giving them Spanish quarters and defaced Mexican shillings; therefore, New York was the worst place in creation, and we were all impostors.

There is nothing done in Utah of which the people have not been advised at home before they started; and if they went there to have any part and lot in the matter and found they had not well calculated the cost, the fault is theirs and not ours. To charge Prest. Young or the people attached to him with hindering their return is unjust. The presence of discontented people is anything but desirable, and we only state the Truth when we affirm that the Utonians would be more glad to have their room than their company. We could name parties who have had the greatest difficulty to get there, and in leaving, returned much better prepared for the journey than when they started.

A short time since there was a charge preferred against the Utonians by the "horse-trader judge," of burning 900 volumes of law, registers, &c. We believed it false, when first we read it, and all our subsequent enquiries have strengthened our first conviction, and we are inclined to believe that the public generally now regard it simply as another added to the black catalogue of lies from the same source. The Daily Times correspondent has now the Mormons burning the store of Jarvis and the dwelling houses of Stiles and Williams. To this new charge we reply, as we did at first to the burning of the 900 volumes—we know nothing of it: it may be true, it may be like the other, a falsehood, and we are sincerely convinced that it is such.

We are usually well advised, but the only thing that we have heard of, relating to Jarvis' store, is through an advertisement in the Deseret News: he states there that he had lost a pair of pants, and asks the party that had taken them to be polite enough to return them or their value. Whether this is the "sacking and plundering" commented on by "the Little Villain," for the punishment of which, blood, fire and sword are to be sent into the Territory, we cannot answer; but that might yet turn out the offspring of the mountain. The loss of a pair of pants by a Jarvis is, of course, Mormon persecution and enough to prove that Mormonism originated in hell, and is in hostility to the Gentiles, and open rebellion against the Government of the United States, for the correction of which, the principles of the Constitution must be violated, the Cabinet at Washington go a begging from Maine to Texas for a military Governor, and an army of rowdies, officered by priests and apostates, must be sent off to Utah—to annihilate the Mormons!

But, it may be said, can such robberies take place in Utah without Brigham Young's consent and approbation? We should think they could. In the same number, if we mistake not, of the Deseret News—that contains Jarvis' loss of pants, which doubtless will be heralded to the ends of the earth as evidence of persecution by the Mormons—we find that friend Eddington complains of some one taking away a hand-cart from before his store, and requests the criminal to repent, get honest and bring it back. It is not out of the remberance of the folks here in this city, that one of the dailies republished a portion of a discourse by Governor Young, in which even he had to complain of folks visiting his wood pile without his permission; and some of his cattle were slaughtered by and for the use of the party daring enough to help himself without previously obtaining the consent of the owner. In Utah, as every where else, daring, unscrupulous men are to be found, who make very little distinction between thine and mine, and in the prosecution of their profession are indifferent whether they rob Peter or Simon Magus; but the Mormons don't cry about their losses being persecution for religion's sake—they look upon such things as some of the evils to which they must submit while they have relationship with the Gentiles, and at times also from the hands of those who are momentarily numbered among Israel, awaiting the day of separation and burning. But after all, such things in Utah are rare—less, by a hundred times, than to be learned of in other places. The public certainly hear of these things more; but why? The answer is simple and undeniable—every act of the Mormons is closely watched by their enemies; mole-hills are magnified to mountains; and unfounded charges are sent to the States for publication. Though there is not the hundredth part of crime committed in all that Territory in one year than what is committed in any city, with the same number of inhabitants, in one night, the Utonians are held up as consummate scoundrels, thieves, robbers, poisoners, adulterers and murderers. The people in Utah detest crime, hence their quick and public exposure of it and their prosecution of the criminals; but here, in this very city, so accustomed are the people to be robbed and pillaged, and so little hope do they entertain of securing the guilty or retrieving their losses, that they, in thousands of cases, deplore their losses in secret, and nothing is heard of it by the public. If the crime of this city—this same New York, that leads the van against Utah, was registered and published, without the exaggeration of a spiteful pen, just as it occurs every twenty-four hours, oh, what a tableau—the reflection over it is enough to sicken the stoutest heart. The soul trembles for fear of the judgments of a righteous God, and feels that He is long-suffering and slow to wrath for the sake of the righteous who are in the city, or He would consume it like Sodom and Gomorrah. If "the Little Villain" would only turn to the corrupt city in which he dwells, and seriously meditate over the wickedness nightly committed in it, and the polished roguery perpetrated on the simple by day, he would understand the horror of the Mormons over the ways of the Gentiles, their zeal and earnest longing for a passage to Utah, and a thousand times more than enough to close his calumniating mouth from ever afterwards speaking against the Mormons.

We intended at the commencement of this article to have touched but briefly these last charges, and noticed others in the same correspondence, but as it already occupies considerable space we must leave them till another moment. What with what we have now written and the correspondence of honorable men from Utah, found elsewhere, the wise and honest will understand the value of the charges daily published against the Utonians.

Hats Ready! Hurrah! Hurrah!!

BRIGHAM YOUNG has been chased out of Utah! Hurrah! The Saints are in Rebellion against Brigham! Hurrah!! The Mormons are Divided! Hurrah!!! Make the merry bells dance, Mormonism is dead, and "the woman on the scarlet-colored beast" is saved!!!! Christian hypocrites, of every name and nation, shout for joy; your evil deeds will now be covered. Brigham has gone, and can expose us no more. Shout—hip, hip, hurrah! hurrah!! hurrah!!!

After all this noise, what's up? The California mail has arrived in New York city with the following momentous intelligence—better news, fifty times over, than the driving of the Britishers from—"Hail Columbia, free and equal." Now listen:

"A report was prevalent in the valley [Carson] to the effect that a serious dissension had arisen among the Saints at Salt Lake City. It is said that Brigham has been compelled to flee the city to save himself from the fury of his flock. The difficulty had its origin in matters relating to the administration of the church property, we believe."

The christian churches may be illuminated on Sunday with "red, white and blue" lamps and Roman candles. Don't faint over the brightness thereof.

For the sake of some who may be dangerously over-joyed, we will add that it is all a hoax. President Young never stood higher in the affections of this people.

The Burdell Murder.

The trial of Mrs. Emma Cunningham, or as she claims to be, and very probably is, Mrs. Burdell, terminated last Saturday evening. The jury, after retiring a little more than half an hour, returned to the court with a unanimous verdict—NOT GUILTY. The bloody murder, perpetrated in Bond street on the 30th of January, that almost every body felt convinced had been committed by the persons in the house or with their knowledge, is now a profound mystery. Mrs. Cunningham or Burdell is back again to Bond street receiving the congratulations of friends; and Mr. Eckel, the person of next importance, is out on his own recognizance of $5,000. Mrs. C. or B. acquitted and Mr. E. discharged in this manner is sufficient to indicate the little, if any, hope that is entertained by the prosecution of proving anything against these persons. The counsel in the defence threw out insinuations against a party intimate with Dr. Burdell; but his friends have subsequently given the public the benefit of a disclaimer—so he is free and the gossips perplexed.

The old maxim—"Murder will not hide"—might hold good in some period of man's existence; but it was certainly long before the city of New York numbered 800,000 of a population, as there is scarcely a week without some corpse being picked up in the streets or alleys of this modern Sodom, or floating in the waters that surround it, without one item of evidence turning up to lead to the conviction of the assassin. The attention that has been given to the Bond street tragedy was not on account of the rarity of the crime; but the position in society of the victim and the accused.

Who would believe that in this same city where murders are common occurrences; where prostitutes swarm in thousands in the streets by day and by night; where robbery is a profession, and every species of villainy is practised, from a bogus Gospel to a wooden nutmeg, that Utah is published to the world as a nest of unclean and hateful birds?

The Deseret News.

By the last issue of this invaluable journal we learn that the next number commences its 7th volume. Whoever is interested in what is said and done in Utah, can never find a better source of information, and a better appropration of six dollars than by placing men in this office for one year's subscription to that paper. We consider that the interest that all Saints should feel to be instructed in the ways of the Lord, to learn sound principle from the lips of His chosen servants, is sufficient to induce all who can to send in their subscriptions without our argument.

The Elders who labors to extend the circulation of the publications of the Church, is in the line of his duty, and will not fail to receive his reward. The slothful and indifferent will easily infer that nobody is any way under obligations to them. We believe that THE MORMON should likewise have a greater circulation, and would like to see the Elders take this hint and see that the Saints and the world have every facility for obtaining it. Send on new subscriptions.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE Hon. Fayette McMullen, of Virginia, has been appointed Governor of Washington Territory. To this gentleman the Gubernatorial chair of Utah was offered; but he "indignantly" refused to become a tool. Correspondence from Washington for weeks past, represented the Cabinet begging Col. McCulloch, of Texas, to accept the Governorship of Utah, which he at first offer, "respectfully" declined; but on Tuesday he is reported to have accepted the high honor—more anon.

Since the foregoing was in type we learn from the "General Newspaper Dispatch" that "The letter received from Major McCulloch, Deputy Marshal, merely expresses the belief that the Major 'who was not at home,' will accept the Governorship of Utah."

The row in Washington last week, between Mr. J. McLeod Murphy, civil engineer of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and the Hon. Daniel E. Sickles, has this week been the subject of that kind of interest for which Washington City is distinguished. Each gentleman has issued his version of the affair and black balled the other—the engineer seems to have had the best of the fight, and stands more honorably before the public than the "Honorable." The Herald in commenting upon the "ousting" of the engineer on the representations of the other, laments the many symptoms of the new administration to yield to outside pressure in the appointments of public functionaries, he says: "There seems to be a fatality attendant upon all of Mr. Buchanan's appointments in this city and State." The Herald thinks, then, that the best policy is "the right man in the right place." That is precisely what we think and that is all we have said and mean to say about the Utah appointments—and to that we add the tried man, in whom the people have confidence, who is interested in the welfare of the Territory is the man to hold office. If the Herald can grumble over the appointment of men to offices that effect almost nobody in this city, how should the Utonians feel?

The religious folks are holding their "May meetings" in this city, and doing the usual amount of cash business and rowdyism which have ever characterised these gatherings. The tract society has great difficulty to satisfy every section of christians, and is considerably bothered over the nigger question.

Some wild and extravagant rumors have been in circulation in the Eastern States about hostile demonstrations of Indians in Minnesota, and on the western frontiers; but better information has calmed the fears and apprehensions of the pale faces. There has been a massacre of some forty persons in Iowa, among whom doubtless were innocent persons; but when the story is told by the impartial, as usual, the whites began the row.

The Washington National Hotel epidemic is as great a mystery as the Burdell murder. That numbers of persons have died from eating or drinking in that hotel or from inhaling the atmosphere in it, is as certain as James Buchanan is President of the United States, notwithstanding, no satisfactory examination has been made. A respectable Philadelphian declares he was in the capital for seven or eight days and returned a poisoned man, that would have taken his exit before this to the "lands of the leel" if it had not been for homœpathic antidotes. He blames black faces, says they are seeking revenge for the defeat of the Pathfinder.

The New Yorkers opposed to recent acts of the State Legislature, by which they consider they are oppressed and their rights trampled under foot, held a mass meeting on Tuesday evening opposite the City Hall. From three different stands for the accommodation of the immense multitude, Honorables and other eloquent gentlemen set forth the grievances of the people, and their determination to resist "the late obnoxious legislation." Hurry up the kettles and pans, New York and not Utah is in rebellion!

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

BRITAIN.—Notwithstanding that recent accounts from America are discouraging to settlers, the usual thousands are expected to leave Ireland for the States.

FRANCE.—Napoleon has suggested a plan to obtain a loan by compelling the the Bank of France to double their capital, but it is said to have met with a strong opposition from the directors. The emperor while on an amatory excursion, had a narrow escape from being assassinated. Napoleon's munificence in allowing 10,000 franks per month to Madame de Castiglione and other priestesses of the Venus Vulgivava, reminds one forcibly of the "glorious" times of Louis XIV and Countess Dubarri. The installation of Cardinal Marlot, as successor to the murdered Archbishop, was to take place with great pomp on the 25th April, at Notre Dame. The Grand Duke Constantine was expected on the 30th April in Paris, and was to remain there till the 16th of May. A variety of brilliant fetes were to take place during the sojourn of the imperial guest.

SPAIN.—The embroglio with Mexico may be considered as settled, although the diplomatic intercourse between the Mexican envoy and Marshal Serrano, the Spanish charge d'affaire, tends to produce friendly relations, still neither has sufficient instructions to bring about a final settlement of the question between the two governments.

NAPLES.—The official journal of Sicily denies the accusation of torture which has been brought against the government by foreign journalists.

RUSSIA.—Mr. Louis Tengobertski, Privy Councillor and member of the Council of the Empire, died in St. Petersburg, on the 11th of April. His able works on political economy and statistics, gave him the reputation of being one of the most talented writers of Russia. According to the late accounts from Finland, famine is raging to such an extent in that country, that out of a district population of 657,000, no less than 250,000 live merely by begging, or eating bread made from the bark of trees. In consequence of which the famine typus is making sad havoc among the people.

CHINA.—Although the quarrel is at present only with governor Yeh, and his province, sanguinary engagements with the usual concomitants of sadness are anticipated, before the celestials will be square with the English.

MEXICO.—Recent news speak of the country being in a state of general excitement, on account of the anticipated outbreak of a new revolution against the existing government. It is rumored further, that the clergy is going to take a very active part in the impending struggle.

Correspondence from Utah.

THE following letters having been handed us for perusal, we give them place in THE MORMON, as both Saints and sinners may find there something to suit them.

We are extremely pleased to learn of the well-being of Elder John Lyon, and would be much gratified to hear from him. Our Scottish poet's name is familiar to the Saints, and many thousands who have found words from his inspired pen in verse to express their faith and the deep sentiments of their hearts in the song and in praise, will doubtless be pleased to see his correspondence in our paper. What a contrast—the deep interest of a loving father, in longing for the salvation of his children, beckoning to them to hurry on to Zion to join with him in the service of the Most High—to the stream of abuse and calumny that is daily presented to the public here about the state of things in Utah.

NEW YORK, May 12, 1857.

EDITOR MORMON—Dear Sir and Brother:

Having received by the last mail from Utah a letter from my father, who has been residing in that Territory for the last three years, I deem it my duty to forward you the following extracts for your perusal and publication, if deemed suitable, in the columns of your invaluable paper. I have made choice of the following passages, as the letter was not written for publication, but addressed to Elder Spiers, my brother-in-law, myself, and our families. That there may be no misunderstanding of my father's exhortations to faithfulness and warmth of testimony in a private letter, I deem it necessary to add that we started from England twelve months ago as through emigrants for Utah, but were detained here by sickness, of which he had learned but little, not having received our correspondence.

With sentiments of high considerstion,

I am, yours, &c.,

THOMAS LYONS.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, March 1, '57.

MY DEAR SONS THOMAS AND GEORGE.

* * * * * *

"I fondly anticipated that you would have come, and it was not until the last handcart company arrived here that I relinquished the fond hope of meeting with you both last fall. From that time to the present I remain in total ignorance of your existence. I can only account for this by supposing that you had determined to come on with the latter companies, if your families got better."

* * * * * * *

The year before last we had nearly all our crops destroyed by grasshoppers, and last year much was lost with drought, yet through all this we were preserved, and brought through without being starved by the thousand, as was represented in the newspapers throughout the States. No person here, who lives worthy of the love of their brethren, will ever be left to perish for want of bread, for I can testify to this by my own experience, inasmuch as I have been blessed by them, and know that the authorities would not let any suffer if they knew of it. Last fall, when the hand-cart companies were snowed up in the mountains, Governor Young had but to say to the brethren, 'Go and bring in the belated Saints,' and they were on hand to go, and took provisions and clothing of all kinds with them, and some of them went three and four hundred miles to bring them home, in the face of severe frosts and heavy snow storms. Does not this speak volumes for the generosity, I should say philanthropy, of Governor Young and those brethren who, at his command and in his spirit, achieved a work of temporal salvation, unequalled in the annals of any nation on the earth that I know of. I believe you will hear much said against the Saints in Utah Territory, and how we are oppressed and borne down by those who are our spiritual rulers, and that we are a corrupt and wicked people; but, my dear children, believe it not, 'tis altogether false. I have lived here now about three years, and can testify that no man ever said or did anything to me but acts of kindness. No man ever called me in question, by night or day, where I was going or what I was doing. Is this slavery? I can say of a truth that I have seen more wickedness in Glasgow city in one night than I have witnessed in Salt Lake City for three years. You will probably think this a strange declaration, as you may have seen the Deseret News, and read of some things brought up against the Saints, in the discourses delivered by the Authorities and Apostles, and of our reformation, or of our sinfulness rather, as a people professing to be Saints of the Most High God. It is true! too true, indeed, that among so many thousands in these valleys, many had gone astray, and many more had fallen asleep, through sheer neglect of what they really were and what they ought to be, or should have been, with so much teaching and intelligence on matters pertaining to righteousness, as we had every Sabbath from the stand. Some had grown rich, and forgot God; others had acted dishonestly, and defrauded their brethren and the Church, and hence the reproof and the necessity of immediate reform being preached with a voice of thunder, until the hypocrites in Zion did tremble, yea, and will still, with awful apprehension! till the wickedness be rooted out from the midst of this people. But who would complain of all this? None but the heart wicked! none but apostates and those who come here to make spoliation of the Saints by merchandize and unlawful traffic—men who were sent here to be judges of the people, living in whoredom, and idleness, and thievery. And I would ask you, my dear children, could the weak and feeble-minded escape from such contamination more or less? Methinks I hear you answer, No! Well, then, think of the great need of reformation, and what this reformation will produce, and you will see how Zion is to become the joy of the whole land, and how righteousness will go forth from us to the ends of the earth. By looking at things in this light, you will be enabled to judge for yourselves the necessity of turning to God with full purpose of heart, and also why such discourses were preached unto us. I can bear my testimony, that such things to me appeared to prove this work to be of God, and that our rulers were men of God more fully than if they had winked at sin and corruption when they saw it creeping upon this people, until their destruction was inevitable and beyond remedy. Thank God, the Saints are in some measure aroused to their duty, and the sober calculation of acting righteously has laid hold on the people, and they are again with us. But you will say, this seems strange that with all this, you declare that you have seen more wickedness in Glasgow in one night than you have seen in Salt Lake City for three years. How can this be? My answer is simply this—that those things, which would be lightly looked upon in Babylon as ordinary, fair behavior, would bring damnation upon us as a people, to whom the Lord has committed the keys and power of the priesthood, more severely and sooner than it would upon them, although their destruction and overthrow is inevitable and at their door. The history of ancient Israel proves this beyond all controversy. And you know that the chaff must be sifted from the wheat, and that the tares and wheat must grow together until the harvest—now it is come! And the day of redemption is near, when the Lord will appear in his glory, and thrash the nations, and gather his people: when Zion will be redeemed, and Messiah reign over all nations with a rod of iron. Let not darkness and doubt creep over your minds in consequence of evil reports and slanderous tongues, while you remain in Babylon. Remember Hepburn, and think of thousands of such men, who may turn away from the truth, who will be more inveterate than he could ever be: who will turn away from this place to work unrighteousness, and seek to shed innocent blood."

* * * * * * *

"We are all in pretty fair circumstances, so far as health and means are concerned, and only feel a void in not having you all with us. We often speak of you, and wonder how you may be getting on in a strange country. We have had a pretty severe winter, but now the snow is almost melted away, and labor is going on. We are buoyant with the prospect of a good and bountiful harvest this fall. Indeed, it is wonderful how the Lord has blessed us as a people with the necessaries of life, with all the loss of crops. Wheat and other grains for breadstuffs are quite plentiful. You will see from our newspaper that we are making a stout effort to establish home manufacture, and much cloth is made throughout the Territory. We had our first annual fair last autumn, where was presented many different fabrics of cloth and other species of manufacture too numerous to mention, such as farming utensils, model steam engines, carding machines, &c., &c., together with leather in all its forms, both sole and upper, as also a great variety of women's needlework, patchwork and embroidery; agricultaral produce, such as squash, pumpkins, beets, onions, carrots, &c., throughout their varied kinds—the largest I have ever seen. The horticultural produce was surprising for the short time the Saints have been here; peaches, apricots and apples were presented, and were both large and beautiful, as were likewise the grapes. Indeed, you would not believe what a display of almost everything you could name, was set forth to gain the premiums offered for the best articles.

"All this augers well for the industrial habits of the people; but when you learn that Governor Young was among the first for almost every species of articles produced, you will perceive the mainspring of our social comforts and domestic improvements. And should all the world deride him as an impostor and sacrilegious deceiver, remember that no man on earth prides himself more in the moral, social and home-made happiness of his people than he does, and likewise his counsellors. And were the people but half as obedient as they are to instruct us, no people could enjoy more of heaven upon earth than we would. Endeavor, then, to let no obstacle prevent your coming here. You will no doubt have trials to endure and difficulties to overcome, both in traveling and when you are here, but remember this, that you must lay it to heart first to seek the Kingdom of God and its righteousness, and then, when you are qualified to appreciate the greater blessings, you will have all the lesser things bestowed upon you to your heart's content. Many come here poor, and not understanding the nature and work of God, commence a life of repining and discontent; and, not knowing the power of the devil to destroy their future happiness, lose the spirit of God and the promised blessings. But, my dear children, I hope better things of you; you have not so learned Mormonism. The glory of our future state will more than compensate for all that we can endure here, if we are faithful. The leeks and onions are but of small account when compared to the honor of bearing off the Kingdom of God upon the earth, of establishing righteousness upon it, and being placed as saviors to our forefathers who left this terrestrial sphere without the privilege of hearing the gospel, and of doing that for them which they cannot do for themselves in the spirit world. Now, my dear children, go ahead to get here, and you will feel in an after day that all your endeavors, coupled with toil and privations, were nothing—not worth the mentioning—compared with the glory and everlasting life which will be revealed and made good to you, if faithful, in a time to come."

I hope you will excuse this crude, rambling letter, as I have done little with the pen for some time back. Accept of our united love and affection.

I remain, as ever,

Your affectionate father,

JOHN LYON.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, Feb. 5, '57.

ELD. ANGUS M. CANNON—Dear Bro.:

* * * * * *

It gives me happiness to hear of your continued prosperity, as is evidenced by the report of your last conference in THE MORMON. God bless you continually, and endow you with more and more wisdom, that you may accomplish much good among the heathen of this "enlightened republic;" that you may also prove an honor to the typographical fraternity, from which you graduated. It is my desire constantly, and often expressed to the boys, that they should each take such a course as shall honor themselves and their calling, as well as their Priesthood.

I know of no class of men whose opportunities are so great as ours, mingling, as we are daily, with every grade of knowledge and general information. The brethren ought, if those opportunities are at all improved, to be well qualified to honor any station in which they may be placed; more especially so, when, clothed with the holy priesthood, they magnify it, and become filled with the light of the Almighty. Seek, therefore, unto God, more and more, and you shall accomplish all your heart desires.

The fire of the Lord of Hosts is kindled in Zion, and will continue to burn until every abomination and abominable character shall be consumed or flee away. Does this not look like cleansing Zion? God speed the work, and give the humble, the true, the faithful, and those that love the truth, grace to endure all things even unto the end, spotless.

Praying the Almighty to bless you continually, I am,

Your friend and brother,

JAMES MCKNIGHT.

Correspondence from California.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 22, 1857.

ELDER ANGUS M. CANNON—Dear Brother: Your letter of Feb. 4, 1857, was duly received by me on the 21st March, and was welcome, for I felt we could indeed join hands and call each other brother. Did I say stranger in my former letter! banish the thought; cast it to the winds. Have we not been baptized into the same spirit? Yes. Are we not partakers of the same faith, heirs together of salvation, heirs to the same Priesthood, co-workers in the same glorious cause, having the same desires, aspirations, hopes of an eternal inheritance in the kingdom of the just, participators of the same bounteous blessings of our Father—of our God? Verily, yes. Then we are brethren indeed and in truth, Bro. Angus, I greet thee kindly, and my soul warms within me as I think over these things. All that could exist to unite men, together, exists between you and I. We are fellow-craftsmen of the "art preservative of all arts;" and we think that among such in the Kingdom there will always exist a sympathy and a union that will be hard to excel elsewhere. May it ever be so.

I can say, myself and brethren started cheerfully from Great Salt Lake City when appointed on our mission to this place, although we grieved to leave the home of the Saints, grieved to lose their society and the teachings of the servants of the Most High; yet we have the assurance we did our duty. Our feelings are similar to yours inrespect to the doings in this lower world. When first we left the peaceful vales of Deseret, our eyes saw strange sights, our ears heard uncouth sounds; yes, men with the image and form of God would blaspheme His holy name—would blast and curse themselves in almost every sentence which they uttered. Our souls shrunk back within us, and we could have wept for fallen humanity. We thought it would be more than we could then endure to live in such a place among such a people, but we became some little reconciled to our situation after getting thoroughly at work, and, for a time, did not think much of home, but latterly we think of home with all its loved associations, and the feeling grows, and grows, and grows, and we hope the day of redemption will soon come.

We are happy to learn of your prosperity in the kingdom, and pray that you may continue to be prospered. It rejoices the heart of an Elder when he knows he is of some benefit to others, that his labor is not all in vain, but produces fruit to the honor and glory of God. We are peculiarly situated among old members some having been in the Church ten, fifteen and twenty years, who have become dead, and it is hard to make anything of them. Nevertheless, since the reformation commenced we are hard at it, and intend to continue exhorting and teaching as long as the Lord will support us by His spirit, and we hope and trust we will be able to effect a reformation which will be lasting. Every mail from home re-echoes the cry of reformation—wake up! wake up!! wake up!!! ye Elders of Israel, and cry with a loud voice, repentance unto the people. The thunder tones of the the stewarts of God from the tops of the mountains come here, and as they roll along, cause men to tremble.

You will have learned ere this of the apostacy of John Hyde. We do not wish to resurrect his name, but let him sink into oblivion, and make but a passing remark. He walks the streets of San Francisco, when in town like a poor, God-forsaken individual; his countenance depicts the state of the inner man. May he be a warning to all of us.

There is not much news of importance here at present. The most particular items of interest to us being the organization of two small branches, by Elder Henry G. Boyle, a faithful man now laboring in this State. This is a source of gratification to us. The spirit of going home rests upon the people to a great extent, that is, the old members who have come to California and been knocked and cuffed around, are getting tired of it and leaving, thinking that with all the boasted wealth and sunny skies of California, their mountain home is preferable. From Australia we have good news. The work is spreading, the field opening, and the Elders dilligent, giving every prospect of a good work being done.

Bro. Bull and your brother David are remarkably well, laboring faithfully in the cause, and with George and family desire to be kindly remembered to you. Give my love and best wishes to the brethren who may be with you, and all other faithful individuals. Receive my warmest regards for your continued prosperity and development, and believe me to be

Your brother in the kingdom,

MATTHEW F. WILKIE.

Repentance Among the Saints.

From the Millennial Star, May 2, 1857.

THE Latter-day Saints in Great Britain are called upon to repent. But why is this call? Are they not already a good people? Did they not repent when they came forward and received the Gospel, and were baptized for the remission of their sins? Yes: they are, by far, the best people in England; and they have repented of many sins, such as have been made manifest to them from time to time: but they are not yet perfect; neither will they be, while surrounded by the corrupt influences of Babylonish christianity. So long as they are not perfect in keeping the law of God, so long they have need to repent.

Then we say to all the Saints, that repentance and a thorough reform among yourselves are greatly needed. Do you wish to know what sins you are guilty of? Your own consciences will point out many of them. The strict law of God, if you will read it, will convict you of many evils. If you will go and hear the faithful servants of God preach, they will show you many of your transgressions. If you will read the Church publications, they will be an assistance to you in discovering your sins. The Holy Ghost, if you will let it dwell in your hearts, will convince you of sin, and show you many imperfections which you would not otherwise discover.

When you discover anything in your practices which is not conformable to the word of God, you should immediately repent, by making an humble confession of the same to God, and by a reformation of conduct in that particular. Or if your sin is against man, to man you should make confession and restitution. He that sins in secret, should confess in secret; he that sins openly, should confess openly. He that trespasses before many, should confess before many: and in all cases, let your confessions be to God, and to as many as you have unjustly offended, whether they be in the Church or out of it.

If a Saint has committed any sin against God, and that sin has not injured any other person but himself, he should only make his confession before God: he should not reveal such sin to others, for in so doing, he would give occasion for them to reproach him, or such transgression might have a tendency to destroy their confidence in him, and thus he would fall into the snare of the devil. When our sins are not against others, then they have no business to know them, unless we remain in impenitence, then their exposure is necessary, that the same may be rooted out. But when they are against others, then a confession to God is not sufficient: God will not accept our confession, nor hear our prayers, when we neglect to be reconciled to our brother, or sister, or neighbor whom we have offended.

We shall now proceed to point out some sins that the Saints frequently indulge in, and of which they must repent.

SLANDER.—There are those among you who do not cease to slander their brethren and sisters. This is a great evil, and may be indulged in different degrees of excess. You may slander persons who are entirely innocent, merely because you imagine they are guilty: you may have seen some circumstances which caused you to have suspicions; and instead of burying those suspicions in your own breasts, you give publicity to them, and, perhaps, with an additional coloring: your own suspicions produce a dislike to them, and you seek to create these disagreeable feelings against them in others. You do not speak directly against them, for this would expose you as an open slanderer, and would measurably destroy your influence. In order that your slanders may have the greatest possible effect, and obtain a degree of credibility, and produce more serious injury, you clothe them with piety. You hypocritically pretend that you very much dislike to speak of their faults; but you are very careful to insinuate, in a guarded and blind manner, some great evil, leaving the impression that there is something very serious, about which you do not like to speak. And thus you endeavor to instil bitterness of feeling and prejudice into the minds of your listeners. Woe unto you! for it would be better for you to be cast into the depths of the ocean, than to unjustly offend those who are innocent before God. Woe unto you! for your hypocrisy and deceit shall fall with pain upon your own heads.

Again, you may slander persons who are not altogether innocent. You may expose them to others, who should be kept in ignorance concerning their faults, until the proper steps can be taken with them, according to the law of God. You seek to make their sins public, and to create a prejudice among the Saints against them. You do not seek to save them, but to destroy. You place yourself in the attitude of a destroyer. Such a spirit is of the devil, for he also seeks to destroy, and to accuse the Saints, and to stir up wrath against them. Will you follow in his footsteps? Will you slander or speak evil of your brother or sister who has sinned? Will you seek to trample the weak Saint down to hell, because he has been overtaken in a fault? Remember, that if you do this, you are no longer the Saviours of men, but their destroyers. Cease, therefore, your slanders against the transgressor. Cease to spread forth his evil deeds upon the house-tops. Cease your backbitings, and all your evil speakings one against another. Cease your tattlings about your own family affairs, or those of your neighbor.

Mind your own business.

Get the beam out of your own eye, and keep it out.

Purify your own hearts.

If you ache to slander some one, slander yourself.

Speak against your own corrupt doings.

Be ashamed and confounded because of your own evil deeds.

Do your neighbor good, or let him alone.

Let REFORMATION be written on your hearts.

Let life—eternal life—be your motto for ever.

It is the duty of the teachers who visit from house to house, to search diligently after the spirit and feelings of the Saints. Search out the slanderer—the back-biter—the evil-speaker. Exhort them to repent quickly. Make them ashamed of their hard speeches. Teach them that no person, held in fellowship by the Saints, can be evil spoken of without sin. Teach them the law of God, and how to deal with transgressors in order to save them. Teach them that neither the innocent nor guilty among the Saints can be slandered without bringing condemnation upon the slanderers. Teach them that if they do not reform in these things, they themselves will wither away, and be cast out from among the people of God.

THE SIN OF LIGHT-MINDEDNESS.—There are some among the Saints whose minds are lighter than chaff. One would think from their everlasting ding-long of jokes and light speeches, that their heads were destitute of brains, being either empty, or at most filled with some kind of worthless gas. Common sense or sober thinking is as rare with them as fig on a thorn bush. How the Gospel ever made any impressions upon such craniums is among the incomprehensibles. It must be that they considered the plan of salvation a joke, and concluded to receive it for fun. If such characters speak of God, it is to tell some funny anecdote: if they quote Scripture it is to help them out with a ridiculous story; if they refer to sacred ordinances some ludicrous saying must be incorporated in the service. To speak a sober sentence or think sober thought, would almost make their heads ache. In fine, they think gas; they talk gas; they sleep in gas; they live in gas; and gas seems to be the only element entering into their constitutions.

Go into some of the houses of the Saints, and listen to the conversation of the young brethren and sisters, and instead of hearing sound common sense in relation to the beauty and glory of the religion which they have embraced, you will hear a joke about this young man or that young woman, or some marriage which is about to take place, or some courtship that is going on, or such a one's sweetheart. Such conversation is well enough at times, and under certain circumstances innocent; but when such things are constantly indulged in, there is no room left for the more important things of the kingdom of God; the Spirit is grieved away, and the vacancy left in the heart is filled up with trash, which manifests its worthlessness in light speeches; for "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

A Saint of God cannot indulge in light speeches to excess without feeling a corresponding barrenness of soul. Of such things we say unto the Saints, repent. Cease from foolish joking, from light and vain speeches, from all wicked, corrupting anecdotes, from all unprofitable conversation; henceforth let your speech, and your anecdotes, and your proverbs, and all your wise sayings, be dictated by the Spirit of truth to edification, and instruction, and reproof, being fitly chosen and fitly timed, that good, and not evil, may be the result; for to this end is man endowed with the gift of speech. Shall we abuse the gift of God? Shall we make the gift of God scatter the seeds of death instead of life? Remember, that "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

From the Western Standard, April 17.

From Great Salt Lake City.

G. S. L. CITY, March 5, 1857.

BRO. GEO. Q. CANNON,—Dear Editor: The southern mail arrived at a late hour last evening, bringing Nos. 45 and 46 of the Standard, and information from San Bernardino that only one steamer had arrived at San Pedro from your place, which accounts for our not receiving the usual number of your paper and much other late news we had reason to expect.

The eastern mail is now regular in its departure from this city, and we hope it will soon be as regular in its arrival. The fact that Gov. Young's influence is connected with an Express Company for carrying the mail, goods and passengers between here and the States, affords us who are here in the mountains very great satisfaction; for we know, and the world is finding it out very fast, that what he puts his hand to moves just the right way. It is said of the Almighty, that, "He speaks and it is done," and Bro. Brigham's actions are so much like this, that one might think they had learnt their lessons in the same school and of the same teacher. If there were a few more such men in the world, Utah would not only get a mail from the regions below, occasionally, but the news would come by telegraph, and the world would occasionally get a lesson from Utah that would either profit them or make them mad, and I don't know that it would matter much which.

One thing is certain, peace and prosperity are the legitimate fruits of the administration of all such men as Gov. Young. All the world know that such is the result of his administration, and if they loved peace and righteousness, they would say, "let his influence extend over all the earth;" and so it will.

The Lord has blessed His people the past winter with much spiritual favor, and an early spring indicates that even the elements conspire to favor this people in the mountains. The farmers have been plowing and sowing for some days past, and many kinds of garden seeds are now in the ground. The early and well directed energies of the husbandman bespeak a promising and an abundant future. The earth, being almost entirely free from frost, has drank up the water as fast the snow has melted, and will no doubt be much benefited by it. Almost immediately after the snow is gone the soil is fit for the plow.

Faith and good works are rapidly increasing with the people here; such works for instance as cultivating the soil, increasing their flocks and herds, and thereby increasing the advantages for manufacturing all necessary articles for home consumption. A considerable amount of means has been sent east this spring for the purchase of sheep to be driven here. Wards have severally engaged in raising a fund for this purpose, and been successful in their efforts. I trust this step will be a profitable one to the community; we need the wool converted into cloth and for many other purposes.

The contemplated tour of Presidents Young and Kimball and those selected to accompany them early in the season to the Salmon River Mission, is an item of considerable interest. It will no doubt be one of the most pleasant "outs" that could be enjoyed. About one hundred names have been selected for the trip.

A great portion of the property left by the immigrating companies last fall at Devil's Gate will be brought in by teams that will go out to take supplies to the stations located by the Express company. An opportunity of loading both ways will be an advantage to all concerned.

There seems to be no prospect of a famine this season in Utah; wheat in many parts of the Territory, can be readily bought at one dollar per bushel; corn is bought at one dollar, and oats at seventy-five cents; potatoes are scarce from the failure of the crop last season, and are generally held at one dollar per bushel, but some are bought at less figures; beef is worth eight cents on foot and retails from ten to twelve and a half; butter is scarce and sells at twenty-five and thirty; pork from twenty to twenty-five.

The Tithing store house presents an encouraging aspect for labor on the public works the coming summer. It is indeed gratifying, and much will be accomplished. The Canal from Big Cottonwood to this city is expected to be completed about the 25th of the month, on which the rock will be brought for the Temple. Stone cutters are already at work on the Temple block, and the rocks are being shaped for the walls. We fully expect the Lord and our friends will give us peace and plenty to rear a Temple in these mountains that will be an everlasting monument to the industry and obedience of this people; and in which both the living and the dead shall be honored of the Lord.

The Ordinances are now being administered two days per week in the Lord's house built for that purpose.

General health prevails, and the Presidency are actively engaged, much of the time, in public duties.

The general tranquility that reigns in these valleys might well be envied by the world if they were capable of enjoying it; but, alas! their way is the way of the transgressor, which is hard.

I remember you and those who are associated with you in your arduous labors. May the grace and favor of God fit you abundantly for every good word and work, required, or expected at your hands.

With love to yourself and family and the brethren who are co-workers with you,

I am, yours in Christ,

S. W. RICHARDS.

EXTRACTS of a letter from Elder James Lewis, dated Parowan, March 12th, 1857. The past winter has been fraught with many items of interest to the Latter Day Saints, regarding the progress of the work of building up the kingdom of God. There is that power possessed by the Prophet Brigham which stamps all his acts as being calculated to inspire in the breasts even of our enemies a reverence as well as dread of that power by which he governs and controls the temporal as well as spiritual interest of a nation springing into existence—the wonder of the wisest politicians of this age, and although isolated, yet not the less feared; and when we contrast the rotten and corrupt institutions of the age in which we live, and the religion and institutions of heaven which we as a people revere and cherish, it is not at all to be wondered at that we are hated and despised as well as feared; for I can truly testify that while they sink down and become broken and divided, we shall rise and flourish and become mighty in the earth, and they (our enemies,) can't help themselves.

The reformation has spread among the people, and it can truly be said a majority are trying to live their religion. There is a much better spirit among the people, and you know the more we live our religion, the greater our power with God our Father, and, of course, the more to be feared by our enemies. It was so in the days of Moses, when the Israelites kept the commandments; they prospered, and they triumphed over their enemies, for God was with them. The kingdom is moving forward with steady progress, and will increase as the Saints grow in faithfulness.

In the Assembly the power of God was manifest; and could the members of Congress or the Legislative councils of the States be governed by the same power—the same light and intelligence, there would not be the divisions, dissensions, confusion, corruption, debauchery, oppression and distress, so debasing in their influence as we see at the present time through this once happy and free Republic; yet they have the effrontery to publish to the world the wickedness of the people of Utah; but they are so corrupt that they cannot see their own degredation; and thank God the day is not far distant when the avenging hand of God Almighty shall be stretched out over the nation as spoken of by the Prophet Joseph to Henry Clay, and the day hastens as the Saints repent and magnify their calling.

Our Iron works will soon be in successful operation; they have an engine to put up, and I look forward to see success attend this enterprise. There has been a location made at the head of the Rio Virgin for the raising of Cotton and Indigo, and I presume the settlement will be formed without delay. The location is a good one, and will be a strong one on account of the hostility of the Indians. The health of the people is generally good, and plenty is the lot of the Saints at this time. All is right and will be with us, and may God bless you with the faithful is my prayer.

FOR THE MORMON.

Philosophical Certainty of a Future State.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONTINUED.

It is evident that the human mind is capacitated to improve everlastingly, morally, intellectually and physically, and enjoy a certain amount of happiness which is always in proportion to the light or knowledge, the soul is in possession of. The capability of the soul's perpetual progression towards divine perfection, the ardent desire of the spirit acquiring new accessions of knowledge, is a momentous proof in sustaining psychologically the validity of a future state.

On observing the operations of the mind, we find, that its excursions are boundless, as the works of the great I AM, although confined to this coil of clay, it is continually engaged in reflecting on the immensity of the Universe, on the omnipotence of God, and the numberless assemblage of physical objects.

What inconsistency then to speak of the annihilation of a spirit, that is capable of boundless development and enlargement in its faculties, and of acquiring new accomplishments! If it was not for this continual desire after new knowledge, there would soon be a mental stagnation, and then there might be some rationality in the idea of a state of non-entity, but as the soul is constituted, it would be an absurdity to believe in an annihilation of the spirit at the dissolution of the body, because all purposes or ends of that mental stimulus which is implanted in us by our Heavenly Father could not be accomplished; the desire after more knowledge could not be gratified in the short period of a sublunary existence.

The bounds which limit the excursions of the mind when contemplating the wonders of celestial scenery, are marked by the circle of eternity. Should the endless scope for reflection which is here given by unfolding the most magnificent scenes of omnipotence, and the knowledge we can get concerning the nature, size, and distance of those brilliant orbs, not be of some moment in proving the eternal destiny of man.

If this little globe were the only planet in the immensity of space, so that the universe were nothing but an endless void, we might then perhaps suppose, that death stops and destroys the physical and intellectual economy of man, and makes thereby an end to its further existence. The moral and physical evils, the sameness of earthly imperfections, would produce a weariness in the mind of man, who has been many years on this globe, that, the earth being surrounded by a lifeless, dreary void, he would naturally become tired of beholding always the same objects, of passing through the same routine of earthly things, and long for a change. Such a limited range of physical and mental operations would not be capable of gratifying the desires and capacities of the human mind. But we know that an endless host of stars, planets, suns, etc., that numberless solar systems with all the grand appendages of celestial scenery, are continually unfolding new scenes of wonder and beauty to the eye of man. In fact, the results of scientific observations have led to the hypothesis, that every star which runs like a glittering chariot through the immensity of space, is a sun or the centre of a solar system, and that new worlds are continually being discovered.

Man on beholding the millions of heavenly bodies, which are hung up, as it were, on the canopy of celestial scenery, naturally asks himself what are those distant luminaries? What is their size and nature? And if they are framed by the mighty will of God, what are they created for? Are they inhabited, and if so, by what kind of beings? What may be their political social and moral laws? What position do they occupy in the scale of intelligence and civilization?

The reader can easily see, that an endless field of speculation is left here, worthy of the greatest exertions of the immortal spirit dwelling in us. When our minds have been engaged in unraveling the mysteries of heavenly economy, we have naturally a desire to see those distant luminaries, to be an eye witness of those stupendous phenomena which must constantly transpire on the sun, as we observe from time to time changes in the constellation of the nebulae. The ardent desire of bringing the stars more and more within the range of our optical powers accounts for the improvement and invention of all kinds of telescopes. It is, however, not only with the assisted eye that we are desirous of seeing those wonders, but we long ourselves to roam on the arena of celestial scenery, and examine the magnificent workmanship of Omnipotence.

If God has implanted in us those desires, He has done it with a view of gratifying them at some future time. The idea of creating in us desires by unfolding to our enraptured gaze a portion of those heavenly wonders, and then not seeing them gratified is an absurd one, for what good would it do, to merely tantalize us constantly, without ever realizing our anticipations?

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are he kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres e la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu: nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immergé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

"Thy Will be Done."

BY W. W. PHELPS.

The mighty world of man,
With dreadful splendor raving,
Like ripen'd fields of grain,
Or greening meadows waving,
Is ready now for harvesting,
And many reapers have begun,
With songs and pray'rs to Father:
Thy will be done.

Behold America—
The threshing floor of Jacob,
Where all the sheaves are brought;
Let all the nations wake up;
The reapers reap; the binders bind;
They'll earn their penny—every one.
So sing and pray to Father:
Thy will be done.

The dreadful prince of war,
Stirs parties up to fury;
And black and white rush on
Without a judge or jury,
To cope with flesh and foes, and die;
And waste, like fog before the Sun,
So sing and pray to Father;
Thy will be done.

Alas! the day! what rule!
O, know ye who doth govern,
A world in petticoats?
The harlot, not the sovereign:—
With gold and lies, and silk and shame,
She's hid the truth, from every one:
So sing and pray to Father:
Thy will be done.

Let nations wrangle, then,
And red-eyed statesmen storm on,
Our God will sit and laugh,
And so will every Mormon,
So kill yourselves, and leave your room,
Old death is fond of just such fun,
We'll sing and pray to Father:
Thy will be done.

From Life Illustrated, May 16, 1857.

The Mormons.

Who and What They Are, and What They Propose.

The Mormon problem is a knotty one. The precipitation of the threatened crisis in the affairs of that people since the incoming of Mr. Buchanan's Administration lends increased interest to the remarkable community which has settled itself down beyond the confines of civilization, and which seeks to establish among the wilds of the Western slope of the Continent an independent hierarchy, unamenable to United States laws, and differing in essential particulars from any religious or political phenomenon that has preceded it.

The fact that many rumors have gained ground prejudicial to the character of the Mormons; that they are looked upon as the most dangerous and least scrupulous of all the classes of our population; that their religion is denounced as an inhuman fanaticism, and that the vague reports which appear from time to time in the public newspapers lend a color of veracity to the most abominable tales of outrage and indecency, are the reasons which have suggested the propriety of laying before the readers of Life Illustrated a correct, unprejudiced and candid exposition of Mormon doctrine and belief, of Mormon practices, of the origin of that singular community, of its present condition and its prospects under the new circumstances with which it finds itself surrounded. We derive our information on these points from the published official records of the Mormons; taking as the representative of their religious faith their great standard authority, the Book of Mormon; for their exposition of the origin of this book, their Voice of Warning, a controversial publication issued by Elder Pratt in London, three years since; for the defense of the sect against assaults, Spencer's Letters; for the opinions of the Elders who govern Utah at this day, the Deseret News, the Saints' official paper, published at Great Salt Lake City; for statements of the progress of Mormonism, the Mormon, a weekly newspaper which has been issued from New York for two years past, under the immediate direction of one of the "Twelve Apostles." These authorities can not be gainsayed. The picture derived from the tints they furnish must necessarily be truthful.

First, the Origin of the Mormons.

It is now twenty years since Joseph Smith, divinely directed, as the Mormons claim, fell upon the place where the sacred plates were buried, from which plates, of golden hue, inscribed with mysterious characters, the Bible of the Mormon Church, "Book of Mormon," was copied under angelic guidance. Mormon lived in the age of the Nephites and the Lamanites; two nations which grew from a colony of Israelites who came from Jerusulem six hundred years before Christ, and re-peopled America. This colony were descendants of the tribe of Joseph. They grew and multiplied, and gave rise to two mighty nations. One of these, founded by Nephi, was an enlightened, civilized, cultivated race; had visions, communings with angels, and held the gift of prophecy. The other, founded by Laman, was a wicked and benighted generation, given to wars and cruelties, had no spiritual communings, and finally fell upon their neighbors, the Nephites, and destroyed them utterly. Mormon was a Nephite, and a prophet of the Lord. By commandment of the Lord he made an abridgment of the sacred records, containing the history of his forefathers, and the prophecies and gospel which had been revealed to them: to which he added a sketch of the history of his own time, and the destruction of his nation. Previous to his death, Mormon committed these records to the keeping of his son, Moroni. By him they were continued down to A. D. 420. In that year the records were buried by Moroni in a hill called Cumorah, situated in Ontario County, in the State of New York—for it may not be generally known that the Mormon belief is that this part of the earth's surface was peopled by a race of high intelligence and culture, long ages before the aboriginal population throve and hunted in its forests. The Nephites disappeared from the earth's surface, annihilated by the Lamanites. Their records remained buried in the hill in Manchester township from 420 till the 22d day of September, 1827. They were written (so the tradition asserts) "on plates which had the appearance of gold. Each plate was not far from seven inches in width, by eight inches in length, being not quite so thick as common tin. They were filled on both sides with engravings, in Egyptian characters, and bound together in a volume, as the leaves of a book, and fastened at one edge with three rings running through the whole. This volume was something near six inches in thickness, a part of which was sealed. The characters of letters upon the unsealed part were small, and beautifully engraved. The whole book exhibited many marks of antiquity in its construction, as well as much skill in the art of engraving. With these plates were also found two transparent stones, set in a bow—the Urim and Thummim of the ancients, by whose aid the seers prophesied and received revelations. To all these treasures of the past, Mr. Joseph Smith, Jr., an unlettered and visionary gentleman then living with his family in Ontario County, was directed "by an angel of the Lord." By diligent efforts he rescued the precious plates, and again by divine direction set about the work of translating into the vulgar tongue the treasures of wisdom they contained. From this event sprang the sect of the Mormons—perhaps the most remarkable class of people, in all respects, that the world has yet had occasion to place among the ranks of so-called religious fanatics. The votaries who will always be found ready to gather about a standard-bearer whose visions partake of spiritual mystery, soon congregated about Joseph Smith, and hence the formation of the Mormon Church. Gradually enlarging its bounds, the new community emigrated, still under Smith's guidance, to a temporary location in the township of Kirkland, in Ohio; removed thence, after a brief tarry, to Jackson County, in Missouri; and while in this latter place, were "divinely directed" to build a magnificent Temple, the pattern of which was to be revealed from on high. The corner stone of such an edifice was accordingly laid, but the new sect was driven from the State by an enraged mob before its completion, and the exodus to Nauvoo followed. The events at Nauvoo are fresh in the recollection of all. In 1844, the Mormons were again driven out, but not before their famous Temple had been erected. They were a second time mobbed, the military were called out, and the Prophet Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were taken from jail and executed! Then came the final exodus to Utah.

Second, the Religion of the Mormons.

Taking the Book of Mormon as the acknowledged authority in matters of religious faith among this people, we find the Mormon religion a mixture of Jewish tradition, Christian theology and Pagan rites. The Book of Mormon is a work constructed very much after the model of the Old Testament—divided into books, chapters and verses. The opening is the First Book of Nephi; his Reign and Ministry. The last is the Book of Moroni, which narrates the experiences of that writer in completing this famous record, and comprises sundry letters written to him by his father, Mormon. As therein set forth, the Mormon faith is briefly as follows: 1. A belief in the doctrine of original sin. 2. A belief in the existence of a God. 3. A belief in the doctrine of redemption by Christ, and of his personal appearance and suffering on the earth. 4. A belief in spiritual visions. 5. A belief in predestination. 6. A belief in the duty of baptism. 7, and lastly: that the race of Mormon is the chosen race, intended by the Almighty to conquer and occupy the whole earth.

Third, the Mormon Government.

The government of the Mormons is vested in a Patriarch, a President and twelve Apostles, or Elders. Their system is one of pure proselytism. Their emissaries go abroad into all lands, penetrate all quarters of the globe, establish head quarters of the Mormon faith; publish Mormon newspapers, periodicals and controversial works; found Mormon churches; expound doctrine; seek out information of the tendencies of the public sentiment; and report progress to the spiritual and temporal heads of the Church. The existing President is the famous Brigham Young, and we shall presently produce extracts from official publications of the Mormons, to demonstrate the nature of the arbitrary power which is at this day exercised by that individual over the members of the "Church of Latter Day Saints." The Elders are dispersed over the earth, in quarters where they seem to be needed. For some two years past, Elder John Taylor, a gentleman of 50 years, and of remarkably pleasing and suasive address, has presided over the interests of "the Church" in this vicinity, having his office in New York. Two years ago, a weekly newspaper was established in this city, under his supervision, taking the title of the Mormon. This paper is still issued regularly. There is a similar publication in San Francisco. The Church in the United States is divided into two "conferences," the constitution of which is not unlike that of the Methodist Episcopal church conferences. Meetings are called at regular intervals, at which the spiritual and temporal condition of the Church is accurately set forth by accredited delegates, and minutes of the proceedings are forwarded to the Presidency in Utah. The system of government is perfect in one respect at least—it exercises so vigilant an inspection of the current of events that the political, moral and social condition of the world is known at head quarters with the greatest possible accuracy, and indications of the popular sentiment in regard to the Mormons themselves are watched with untiring assiduity. The comments of the public press are especially gathered up and preserved with jealous care. The machinery to effect these works is complicated and curious.

Fourth, what the Mormons are doing.

The present Mormon population in the Territory of Utah is estimated at from eighty to one hundred thousand persons. The chief authority over these people is vested, as we have already stated, in Brigham Young. Young—Bro. Brigham is the title by which he is known among the Saints—exercises a strict supervision over the society which he governs, and his government is that of an autocrat. He sets the example of polygamy in its widest form, having a score of wives and progeny almost innumerable. All reports of the progress of the Mormon Church are duly passed to him, and such portions of the information received as he deems it proper for the Saints to know is given from the rostrum of the Temple, at the weekly meetings held on Sunday. The population receives constant accessions from abroad; the principal body of the immigration coming from Great Britain, more particularly from England, in which country the spread of the Mormon doctrine has been wonderful. It is only a week or two since we chronicled among the news items in this paper the arrival of a body of eight hundred and fifty Mormon emigrants at Boston, from Liverpool. This large company made no tarry, but pushed westward at once, making the best of their way to Utah. The accounts which have since reached us of their conduct on shipboard, and during the journey through the West, agree in representing them as a remarkably intelligent, apparently sincere, devout and orderly community. The number of wives "sealed" to the men of the party ranged from one to twelve and twenty. Nor are these the only present growths of the Mormon faith. Converts abound everywhere. A paper now under our eye, published in Chemung County, in this State, notices the existence of a Mormon church in that locality, which comprises thirty members, and is steadily growing. The minister who presides over this Church, claims to have been ordained and set apart by God himself to communicate His will to the world, and also avers his possession of the apostolic gift of healing the sick, casting out devils and working miracles. So in other sections. Over all these companies the Central Government in Utah exercises a watchful care, and the progress of the Church is duly announced in the discourses of the Elders, delivered in the Temple at Great Salt Lake City, and reported verbatim from time to time, in the columns of the Deseret News.

In order to exhibit more clearly the tenacious hold of Brigham Young upon the rule of the Mormon people, we give extracts from speeches of the Elders in Utah, without comment—each paragraph telling its own story:

"When Bro. Brigham predicts that certain things will happen, if the people persist in a certain course, that prediction will be fulfilled, except the people make a retraction and an atonement sufficient to satisfy the demands of justice, for that is what God requires. When that is done, the sins of the people will be remitted."—Discourse by Prest. Heber C. Kimball, Sunday, Oct. 12, 1856.

"You need not ask who administer to Bro. Brigham, for I will tell you: they are Moses and Aaron, Elijah, Jesus, Peter, James and John, Bro. Joseph, Michael the archangel, and the hosts of the righteous behind the vail; they are all engaged in this great work."

"Can I do too much for Bro. Brigham? No, for the more I respect him, as the delegate of God, the more God will honor me and my acts."

"If I have offended Bro. Brigham in any way whatever, rebelled against him, lied about him, or sought to abuse him, what is the use of my going to the water to renew my covenant, until I have made satisfaction to him? The proper way would be to go to him and say, 'Bro. Brigham, I lied about you wilfully, under the influence of an evil spirit;' or, I have ill-treated and wronged you, and know that I must make satisfaction, and I am ready to do anything that you say.' Satisfaction must be made to the one injured, or baptism will be of no benefit."—Prest. Kimball.

Nor are the Elders choice in the language employed in these speeches. President Kimball, in another discourse, says:

"There are just as good men and women in this congregation as ever were on the earth, or ever will be, according to their age and experience; then, on the other hand, we have some of the meanest, and, O heavens! how they stink! Are they not ashamed?"

Elder Lorenzo Snow, in a speech delivered on the 4th of January last (reported in the Deseret News,) gives utterance to a sentiment which none but he have so clearly expressed. It is somewhat significant in the present position of Mormon affairs:

"When one brother is not willing to suffer for his brother, how is it in his power to manifest that he has love for his brother? I tell you it is in our folly and weakness that we will not bear with our brethren, but if they trespass upon our rights we immediately retaliate, and if they tread upon our toes we immediately jump upon theirs, the same as the people do in the Gentile world, where it is thought necessary to act in a state of independence, and to defend oneself against aggressors.

"It is all nonsense for us any longer to act upon this principle, for there is a day coming that we will have to suffer for each other, and even be willing to lay down our lives for each other, as Jesus did for the twelve Apostles in his day, and as they did for the cause which he established."

We make but a single extract more, but it is a very important one. In an editorial article in the Mormon organ occurs this passage, referring to the rumor of the displacement of Brigham Young by another Governor of Utah, to be appointed by the President:

"How long, think ye, can such oppression be quietly endured? How long, think ye, will any people submit to the dictates, slanders, corruptions, and abuse of officers whom they have no voice in electing, and whose efforts are constantly put forth to their utmost for the destruction of the people among whom they are sent? Suppose ye that the few dollars parsimoniously doled out by Congress can buy freemen to overlook such glaring inconsistencies?"

Fifth, the Prospect.

It is known to our readers that a new Governor has been appointed for Utah by the present Administration. The crisis is impending, and the result can not long remain in doubt. Major M'Cullough will assume the duties of his office in Utah early in the coming summer. It is intended that his government shall be supported by an adequate force. President Young avows his determination to resist the encroachment of a rival officer upon his rights and privileges, and the matter becomes exceedingly complicated. Its progress will be watched with intense anxiety. That there may be violent collisions between the opposing parties is not impossible. Supposing, however, that the Mormons succumb, so far as to obey the United States laws, and that the new Governor is permitted to exercise his authority unmolested—the prospect of affairs even in that contingency is such as to give rise to certain serious questions. They are these:

1. Should Utah apply for admission into the Union as an independent State, what would be the effect of her admission?

2. Would Congress, in admitting Utah to State privileges, justify the practices of polygamy and kindred peculiarities of the Mormons?

3. What would be the effect of a Congressional representation of Mormons upon the policy of the country?

4. Would the recoguition of Mormonism by Congress give an official sanction to that sect as a religious body?

5. Is the faith of Mormonism such as to justify the government in fostering it—or is it a demoralizing, dangerous, unscrupulous, and defiant?

These are questions which time must answer.

The Sphere of Woman.

NUMBER II.

All heroic impulses, all large thought and great action are forbidden by tyrannical public opinion, while littleness, helplessness and dependence are honored as virtues. Thus do we skillfully combine around woman all the influences which may be little; cherish and degrade her nature, and through her, the future billions of mankind. Is it then strange that civilized nations, although able to produce three times the wealth that is needed for the comfort of all, still walks in a widespread pauperism? Is it strange that the millions of Europe allow themselves to be governed by hereditary robbers and pirates? Is it strange that a Republic is still deemed almost everywhere impracticable? Is it strange that even in this Republic the principles of just legislation and social harmony are not yet understood? Is it strange that science crawls with tardy steps, and that thousands of gross delusions still pervade all countries? Is it strange that every first principle of reason and justice on this and many other subjects are generally repudiated? In short, is it strange that our present comparatively ignorant, diseased, ugly, scrofulous and brutish race cannot see farther than an arm's length before them, and still flounder in this great quagmire of despotism, pauperism, ignorance, crime, war, pestilence, and famine, without perceiving that on the right hand of their hopeless road lies the high table land of universal justice, peace, liberty, knowledge, and health.

Is it strange that such blind imbecility rules the councils of the world, when our whole aim is to place woman in the very focus of imbecility, and through her we thus cripple effectually that God-like power of mind, which would, in a single century, were it left free to lift man from his present social hell to social heaven? It is obvious, then, that in doing justice or injustice to all future generations—and, as the proper development of woman should be the great question with far-sighted philanthropists—let us inquire whether her present limited and peculiar sphere is the best for her rightful development. We can hardly conceive that any rational man should regard woman's present position as the best for her full development. Who will deny that a large portion of the female half of the race are miserably defective in strength, in muscular energy, and general stamina and health? Who will deny that the majority of females are deplorably ignorant, not only of science and literature, but of a large amount of that quality of knowledge which is necessary to fit them for the duties of life, and especially for the duties of a mother? Who will deny that women generally are deprived of that industrial education and those opportunities for a fair reward of their labors which are necessary to their comfort or escaping from poverty, drudgery or anxiety? Who will deny that thousands of females with natural capacities to be leaders or teachers of mankind are kept at present in a limited sphere of usefulness, unconscious of their own power? In short: who will deny that our present social institutions cramp and repress all female greatness? The advocate of the present order can only claim that it develops modesty and the affections at the expense of all the other excellencies of character. But even this claim is fallacious, for the love and modesty of a half-developed woman are far inferior to the same qualities in a fully developed being who would love nobly and wisely, and not with a sickly, sentimental, hysterical or jealous fondness, but with a strength, intelligence and joyousness which would diffuse sunshine on all near her winning presence; the modesty of an ignorant, childish or superstitious woman is far inferior to the modesty of an intellectual and educated woman, accustomed to commune with nature in all her diversity; as flowers of a milliner are to the flowers of nature. But it is contended that this high development of woman is impracticable, that when we give her any wider sphere than the present, we destroy all the peculiar charms of her present character, and substitute therefor the coarse masculine vices of the other sex.

This is contrary to the indications of extensive experience. Men deprived of female society are inclined to adopt coarse and vicious habits, and women deprived of male society are not thereby improved. Bring the sexes together, and mutual benefit results. Man is refined—woman is stimulated and inspired with a higher, nobler ambition. Each sex contributes to elevate and develope the other. In accordance with the universal wisdom of creation, the sexes were ordained to react on each other, not for evil, but for good. It is the misfortune of society at present that this influence is too much restrained; the separation of the sexes is unnatural and demoralizing in its tendency. Let the influence and the presence of woman be seen and felt every where, and that influence will be altogether benignant. It will improve the tone of our education, of our society, of our business, of our professional life, and even of our politics and Governments.—[Woman's Advocate.

Who Built Balbec?

Lamertine has the following speculation, in reply to this question:—"It is alleged that not far from Balbec, in a valley of the Anti-Libanus, human bones of immense magnitude have been found. Oriental traditions, and the monument erected on what is called the Tomb of Noah, mark this spot as the dwelling place of the patriarch. The first generation of his descendants probably long retained the gigantic stature and the strength assigned to man, before the total or partial submersion of the globe. These monuments may be their work. Even supposing that the human race had never exceeded its present proportions, it is possible that the properties of human intelligence may have undergone a change. Who can say but that primitive intelligence might have invented mechanical powers capable of moving, like grains of dust, masses which an army of 100,000 men could now scarcely shake? Be this as it may, it is certain that some of the stones at Balbec, which are 62 feet long, 20 broad, and 15 thick, are the most prodigious masses which have ever been moved by human power. The largest stones in the Pyramids of Egypt do not exceed 18 feet; and these are only exceptional blocks, placed for the sake of peculiar solidity in some parts of the edifice."

A Woman's Idea of Strong Minded Women.

Mrs. M. P. Legare, editress of the New Orleans Southern Mirror, says:—Woman is by appointment supreme in the social and domestic circle; it is much more important that she have the finer faculties of her nature in a high state of cultivation than the stronger or more masculine qualities of mind. She had better be a philanthropist than a philosopher. One Florence Nightingale is worth more to mankind than all the Lucretia Motts and Fanny L. Townsends that ever cursed the world; while in the domestic circle one good, intelligent, amiable wife or sister, who with such mental training as serves to develope its beauties, and thus invite the sterner sex to woo its refined pleasures and humanizing influences, shines brighter than a whole "woman's rights convention" in solemn conclave, resolving to don the habiliments and usurp the realm of the other sex. Woman's element is love, her weakness is her strength. I battle against innovation, female suffrage, lady physicians and Bloomer dresses.

Fanny Fern on Husbands.

A lady having remarked that "awe is the most delicious feeling a wife can have towards a husband," Fanny Fern thus comments:

"Awe of a man whose whiskers you have trimmed, whose hair you have cut, whose cravats you have tied, whose shirts you have 'put into the wash,' whose boots and shoes you have kicked into the closet, whose dressing gown you have worn while combing your hair; who has been down into the kitchen with you, at eleven o'clock at night, to hunt for a chicken bone; who has hooked your dresses; unlaced your boots; fastened your bracelets, and tied your bonnet; who has stood before your looking-glass, with thumb and finger on his probocis, scratching his chin; whom you have buttered, and sugared, and teased; whom you have seen asleep with his mouth wide open! Ridiculous!"

The Shakspeare Birth-house.

It will startle many to learn that arrangements are in progress for covering with glass, or rather for putting into a huge glass-case, the house in which Shakspeare was born, at Stratford-on-Avon. The houses on both sides have been taken down, and the monument now stands alone. The object of this course is to protect the house against effects of weather and the further influence of time; we question, however, the taste of the arrangement, and fancy it will be the step from the sublime to the ridiculous.—[London Art Journal.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 23, 1857.

Judge Drummond and Feramorz Little, Esqs.

JUDGE DRUMMOND the "horse trader," as the Hon. J. S. Morrell, of Vermont, styled that immaculate personage, now so bitter against Utah, is out with another letter: it is dated Chicago, May 4th, and addressed to the editor of the New York Daily Times. The "horse trader's" wrath is kindled against Mr. Feramorz Little for the letter we published in THE MORMON of the 18th April last. The Judge's pen reveals that he was almost ready to burst with that kind of low blackguardism for which he was so distinguished in the "Shem, Ham and Japhet" row in Fillmore City, when he sent his run-a-way negro Cato—whom he bought the chance of, and caught—to finish off Levi Abrams, the Jew. The Judge innocently talks about "a valued friend" he has about him, a part of whose occupation seems to be that of handing the "horse-trader" newspapers. His letter to "The Little Villain" commences: "A valued friend of mine has just presented me a communication from Feramorz Little," &c: To the Herald of the 20th January, while in California, he begins: "A valued friend of mine has just handed me a copy of your valuable paper," &c. How wicked are human thoughts;—we can't keep out of our mind that a certain Judge, who had been to Utah, and who went from there to California, had a valued friend with him on the Bench in Fillmore City—in spite of us we can't resist the temptation of wondering, if it were not the same. Was it not Ada? Naughty thoughts! but they will come when the resemblance is so strong.

After speaking of his valued friend, and the papers handed to him, the Judge challenges Mr. Little's veracity, and attacks him bitterly. He states that "the burning of about nine hundred volumes of law, together with the entire records of the Supreme Court and all its appendages," was not only known to Mr. Little; but that, "in his capacity as Elder, he sat in judgment on certain members of the Church, and cut them off, for the reason that they expressed a degree of dissatisfaction at the high-handed outrage of the Holy Priesthood of Mormonism."

That the public may know the unscrupulous character of Drummond—this man who has done his utmost to urge the General Government to oppressive measures against Utah—we have cited this passage from his letter, published in the New York Daily Times of Wednesday. He has frequently made as direct and positive charges against other gentlemen in Utah, and professed to relate circumstances, which he said transpired there, with as much boldness as he now charges Mr. Little.

There can be no backing from Drummond's language in this charge, it is plain and definite. He affirms that Mr. Little's denial of all knowledge of this burning affair was a falsehood; that he (Mr. Little) was in Great Salt Lake City, "knew it at the time" that it took place, and took part in a council subsequently held, at which persons were "cut off" because they were dissatisfied with this affair. All this Drummond affirms, and many who read his letter will, doubtless, from its confident tone, believe it. But who tells the lie—Drummond or Mr. Little? If Mr. Feramorz Little was in Great Salt Lake City at that time and took part in the affair, as Drummond affirms, then he has spoken falsely and tried to deceive us; but we shall prove even by the hostile Anti-Mormon correspondence from Utah that Mr. Little has neither deceived us nor spoken falsely; but that Drummond has charged him falsely, and his statement of a council and cutting off is a pure fabrication.

We do not admit that the 900 volumes of law, records, &c., have been burned—we do not believe it; but for the exposure of Drummond we will cite from Great Salt Lake City correspondence, published in the Daily Times on Tuesday:

"On the night of the 29th of December last the office of the Clerk of the United States Supreme Court, which was also the office of the United States Circuit Court, was broken open and robbed of all the records, books and papers of every kind, together with the libraries of Judge Stiles and T. S. Williams, containing some nine hundred volumes."

Here, then, the affair is fixed as taking place on the 29th December. Mr. Little arrived in this city on the 15th of April, and visited us the same day. As he and Mr. Hanks were the only persons who left Utah with the winter mail, and the last persons from that Territory, we asked him if he knew of anything that might have given rise to the report, published in California by Drummond, about burning 900 volumes of laws, records, &c., the property of the United States Government; and he replied in the negative, and handed us a copy of his letter to the New York Herald, in which he denied all knowledge of the affair. In Mr. Little's letter to the Herald he states that he left Great Salt Lake City on the 11th Dec.; and from other sources we learn that the mail brought by him and Mr. Hanks arrived at Independence, after a severe stormy journey across the Plains, on the 28th of February. Now admitting that the Government books and records were burned, as Drummond asserts, Mr. Little could really know nothing of it, for he had left the city with the mail for the States eighteen days before the affair is said to have occurred, as is now shown by the Daily Times of Tuesday. Mr. Little was on the Plains, in the midst of deep snows, at the very time Drummond reports him taking part in a council in Great Salt Lake City. Who is the calumniator? Who lies? Who manufactures stories against the Utonians? Who but the most bigotted, besotted and wicked could place confidence in a word Drummond would say after this exposure of his unfounded charge against Mr. Little.

Though we have sustained the truthfulness of Mr. Little's statement, by referring to the date furnished by the correspondent of the Daily Times, we by no means admit that the destruction of 900 volumes of law, Supreme Court records, &c., ever took place. We know nothing of it, don't believe it, never heard of it from a respectable source. By the by, this same correspondent of the Daily Times changes the story already, as seen in the foregoing quotation. At first, all creation was to be moved, the Mormons had insulted the General Government, had taken 900 volumes of law—the gift of the Government to the Territory—had taken the records, &c., of the Supreme Court and burned them—yes, burned them—and thereby had shown their contempt for Uncle Sam as much as if they had insulted the stars and stripes; fire, sword, blood and thunder were to follow, all for the burning of the Government property. But in this last batch from "the Little Villain's" correspondent we read that the 900 volumes were not, after all the noise, Uncle's property, but the libraries of two apostate Mormons that had been thrown into the nameless place at the far end of "an adjoining yard." Go it, gentlemen; give us another edition.

However unfortunate it may be for those who are not steeped in crime; but have just slipped to a one side a little, it is nevertheless a fact that when a man convicted of falsehood tells the truth no one believes him. That the "horse-trader" can speak the truth may be questionable in some minds, that he does it at any time, we don't believe. We have time and again exposed him, and in this article his culpability is as clear as two and two make four. We shall only notice the next item in his last letter and let that suffice for confirmation of our conclusions.

Mr. Little denied all knowledge of five or six young men from Missouri and Iowa, being incarcerated in the Penitentiary at Great Salt Lake City. Drummond comes out furiously and says that Mr. Little's statement about only three Indians being in the Penitentiary "is a gratuitous and unmitigated falsehood," that Mr. L. knew it was such and adds that "there were at least four young men in the Utah Penitentiary." Of course, acting on the proverb, we can't believe the Judge should he even speak the truth. But in addition to Drummond's former habits being against him, we discover enough in his reply, conflicting with his first statement, to warrant us to discredit him again on his own words.

Everybody has heard something of the boy's story of "fifty black cats in our garret." When questioned, the number became beautifully less, till he was certain "there were at least two black cats, our cat and another." The judge's first revelation had it that "there were five or six young men from Missouri and Iowa, incarcerated in the Penitentiary at Great Salt Lake City," Mr. Little denies the statement and the judge's young men, like the boy's black cats, begin to vanish: he says "there were at least four." Another question or two and the judge's four, would vanish to at least—I said so.

We have examined enough at present. We wish no one to conclude that we write to excuse any measures of the police at Great Salt Lake City. Should "five or six," or "at least four," or forty, fifty or sixty young men from Missouri and Iowa, or ten times more out of all the States of the Union be dealt with by the civil authorities there, they will be justly dealt with, and should others think otherwise, and have any right to meddle, we doubt not that the Salt Lakers can render an account of their course and take care of themselves.

THE List of Emigrants published in another column are from Denmark, Sweden, and Norway; only three or four of the company are English and Americans.

Arrival.

ELDER SAMUEL H. B. SMITH arrived in this city on Tuesday morning from St. Louis. Bro. Smith is a nephew of the Prophet Joseph. His father, Elder Samuel H. Smith, was brother to Joseph, and one of the eight persons who witness to the world that they saw and handled the plates from which was translated the Book of Mormon. He was appointed on a mission to the United States in April, 1856, and left Great Salt Lake City, in company with the Apostles and Elders who crossed the plains that summer. He has, since he arrived in the States, been visiting his relatives, and laboring in the West, under the direction of Prest. Erastus Snow, up to the last conference held at St. Louis, April 6th, when he was appointed to go on a mission to England, and is this far on his way.

Life Illustrated.

WE publish on our front page a very fair article on Mormonism, from Life Illustrated. There are inacuracies in the article; but, obviously, not intended. The most salient error is representing Joseph and Hyrum Smith, as being taken out of their prison and executed.

To the uninitiated, this would seem as if they had been tried, condemned and executed to satisfy the law of the land—or even Lynch. But these two great men fell not thus. They were assassinated in prison, though Tom Ford, the Governor, had pledged his honor and that of the State of Illinois, that their persons would be secure there from injury or insult: a promise made to the martyrs and to their friends, after the officers of the troops had pledged themselves to the Governor to defend the lives of these worthy men. They were ASSASSINATED in prison, unconvicted of crime, and their blood cries to heaven for vengeance.

Messrs. Fowler and Wells are enterprising men—men of great talent. They are great reformers in their line; and, as writers on general instruction, they are ahead of their generation. They are in the habit of devoting care and attention to what they profess to be engaged in; and, to this, we presume, and to their good common sense, uncorrupted by bigotry, are we indebted for a potice, untainted with hell, fire and brimstone.

Notice.

THE Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Philadelphia assemble for worship in the Arch Street Assembly Rooms, on the north-east corner of Ninth and Arch Streets, every Sunday morning, at half-past ten o'clock, in the afternoon at three, and in the evening at half-past seven, Preaching morning and evening. The public are invited to attend.

The Presiding Elders of Branches connected with the Philadelphia Conference, and scattered members or others in that region of country, who may wish to procure the Books published by this Church, should send their orders to President Angus M. All newspapers intended for "our" eyes, should be addressed simply, Editor of THE MORMON, New York.

The Next Presidential Campaign.

RECENTLY, the N. Y. Herald published in its most prominent column a short address to the friends of Col. John C. Fremont, urging them to organize committees in every town and village to take the necessary steps to bring him in a proper manner before the public a second time for the Presidency of the United States. What has changed the Herald so suddenly is best known to himself: however, he says to the public that it is the demoralization of both Republican and Democratic parties, which renders a Union candidate necessary—and that candidate is Mr. Millard Fillmore. As a new feature in the political world, we publish the Herald's

NOTICE TO THE FRIENDS OF MR. FILLMORE.—In behalf of numerous supporters of Mr. Fillmore, we call upon his friends throughout the country to proceed without further delay to organize for the campaign of 1860. The dismantled condition of the Democratic and Republican forces, and the great issues which are operating to divide the people of the Union into two absorbing sectional parties, call for the immediate organization of a national Union conservative party to stand as mediator between the North and the South in the next Presidential election. Many friends of Mr. Fillmore believe that in the eight hundred thousand votes which he received last November, from all parts of the Union, there is still existing the nucleus upon which to build a conquering party in 1860. To this end it is desirable, not only that Mr. Fillmore's adherents should proceed in every State, county, city, town and hamlet, to re-organize for active service, but that from every quarter such an impulse shall be given to the American National Convention of the 2d of June, at Louisville, Ky., as shall result in the enthusiastic re-construction of the party upon the genuine, broad and liberal principles of the Constitution and the Union.

General.

INFORMED by our printer that "copy enough is already in hand," we are forced to say but little editorially this week. Since our last issue we have been favored with the best attention of our city cotemporaries, especially the Daily Times and Tribune. They have published anonymous correspondence from Utah by the yard. To have noticed it this week would be like sweeping the stoop of the door while the snow is falling thicker and heavier: as their lies break no bones, we can afford to bide our time. It is very evident that the writers mean to clear out of Utah, and have concluded to spend their last moments profitably. If the usual "ten dollars" a letter have been paid, Utah has cost the "Little Villain" and "Striker"-Greeley considerably this week.

We have just received letters and papers from Utah: all is peace and quietness. Poor mortals out there—they dream not of the anxiety they create in this christian, pure, and immaculate city.

The Governorship of Utah is still before the people. Col. McCulloch has again rejected the offer so fervently urged upon him, and President Buchanan is reported to be hunting up some western gentleman. Drummond got to Washington last week, and for a glass of rum sling, over and above the usual fee, he enjoyed the reputation for one day only, of having received the offer of the gubernatorial chair. It was added to the report that the judge would take the Governorship, if an army was sent out with him. Next day, of course, the report was contradicted. Drummond is to be laid on the shelf. After the news of Governor Young's flight from Utah there was a rush of applicants for the office—they thought if the "Lion" had cleared out, they might venture; but the last mail's contradiction of the report has beautifully diminished the number of aspirants.

Some of our cotemporaries begin to apprehend that the reports of the terrible state of things in Utah, have been over done. The writers themselves are obliged to ask credence to their letters. But a little time longer and the ding dong will be over.

Thursday's dispatch from Washington says that Gov. Wright, of Ia., is the person selected by the administration for the Governorship of Utah.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

ENGLAND.—The new Parliament was opened on the 7th of May. The Queen's speech was delivered by the Lord Chancellor, the Queen's state of health preventing her from performing the ceremony in person. The speech gives a very encouraging summary of the present status quo of the nation, touching very slightly the yet unsettled state of diplomatic relations with the United States relative to the central American question. Sir John Ramsden is appointed under Secretary of War in the British government. According to news received from Sir James Brooke, 2,000 Chinese have been massacred in Borneo. Lady Franklin has purchased a steam yacht to be sent out in search of her ill-fated husband; Captain McClintock, the celebratad Arctic voyager is to take the command of the vessel. A scientific exploring expedition under the sanction of Government is to make a tour through the western portion of British America. It is rumored that the East India Company is to take an active part in the operations against China. The Archduke Maximilian of Austria and the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia are said to be about to visit Queen Victoria.

FRANCE.—A suspension of the embarkation of troops for China has been ordered by the Minister of Marines. The Swiss question is at last in a fair way to be settled, as Count Hatzfeldt is stated to have been instructed by the King of Prussia to sign the Neuchatel treaty. Senator Sumner refused accepting a public dinner of American residents in Paris. The Russian Grand Duke continues visiting the curiosities of the capital and to receive the greatest honors. The present unsettled state in the Danubian principalities seems to cause great uneasiness in diplomatic circles.

AUSTRIA.—Rumors of the probability of an early resumption of a diplomatic intercourse with Sardinia.

SPAIN.—The Government seems willing to settle amicably with Mexico, although, in some diplomatic circles, a speedy arrangement of the impending difficulties is doubtful. In Malaga and other places where public order has been lately disturbed, the martial law is in force. Several men-of-war and two transports were to sail with troops for Havana.

RUSSIA.—A treaty of commerce has been concluded with Japan, according to which the Japanese ports of Simoda, Hakodadi, and Nangasaki were to be opened.

DENMARK.—It is rumored that the king will be induced by the impending difficulties of his reign to abdicate.

PERSIA.—Hostilities continued. The city of Mohammerah was taken by the British on the 26th April, after a sanguinary engagement. The Persian army was retreating in great disorder.

CHINA.—The difficulties with the celestials assume a more and more serious character, outrages are being committed against the flags of all nations. An Indo-British army and fleet is concentrating in order to maintain the order of England.

MEXICO.—The excitement about the Spanish question is dying off. The difficulties between the government and the clergy appear to be settled, by the latter promising to be faithful to the new Constitution which is to take effect on the 16th of Sept., and by offering a loan.

NICARAGUA.—Walker is reported to have evacuated Rivas and gone on board a man-of-war at San Juan del Sur—this is denied by friends.

NEW GRANADA.—The inauguration of President Ospina came off very quietly on the 24th of April. Much hope is entertained of a more sober and practical policy by the new government.

Correspondence of Judge Appleby.

NEW YORK, May 19th, 1857.

EDITOR OF THE MORMON—Dear Sir: I have noticed for several weeks past a general tirade of abuse and falsehood heralded forth and circulated freely in the "respectable journals" of the day, and editors as well as the writers have been breathing the most bitter and acrimonious spirit possible against Governor Young and the Mormons. Some recommending one measure, and some another, for their total annihilation and extinction, and blotting Utah out of existence; some for sending a "military Governor to Utah," backed by United States troops, to supplant Brigham Young—make the Mormons respect the laws of the United States, and compel them to conform to the regulations and institutions of Christian society." On the other hand, "disorganize Utah, and annex it to California, Oregon," &c.

In reply to the foregoing absurd and ridiculous notions recommended and promulgated by aspiring demagogues and religious fanatics, for political purposes, party prejudices and sectional strife, permit me to enquire of them, why all this excitement? What have the Mormons done? What law have they transgressed? What authority have they set at defiance? Whom have they wronged or molested? Where is one instance of their disloyalty? Are there any Kansas Editions in Utah? Are not her laws good and wholesome? Do not her citizens attend to their own business? Has she not combatted all opposition, and risen to influence and prosperity unprecedented in the annals of history? Let the calumniators of Utah and of the Mormons answer.

Who is the originator of the present crusade against Gov. Young and the Mormons, and which has been so freely expatiated upon by the public press?

Is not a certain "Honorable" Associate (would be chief) Justice of Utah the originator?

Perhaps some may enquire who this "Hon." Gentleman is—this "Honorable" who has got his ire up, and who met with so much disrespect in Utah. Being pretty well posted in regard to the gentleman, I will propound a few questions for him to answer; and when a truthful answer is given, all surprise will, no doubt, cease about his not being respected in Utah. For certainly if a man—and particularly a Judge—does not respect himself, he cannot consistently expect any one else to have respect for him.

Question 1. Hon. Sir, have you a lawful wife and several children residing at Oquaqua, in the State of Illinois? Or have you been divorced from her?

2. Did you leave them there in the spring of 1855, and go to Washington City to get your credentials and instructions from the Department, previous to your departure for Utah, to enter upon the duties of an Associate Justice?

3. Did you while at Washington visit a house of prostitution kept by one Mrs. ——— in ——— street?

4. Was there a nymph boarding there who occupied two rooms in said house, and who went by the name of Ada Carroll, alias Mary Carroll, and whose real name was Mary Fletcher, formerly of Baltimore; and who had a husband named Charles Fletcher, by occupation a school teacher; likewise a mother by name of Ridgley, both residing in Baltimore at the time?

5. Has not said Ada a finger separated at the middle joint on her left hand, and a slight impediment in her speech?

6. Did you exclaim the first time you beheld her at said house of ill-fame—"My Lord, is it possible I am going to love a whore. You are the same person I saw a few nights since in a dream?"

7. Did you leave Washington, taking said Ada along with you, on the 19th day of April, 1855, for Utah—proceed as far as Baltimore, and put up at the "Eutaw House as husband and wife?

8. Did you pursue your journey, arrive at Independence, Mo., call on Col. Hall, and introduce said "Ada" as Mrs. "Judge ———;" and did not Col. Hall make a dinner-party on the occasion of your arrival, and invite several ladies and gentlemen of Independence to participate with you?

9. Did you on your arrival at Utah introduce said Ada as Mrs. Judge ——— to Chief Justice Kinney, wife, daughter, and others?

10. Did you say to Mr. Silas Richards, of Utah, (a relative of your wife in Illinois) in reply to the question: "Is the wife you had in Illinois still living?" "Yes, but I have been divorced from her?"

11. Have you held a regular correspondence with your family in Illinois, while you were in Utah?

12. Did Ada draw some two thousand dollars (was it the fruits of prostitution?) she had deposited in a bank in Washington, and take it with her to Utah—and did you make usury loans of that means, at 30 and 40 per cent while in Utah?

13. Did you have said Ada sitting beside you on the Bench, while you were holding courts at Fillmore City, Utah?

14. Did not the people of Utah inform you that they knew the character of the woman, and that it was a high insult to them, and a disgrace to the General Government that sent you, for you to sit as a Judge with a notorious prostitute on the Bench beside you—and did you not thereby forfeit all respect and esteem of the people by pursuing such a course?

15. Did you not have persons arrested in Utah, on charge of "contempt of Court" (when your court was not in Session)—have them manacled and conveyed; guarded like felons, through snows and inclement weather, from Provo City to Fillmore City—some one hundred and twenty-five miles—at an enormous expense to the government, and all ended in a judicial farce?

16. Did you not, while residing in Utah, speculate in purchasing runaway negroes, from Missourians returning from California, buying and selling horses, Indian claims, land warrants, loaning money at enormous usury, &c., instead of attending to the duties of the office to which you were appointed?

17. Did you not send your negro "Cato," to assault one Levi Abrams, a Jew, at Fillmore City, last January, one year ago, because the Jew made some remarks in relation to your Ada?

18. Did you order Mr. Heywood, the Marshal, to incur unnecessary, and ridiculous expenses, in your courts; and subsequently write to the General Government not to allow them?

19. Have you not used your utmost endeavors, and influence, to malign the people of Utah, and Gov. Young, to the General Government, because you could not ride over them, and did not receive that reverential obeisance, the dignity of your office entitled you to? But did you respect yourself; and did you not busy yourself with the domestic institutions and relations of the Mormons, instead of attending to your own business?

20. Did you not continue writing falsehoods about Gov. Young and the Mormons, dating your letters at G. S. L. City, &c., long after you left Utah, and knew not anything concerning Utah, or the affairs there, only by report, to blind the eyes of the public in the States, impose upon editors, and produce excitement, and ill feeling towards the Mormons, and bring them in collision with the General Government, if 'you possibly could, and thereby endeavor to screen yourself?

21. Do you not know that you have wilfully and maliciously lied about Gov. Young, and the Mormons, in charging them with the murder of Lieut. Gunnison and Col. Babbitt, and that it will revert upon your own head?

22. Have you returned home to your "divorced" wife again—please inform us where you left "Ada," and how much you made by using her Money, and if she got the profits, or any of the principal?

23. Dare you meet Col. Hall of Independence, Mo., or have you seen him since you introduced "Ada" as Mrs. Judge ——, to him, and to the ladies at his house, and have you ever heard of a remark that is reported Col. Hall made, in reference to your insult, "If ever I meet Judge ———, I will shoot the damned rascal!

The Judge will please answer the foregoing questions and make a clean breast of it, and then the public will know and understand who the characters are, that are all the while maligning the Mormons.

Utah and the Mormons appear to engross the attention of the greater portion of the public press, at the present time, and editors are publishing all manner of absurdities, and falsehoods in relation to them, to prejudice the public mind, and militate against their interests, and no refutation or reply is scarcely ever permitted to appear in their behalf. No reason, no argument, or principles advanced or adduced, only contumely, falsehoods and ridicule, to refute the doctrine, or faith of the Mormons?

Why do not the clergy, and press come out, and by scripture, reason, and common sense, socially, morally, religiously, philisophically, and politically, prove, and show, to the Mormons their error. These are the weapons to conquer, instead of persecution, oppression, and vituperation. But is there not a political object in view? And are not political demagogues and charlatans leading the van, with the clergy in the back ground? Hence the chicanery, the "hue and cry" and the "uproar upon Mars Hill."

Utah is increasing in numbers, in influence, and in power, unparalleled. All eyes are turned towards her. Rulers, and people, perceive vitality and union in Mormonism. They cannot kill it, nor stop its increase. They know not what to do with it, or how to manage it. It is something new to cope with. Utah is about knocking at the door of Congress, asking for admission as a sovereign state, agreeably to the constitution of the United States, with a "Republican form of Government." If admitted (and there is no reason for refusing her admission—constitutionally or otherwise) she will send her Senators, and Representatives to Congress, and in the present equal balanced force of parties their unpartizan votes would necessarily sway matters—hence the outcry.

If the law organizing Utah be abrogated by Congress (as some wish it to be accomplished, and which Congress has no constitutional right to do) and she is attached to California, Oregon, &c., the Mormons, in the place of sending four or five Representatives to Congress, will send a dozen, for they will be able to elect them in the States and Territories to which they are attached.

Now what is the Government or people going to do with Utah and the Mormons? Let me inform them, they cannot do anything with Mormonism. Kick it, belie it, drive, expatriate, murder, mob, defame, take away Constitutional rights and privileges, oppress, publish, and calumniate it, hate it or love it, still Mormonism is just the same. Onward, upward and eternal, it will never be overcome. God is at the helm, He is its author, protector and defender, and this generation will yet have to acknowledge it!

The very best thing the Government can do, is to extend the same rights and privileges to the Mormons which it accords to the States and Territories, and not endeavor to oppress and deprive them of their Constitutional rights; treat them as human beings, as American citizens; test their patriotism, and see if they will not support the Constitution of their fathers and defend it with their life's blood; and stop this unhallowed persecution and lying about them. The Mormons never forget their friends, and they "pray for their enemies."

But, says one, "Annex them to California, Oregon, &c., and let them know they must come under christian laws, christian institutions, and christian society." Let me here enquire which are the best laws, and which ought we to keep: the laws of God and the Patriarchal order of celestial marriage, for time and for all eternity—a Bible doctrine, pure, virtuous and holy, practiced by Abraham and approbated by the God of Heaven; or the monogamic and corrupt systems of the christian world, with all their abominations? God deliver the Mormons and Utah from "christian laws, institutions and society!" if "christian" California is a sample. You cannot ride in a stage there without having one's ears almost all the while saluted with obscene conversation, and disgusted at the wanton actions of Cyprians, of whom there are thousands. You can scarcely enter a place of public resort in any of the towns or cities but what your eyes meet the most obscene pictures with which the walls are "decorated;" and females in the same rooms tending bar, &c., with their gambling hells, houses of ill-fame, abandoned women, rum shops, thieves, murderers, libertines, adulterers, cursing, swearing, damning and sinking, drunkards and gamblers, are seen and heard at every corner; and California is only a sample, more or less of the towns and cities in the States and Territories, other than Utah.

Do you see or hear such things in Utah? No, verily no; but these are the products, the "necessary evils" of "christian laws, christian institutions, and christian society." As I said before, God of our fathers deliver us from such laws, institutions and society, unless a purification takes place.

Heaven knows that the Mormons look with disgust and abhorrence upon the doings of the "professing" christian world and their institutions; they are as corrupt in every department as were the anti-deluvians of old, and the cry of "O the abominations of the Mormons" we think comes with an ill grace from such a polluted source, for the Mormons do know that the christian world are wallowing in their filth and corruption. They wish to bring the Mormons down to a level with themselves, with their standard of morality and practices, but the Mormons will never condescend to it; and if Utah was admitted as a sovereign State to-morrow, the Mormons would (instead of being a disgrace to the States) consider it a condescension on their part, and would resemble in something like mixing water with oil.

If the towns and cities of Utah were filled with houses of prostitution (for the accommodation of the "honorable" officers sent there,) groggeries, gambling holes, dens for thieves, drunkards, murderers and robbers, model artists, obscene exhibitions and publications, highway garroters, streams stenched with human bodies murdered and thrown therein, cesspools made the depositories of infants: elopements, abortions, libertines, adulterers, crim. con., black mail, harlots, sodomy, beastiality, suicide, homicide, infanticide, paricide, matricide, fratricide, incest, arson, clergy on hire to preach perverted doctrines, political frenzy, mobs, and jargon, with one continued scene of falsehood, disunion, litigation, and a thousand other crimes, as there are in the christian States and Territories: then, in such a case, "Fair Utah" would be a "christian land," under "christian laws," "christian institutions," and "christian society."

Again, "Utah is in revolt." "Mormon treason, rebellion, traitors," &c., are loudly proclaimed. Treason and revolt against what or whom? Why against all base and infernal scoundrels that are a disgrace to society, against all oppression and robbing them of their Constitutional rights or the sovereignty of the people, against all political cliques, against all religious persecutors, bigotry and fanaticism, against all mobs, driving, exiling, burning, &c.; but her inhabitants are firm supporters and defenders of the Constitution of the United States.

Have the Mormons ever resisted any laws, either of State or of the General Government, thrown over them? Have they ever been devoid of patriotism? Let the survivors of the ever memorable "Mormon Battalion," in the war of the United States with Mexico, answer!

Look at Kansas—any "treason" or "rebellion" there? Look at Christian California, with her Vigilance Committee—any rebellion there? Look at the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Maine, &c.—are there any treason or rebellion in those States?—treating the decision of the highest tribunal of the General Government with perfect mockery and contempt, and branding the supreme judges as a set of perjured traitors, as in the case of Dred Scott, and the Legislatures of those States enacting laws directly in opposition to the General Government. Look at the city of New York in rebellion against the laws of the State, in relation to the "Metropolitan Police Act," "Port Warden Bill," &c.—the citizens declaring they will resist these oppressive and unjust laws to the knife.

Again, look at Staten Island, in relation to the Quarantine grounds; some burning the buildings erected there, fired by the incendiary torch, led on by a mob armed to resist law; also, the rabid abolitionist, rebelling, by word and action, against the General Government; cursing it and setting its laws at defiance; declaring that the Constitution ought to be burned and the Union severed and scattered to the four winds of Heaven, and doing all they can to bring about their object. Now, what do we behold in all this? Answer: The General Government openly defied, opposed, scorned, derided, and its laws and decisions despised and counted as a thing of naught by the States. The municipal authority, in turn, defying and opposing the laws of the States, and the people, in revolt and rebellion against the whole, rising in mobs to resist and carry out their designs, burning, &c. No treason, traitors, or rebellion in all this? Oh, no! But let the Mormons resist a poor, unprincipled villain's insults, sent among them with a little brief authority, "O dear," then the "hue and cry" is soon raised of "treason," "rebellion," "murder," "blood and thunder," "kill them," "drive them," "send troops," "use the Mormons up," &c.

The Mormons will not resist any law unless that law is unconstitutional, and made expressly to oppress them and deprive them of their constitutional rights. Whatever officers may be sent to Utah, they will be respected so long as they behave themselves and act in the line of their duties; but if ever mobs come to Utah to murder, mob, drive, burn, ravish, and destroy, as they have done in Missouri and Illinois, be it known to all men, and before High Heaven, that the Mormons will make Utah's plains the battle-field, saturate them with their life's blood, and there make their graves in a righteous cause, in defence of right, liberty, their homes and families, thereby emulating the deeds of their fathers.

Utah and Mormonism are bound to go ahead and prosper, and no true-hearted Mormon has the least fear in relation to the result. God is at the helm, and we know it: all is right and all is well, come what may! Israel's God is our refuge, and in Him we will ever put our trust.

W. I. Appleby, of Utah.

Correspondence of Elder Bernard Snow.

Brighton, April 14, 1857.

Prest. Taylor,—Dear Bro.: I have been thinking for some weeks of dropping you a few lines, and finally have actually commenced. After I left New York, I paid a visit to my parents in Vermont, and also to a brother and sister, besides aunts and uncles, cousins and second cousins too numerous to mention. I took them altogether by surprise, as they had received no intimation of my coming, and my father when he came to recognize me, (which he did not at first) very gravely remarked "I would as soon thought of seeing Buchanan." I found all quite as well as I could have expected, and save that I was wearied with talking, I had a pleasant visit.

Very many called to see me for old acquaintance sake, while others knowing that I was a "Mormon" came apparently to know whether I was cloven-footed, and wore horns or not, and finding that at least I wore the form of a man, they became anxious to know, indeed, whether I was a fair specimen of my kind, or perchance might be in an elementary state, and like the tadpole yet to be armed with claws, as I progressed in my scale of being. I found the people in my native town (Pomfret) very ignorant of the doctrines set forth by the Latter-Day Saints, they seldom having heard anything, except what they have gleaned from the newspapers of the day. Finding a general spirit of inquiry, I obtained leave to occupy the meeting house on Sunday, and preached to a very fair congregation.

I trust good may result therefrom, though their eyes are blinded in a great measure by spiritualism, in which most of them are engaged.

They at once began to set before me the merits of their system, and array their arguments to prove to me that the thing was a reality, and not a piece of deception as many had supposed, when to their great surprise they found they were only wasting amunition, for I readily assented that all was as they represented that far; but when they told me it was of God, and calculated to lead them into a celestial glory, then we differed. Well, do I recollect of Bro. Woodruff prophesying to me in conversation one evening, soon after I had embraced the gospel, and before this spirit rapping was ever heard of, in this wise:

"The Lord never had a Priesthood upon earth, when the devil did not have something directly beside it in imitation, or as a counterfeit of the genuine, which he sought to persuade the people, was one and the same thing.

"And now, since Joseph Smith has been an instrument in the providence of God of restoring the Priesthood, and has received revelations which he has proclaimed to the world, and they as a body have rejected his testimony, and have shed his blood, the day is not far distant, and you shall live to see it, that the devil will open a communication with the spirit world, and the people so far from rejecting revelations, will be flooded with them, and they shall be heard throughout the nations, yea, the people shall become drunken with revelation, but it will be to their own condemnation!"

This, in substance was his prophesy though perhaps not verbatim. I was at a great loss to conceive how this was to be brought about, but nevertheless, I have lived to see it fulfilled in a great measure. It is not my present purpose to enter into a treatise upon what is termed spiritualism, but to narrate what transpired one evening in a circle composed mostly of my own relatives, including a brother and sister, as they related it to me, thinking it may prove interesting to the Saints in general, as it was to me.

What our President has often told us respecting the location or place of the abode of departed spirits is proved to a demonstration, and also that they are possessed of no knowledge except, that which pertains to this earth's sphere.

That spirits of departed friends do in some instances communicate with their friends, I have no doubt, but we are liable to be deceived even in this; as not every spirit is that which it represents itself to be, by any means; and though our friends do speak to us from their spirit sphere, their opinions and notions are worth just as much to us, as though they had been expressed while in the body, and by their own natural organs of speech, instead of the organs of another body, and no more. But to the narrative; it was related to me as follows:

"One evening while we were assembled in our circle, with Mr. K. who is a noted medium in these parts, he, as on many occasions before, became entranced, and a spirit commenced speaking through him, which we at once discovered to be a stranger to us; we inquired who it was that desired to speak to us.

He answered saying, that he had lived upon this continent about fourteen hundred years since, near what is now called Florida, but that the greater portion of his people lived in the more immediate neighborhood of the Isthmus of Darien, and were a numerous and powerful people.

Question. Where did your people come from?

Answer. From Asia Minor.

Q. At what period did your people come here?

A. About six hundred years before Christ.

Q. Will you give us your name?

(The name was given but was so singular in its sound that they put the following:)

Q. Will you write us your name?

A. I could write it, but not so that you would understand it.*

Q. Will you tell us more concerning your people?

A. They became a powerful nation, and built numerous and large cities, but they became divided, and wars and bloodshed crushed their hopes, and crippled their prosperity. There were also violent commotions in the earth, and large cities and much people were thereby destroyed. Where the Gulf of Mexico now stands was once an extended and fertile plain, which boasted several cities, but during one of these commotions, the sea overflowed and destroyed those cities with all the inhabitants thereof.

Q. Will you speak a sentence in your own language?

A. Yes. (And here followed a specimen of his native language, which my friends declared to be awkward beyond description, and expressed their opinion that if it was as crooked when written, as it sounded to the ear when spoken, it would be one of the most difficult ever written.) I listened as you may well suppose with considerable interest, and when they had ended the story, I asked if any of them had ever read the Book of Mormon, and was answered in the negative, and they assured me that they had not the slightest idea of its contents.

This medium was wholly under control of this spirit, and entirely unconscious of what was transpiring. The company supposed that they were receiving a wonderful revelation, of something hitherto unknown to the world, and were not a little surprised, when I informed them that quite an extensive history of that people had been published to the world for nearly thirty years in the Book of Mormon. One of my brothers whom I visited subsequently in Boston, a clergyman by profession, and now an active spiritualist, who a few years ago was very lavish of his harsh epithets upon Joseph Smith, and professed a firm belief in the Spaulding tale, now to my surprise admitted Joseph to have been an honest man, and that he did receive the ministration of angels, revelations, &c., but he thought him rather too exclusive in his system; now we, said he, have received the same light, and drink from the same fountain of intelligence!

When I arrived in Cambridge, which was about 7 o'clock in the evening, I was forthwith invited to spend an hour with a near neighbor of one of my brother's who is an editor of a paper devoted to spiritualism. He had heard that I was expected, and earnestly desired me to call on him, which I did. He informed me that he had seen and read a great amount of trash in the papers, which he considered unworthy of credit, concerning "Mormons," and he had for a long time wished to see some one on whom he could rely on for correct information concerning that people; and being acquainted with my brother, who had assured him he might rely on me, he had sought that interview.

I spent about an hour and a half with him and his wife, and had also three brothers present. They all seemed pleased with what I had informed them in regard to the Saints, and if no other good was accomplished, I think much prejudice was removed from their minds. I received afterward a particular invitation from one of the prominent leaders of this system, who resided a few miles from Boston, to meet him and several of his co-operators on a certain day at his residence, and proffered to pay my expenses on the occasion.

My first impression was, that I would not go, but that night I had a dream which showed me that inasmuch as I went trusting in my God for strength, I should receive no harm, and I ought not to neglect any opportunity of doing good, and imparting information to all such as earnestly sought for it.

Accordingly I went and spent the most part of a day with them; and gave them my testimony for the truth, and in a spirit of kindness told them what I thought of their system; for I fully believe they were honestly searching for truth, but were groping in the dark; and so long as they continue to have such implicit confidence in the teachings which they receive through these mediums, they will continue to wander in mazes, dark and still darker. May God help them, who desire the truth to come to a knowledge thereof! I was glad I went and gave them an humble testimony, and hope they may profit by it.

I visited Bro. Cleary, and found him rejoicing in his labors, and the Saints under his charge feeling well. They cheerfully assisted me on my way, by giving me means to pay a steerage passage to Liverpool; Sister Vose, as on all former occasions, was liberal. My relatives were exceedingly kind to me, and I take pleasure in recording it, for such cases are few and far between; but they having ever been educated to liberal principles, accord to every one the right of freedom of speech and liberty of conscience, and said that they considered the "Mormons" had been shamefully abused. They considered that that people had just as good a right to the protection of government in the enjoyment of their religion as any other sect or party. As I was about to bid them adieu, one of my brothers gave me an overcoat and other articles of clothing to the amount of about $20—and another brother, learning that I was about taking a steerage passage for want of means to procure other, came forward and paid $25—to make up a cabin passage, and saw me comfortably stowed on board the ship. I had also received assistance from my father and another brother in Vermont, although none of them are as yet numbered among the Saints. May God bless them and open the eyes of their understanding to the truth.

I sailed on the 7th of February and landed in Liverpool on the 25th, being eighteen days. The ship was one of the line chartered by Thayer & Warren—the Mary E. Balch, Capt. Woodbury, who is very much of a gentleman, and also his chief mate, Mr. Daniels; they spared no pains to make the passengers comfortable.

I was appointed by President O. Pratt to the London pastorate, under Bro. J. D. Ross, and am at present by his appointment laboring in Brighton, a town of about eighty thousand inhabitants, with a branch numbering when I came here, about ninety members, but the work of pruning will probably reduce it to seventy-eight, seven of which number are now on their way to Zion.

I have recently baptized three into the Church, and many more are inquiring and searching for the truth. The Mormon comes to me weekly and is indeed a welcome messenger.

My health is good, and I feel to rejoice in my labors, and hope to be an humble instrument of doing good, and bringing many to a knowledge of the truth. Give my love to Bros. Stenhouse, George, Dulin, Ott and all inquiring friends.

May God continue to bless and crown your efforts for the spread of truth and the upbuilding of his kingdom on the earth.

Yours in the bonds of the Covenant,

Bernard Snow.

*I only regret that they did not get him to write a sentence or two in his own language. I will venture to say, we would have found it to correspond with the characters from which the Book of Mormon was translated.

Correspondence of Prest. George J. Taylor.

Life on the Missouri River.

"Sultan," Missouri River,
50 Miles above St. Louis,
May 8, 1857.

Dear Father: * * * I have thus far been preserved from accident in my peregrinations, although I have been in one or two positions that I did not relish a great deal at the time. The boats on this river run over sand bars and snags almost as much as ever, and sometimes, since the tide of emigration has set towards Kansas so strongly, and the boats have increased in number, (there are about forty altogether,) they run into each other by way of variety. As I went up last time, while stopping at Jefferson City, waiting for the "Lightning Line" to start, the steward of the "Australia"—lying next to us—was shot by a negro because he refused to pay him for part of a day's work that he had done; but, as the pistol was loaded with shot, it did not kill him, although the shot struck him in the face just above the right eye.

When I was coming down on this boat, we stopped at Camden for a few minutes; there two deck hands, both Irishmen, got to fighting, and, after gouging, pulling hair, and pummelling each other until they were almost exhausted, and streaming with blood like two stuck pigs, the largest one seized the other with his teeth and commenced biting, which performance he concluded by chewing off his antagonist's nose. Soon after I got to the scene of action, the noseless one had his teeth firmly imbeded in the scalp of his enemy, and was shaking his head in a manner that would have made a well-bred bull dog ashamed of himself. They were separated soon after I got to them, and the largest one was taken into custody by an officer who happened to be there. What they will do with him I don't know; but I think both ought to have their teeth pulled at least. The nose was scarcely dressed before its rowdy owner struck and kicked another man most shamefully. Nothing has been done with him, and he comes up on deck now and again with two or three large black patches on his face, of which he seems to feel not a little proud.

I had almost forgot to mention that there are some very enterprising characters out this way, who will compete well with the Pennsylvania electioneers. There was quite a lot of little circulars handed round on the boat by a young man, as I went up, headed "Kansas," and going on to state that passengers for that Territory would do well to land their goods at Delaware City, as they could reach the interior sooner—fare was cheaper—the company had a steam ferry, and people would be nearer Lawrence by so doing. The place had not hitherto been much noted, but now an energetic company of Free State men have got possession of it, and added to its other advantages, too numerous to mention, "the Government and Salt Lake freighting will be centered here." Mr. Lampton observed that probably some of our "secret agents" were established at that place that the St. Louis Intelligencer's correspondent speaks of, as I appeared ignorant of the freighting business. I was inquiring about this place, see ing such an advertisement of it, and find that "the energetic company" will have to use all their energy, if it ever becomes a town, as it is situated on a high bluff, is but little known, and their diminutive ferry boat is unable to cross the river unless it goes down the stream half a mile, a la flat-boat.

I have not been robbed so far, and don't anticipate such luck, as I have a state-room in connection with an honest Dutchman, who tells me he "not can shpeek all tings."

You must excuse my writing, as the boat is in motion, and I shall not have time to copy. Your affectionate son,

George J. Taylor.

St. Louis, May 15, 1257.

Prest. John Taylor—Dear Brother: By request of the Hon. Geo. A. Smith, I write you a few lines. I left Great Salt Lake City, on the 2d of April last, a passenger with the April mail, in charge of Mr. P. L. Stoddard, conductor. We had good weather and grass to Fort Bridger, and plenty of snow from the head of the Echo kanyon, to Bear River. From Bridger to Rocky Ridge, on Sweet Water, there was no grass; our animals had to subsist on greasewood. From the latter place, to Ash Hollow, the grass was tolerable; and from thence to the Missouri River, there was no grass, except on the Little Blue, where the grass was good. I arrived at Atchison on the 10th inst. I left there on board the Morning Star, on the 11th, and arrived in this city last evening. I presume that the mail arrived at Independence on the 12th.

While crossing the plains, we were overtaken with six snow storms; one very severe storm was at the South Pass, on the 10th April. The snow was from three to five feet deep at the Pass, and the storm being very severe, it was with difficulty that we could find the road to the Sweet Water. We succeeded in getting to the river in the evening, which we crossed on the ice. We had one wagon drawn by four mules, and one by six; and about fifty head of animals besides. The most severe snow storm, mingled with chilling rain, that we experienced, was twenty-five miles above Fort Kearney, on the Platt River, on the 30th April. Six of our mules froze to death in this storm. The other storms were less severe.

The May mail, for Salt Lake City, in charge of Mr. John Murdock, conductor, camped with me, on the evening of the 6th inst., on Big Sandy, two hundred and fifty miles from Independence. They were getting along well, and all in good health and spirits. The Hon. J. M. Bernhisel, Hon. Geo. A. Smith and Elder T. O. Angel, were passengers with that mail.

Bro. Smith wished me to inform you that he has been very much relieved from the cough which afflicted him while in the States, since he has been on the plains.

The winter in Utah, which had been very severe, broke up in February. The weather in March was warm and pleasant. The farmers were busy ploughing during that month, and had sun most of the spring before I left.

I think that spring is, at least, six weeks earlier in Utah, than it is in Missouri. Provisions are plenty: flour was selling at $3 and $4 per hundred: wheat, $1.25 cents, and corn and potatoes at $1 per bushel. The Utonians are at peace in Utah, and with all good men everywhere. Since I have arrived in this lower world, I have heard much about wickedness and abominations in Utah. I do not think it is necessary to say anything in defense of Utah, as no honest, sensible man will believe the reports, and I care not if the other portion of mankind believe them or not. "The wicked fleeth when no man pursueth," and the wicked must abuse the righteous, so as to hide their own wickedness. I do not think that I shall ever apostatize—especially if I should have to return to the States. May the Lord bless you.

I am, your brother in the covenant,

Isaac Bowman.

Correspondence from Prest. W. Woodruff.

Historian's Office,
G. S. L. City, April 1, 1857.

Elder Taylor—Dear Sir: Our Eastern Mail for October and November arrived in this city on the 24th inst., containing 28 brass-lock sacks; 30 were sent, but 2 of them were deposited somewhere. The mail has grown several months old while on the way; mostly at Devil's Gate: it was accompanied by our friend S. L. Heywood, who reports that while weather-bound at the Devil's Gate the company suffered much for the want of food, having subsisted for one month on ox hides entirely. The mail company left that point as soon as they could possibly get through the snow, and it was with great difficulty they got through when they did. The mail brought Prest. Young a great many letters. We have not yet had any word from the mails of the winter months, but we have learned that the snow was very deep east as well as west of Laramie. We have had more snow in the mountains and valleys through this Territory than we have ever seen since our settlement in these mountains; yet there has been but a small amount of stock lost in comparison to the loss last season.

I was truly gratified to hear from you by letter and to learn that you had prepared for us an account of the martyrdom of the Prophets. I did not learn in what way you intended to forward it to us, whether by mail or private conveyance; if by mail I expect we will have it when the winter mails get in. We had much later news from you and the brethren, through The Mormon, and by letters via California, than we received by the last Eastern mail. The Mormon keeps us well posted up upon matters and things in general in the East. We can clearly see that you have had a strong warfare upon your hands since your residence in New York, and I believe all your friends in Utah feel that you have ably defended yourself, and maintained the cause of truth, and that victory has been with you as an able editor and a champion of rights. I consider The Mormon has been from the commencement as a sharp thorn in the side of the enemies of Zion, and a powerful engine in the defence of the truth, and has been an instrument in the hands of God of doing much good.

As far as news is concerned with us in Utah, I will say that we are having universal health, peace and plenty throughout the Territory, so far as I know.

Spring has broke in upon us warm and mild, snow having disappeared in the valleys, though the mountains and hills still wear their white mantle and are deeply clad with snow.

The Big Cottonwood canal is nearly finished, and will soon receive the water for irrigation and also for canal purposes, by which we shall be able to boat the granite rock from the Big Cottonwood kanyon to this city for building the Temple.

There are many stone-cutters now at work upon the Temple block, and after conference there will be a large addition. It is sweet music to hear the sound of the hammer and chisel in the hands of so many men. We expect to push the work of the Temple this season.

We have every prospect of a very fruitful season. Peaches, apples, plums, apricots and currants are all loaded with fruit buds, and some nearly ready to bloom. We have also a fair prospect for grain, as far as we can judge.

The past has been a very interesting winter in Utah to the Latter Day Saints; the inhabitants almost universally have assembled themselves together in their towns, cities, wards, settlements, branches, and quorums, and spent their Sabbaths and winter evenings in preaching, teaching, prayer and praise unto the Lord; and much of the Holy Spirit has been enjoyed in all the assemblies of the Saints, in every capacity in which they have met, and such a thing as a ball or party for recreation has hardly been heard of throughout the Territory. The power of God has rested upon the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Elders of Israel, and they have been inspired to impart a great amount of teaching, counsel and knowledge unto the people; and the fruits of the Spirit of God have been visibly manifested among the people, and they have greatly rejoiced in the Lord. I have attended a meeting of some kind almost every night through the winter months.

The Presidency, with many others, are preparing to make a trip to Salmon River settlement this spring, visiting the Northern Branches as they go.

I think we have a fair supply of bread for the inhabitants until another harvest. The fruits of the reformation have been manifested in a greater degree than ever before in keeping the law of tithing, which is finding bread for the public hands on the Temple, &c.

Elders A. Lyman and C. C. Rich are expected about the first of May. I expect they will take an European mission.

Your family and the families of all the brethren are all well as far as I can learn, except the youngest son of J. M. Bernhisel has been sick for a few days past.

That the peace and blessings of God may rest upon you in all of your exertions and labors to promote the cause of truth, and upon those connected with you, is my sincere and earnest prayer.

Yours truly, W. Woodruff.

John M. B. Petrikin, a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives from Lycoming county, died in Harrisburg, on the 15th inst., of disease contracted at the National Hotel in Washington.

☞ Not having the algebraic signs in our "font," we are obliged to substitute words for them in the following:

Answer to second question by W. I. S.

Let x be the number of beggars.

Then 8 x minus 14 is equal to 6 x plus 20.

Subtracting 6 x from both quantities, leaves 2 x minus 14 equal to 20.

Therefore, 2 x is equal to 34, and x is equal to 17, the number of beggars.

Then 6 x plus 20 is equal to 122 }
Or 8 x minus 14 " " " 122 } or $1.23 the money he posesses

By Arithmetic.—The sum of the difference is 14 plus 20, or 34. A single difference is 8 minus 6, or 2. Divide the sum of the differences, or 34, by a single difference, or 2, and the quotient is 17, or the number of beggars. Jos. N. Benedict.

News From Great Salt Lake City.

St. Louis, May 18, 1857.

The overland Utah mail has arrived here with Salt Lake City dates of April 2.

The Territory was quiet. Preparations were making to send a large number of missionaries to all parts of the world.

The accounts of the mouements of Brigham Young do not accord with those received via California. He seemed to possess the entire confidence of the people, and was planning a pleasure excursion to the Mormon settlement at Salmon River.

For some unknown cause, the Mormons at St. Bernardino and the surrounding settlements have been summoned to Salt Lake City.

The Cheyennes were becoming bold and defiant. A trader, arrived from Fort Laramie, reported that reported that the Indians acknowledged the loss of sixty warriors sent to commit depredations on the California road, in consequence of which they have made prisoners of sixteen traders, and have sent one hundred warriors to the road to avenge the loss.

Starvation in Northern Michigan.

Detroit May, 15, 1857.—Information has been received here of great destruction in Gramot County and other localities in the northern part of the State. Several persons have died from starvation, and cattle were also dying for want of food.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are he kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immergé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, sérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

We'll Reform.

Very Respectfully Inscribed to the Home Missionaries.

TUNE—"I'm Afloat."

We'll reform, we'll reform; we'll respond to the call
That comes through our Prophet, to one and to all,
Our sins and our follies we vow to forsake;
Too long we have slept, now 'tis time to awake.
Is there danger at hand? or are powerful our foes?
Or has hell in its fury rush'd forth to oppose?
What matters all this? is not God yet our friend?
Then down, down to hell, all its forces we'll send.
Rouse, rouse then, stand forth, all ye faithful and true;
With righteousness arm you, all hell to subdue.
God, Truth and the Priesthood our motto shall be;
And while these we defend, we may fall but won't flee.
We'll reform, &c.

Leaders thunder reform. Sinners hear it and quake,
And wonder how best they their exit can make.
Let such sin-canker'd souls and the fearful "back out."
We'll be stronger without them and safer, no doubt.
We vaunt not of prowess, we boast not of might;
Our actions are ruled by the Spirit of Right.
Our King is our God, and we honor His laws;
We fear not the world, nor court its applause.
Shout, shout reformation; the cry must go forth
To the east, to the west, to the south, to the north;
Oh sound it, ye heralds, and bate not your breath;
'Tis the voice of the Lord—reformation or death.
We'll reform, &c.

M. ROWAN.

South Cottonwood, Dec. 30, 1856.

Sir E. Bulwer Lytton.

Fifty-two years ago he was born, with prospects very different from those of most men destined to literary eminence. The family from which Sir Bulwer Lytton sprang was rich, respectable, and not altogether destitute of hereditary honors. About the close of the sixteenth century, John Wiggett—his progenitor in the male line—acquired certain lands in Norfolk. Fortune favored John's progeny. One of his descendents mingled his blood by marriage with the Bulwers of Dalling; a second inherited the estates and took the name of that ancient family; and a third—General Bulwer, of Heydon Hall—espoused the heiress of the Robinsons, who had succeeded to the acres and assumed the name of a grand old knightly race—the Lyttons of Knebworth. The General had three sons; and of these the youngest is the celebrated personage whom the worthies of Glasgow, have just been installing as Lord Rector and entertaining at a public dinner.

While still in early youth, Bulwer was deprived of his father; but, fortunately for the development of the future novelist's intellect, his mother had a hereditary taste for elegant literature, and did much to form his mind. It was for her pleasure—so, at least, runs the story—that Bulwer, at the age of six or seven, wrote his earliest verses, some of which were imitations of those charming English Ballads which Bishop Percy restored to popular favor, and which Walter Scott, in boyhood, perused with the eagerness of a young tiger devoring its prey.

Having been educated at private schools, and pursued his studies under private tutors, Bulwer was sent to complete his academical career at Cambridge. While figuring there among his equals, or those who deemed themselves such, the sumptuous fellow-commoner of Trinity Hall contrived to make driving his own horses, and other juvenile eccentricities, compatible with intellectual pursuits. He not only signalised his precocious talents by carrying off the Chancellor's prize medal with his English poem on "Sculpture," but applied his faculties of observation to life under various aspects and in various localities. He was in the habits of occupying the long vacation with pedestrian rambles in England and Scotland, and, on one occasion, he travelled, on horseback, over a great part of France.

At length, in 1827, Bulwer, having previously exercised his powers by some effusions in verse, published a work of fiction, entitled "Falkland," and next year "Pelham" made its appearance. About the merits of this novel, for which there was, at first, some difficulty in finding a publisher, critics were much divided in opinion, but generally the author was admitted to be a man of no ordinary powers.

When "Pelham" had been followed by "The Disowned," "Devereux," "Paul Clifford," and "Eugene Aram," Bulwer wisely called a halt in his career as a novelist, and, for a time, appeared before the public as editor of the "New Monthly Magazine." To that periodical he contributed a series of papers, which have since been published in a collected form, and entitled "The Student." The reason he assigned for becoming an editor was peculiar. At least, he is reported to have said that he merely did so to show that a gentleman might occupy such a position. While exercising editorial functions, he was engaged with his "England and the English," which was published in 1833.

After having stood the brunt of the abuse which this clever and caustic anatomy of the national character brought upon him, Bulwer broke ground with his romance, "The Last Days of Pompeii," which was followed, as time passed on, by "Rienzi," "Leila, or the Siege of Granada," "Calderon the Courtier," "Night and Morning," "Day and Night," "The Last of the Barons," "Zanoni," and "Harold the Last of the Saxon Kings."

Bulwer, as a novelist, had now come to proof. He had won fame, and won it fairly. He had originally composed with slowness and difficulty, but with a perseverance characteristic of the man, and worthy of all praise, he had continued to practice writing as an art, until, with three hours' labor a day, he averaged twenty pages of novel print. He had, as a novelist, been before the public for more than twenty years. He had tried first the fashionable novel; then the romantic and incidental; then the sentimental; and then the historical. Having been eminently successful in each line, he resolved upon writing a humoristic novel, and "The Caxtons" began to appear in the columns of "Blackwood." This charming story of familiar life, which was read with delight, which gave the public a new idea of the author of "Pelham," and which raised him enormously in public opinion, was succeeded by "My Novel, or Varieties of English Life," a work of literary art embracing a wider field, and the last which Sir Bulwer Lytton has given to the reading world.

While engaged in writing works of romance, which few have read without pleasure or profit, Bulwer had not neglected other fields of literary labor. About 1830, he published "The Siamese Twins," a serio-comic poem. In 1837, a play from his pen, entitled "The Duchess de la Valliere," was performed at Covent Garden; and although it failed, from the story being one for which it was difficult to enlist the sympathies of an English audience, his other dramas, "The Lady of Lyons" 'Richelieu," and "Money," had a very different and much more fortunate fate. In 1842, "Eva, the Ill-omened Marriage," with other tales and poems from his pen, appeared; and at a later period, the "New Timon," and "King Arthur," two clever poems, were published anonymously. Upon "King Arthus," Bulwer had expended much thought and labor; and when his identity with the author of these poems was so generally insisted on that he felt there was no choice between the indiscretion of frank avowal and the effrontery of flat denial, he wrote "I believed, whether truly or eroneously, that my experiment would have a fairer chance of justice, if it could be regarded without personal reference to the author; and, at all events, it was clear that I myself could the better judge how far the experiment had failed or succeeded, when freed from the partial kindness of those disposed to over-rate, or the pre-determined censure of those accustomed to despise, my former labors. Whatever influence of good or ill my formal adoption of these foundlings may have upon their future career, like other adventures they must, therefore, take their chance in the crowd, happy if they can propitiate their father's foes, yet retain his friends, and, irrespective of either, sure to be judged at last according to their own deserts." When the Guild of Literature and Art was formed, Bulwer wrote for its benefit a drama, entitled, "Not so Bad as we Seem," which has frequently been acted by the amateur company of which Mr. Dickens is the chief, as also by professional performers; and he, moreover, manifested his strong sympathy with the trials of those not so highly favored by fortune as himself by appropriating from his domain a site for an hospital for decayed artists and men of letters.

Having thus sketched Bulwer's literary career, in so far as it has been run, let us refer with brevity and candor to the part he has enacted in political affairs. It was, of course, as natural that a man of the station and talent of the heir of the Lyttons should be admitted to Parliament as to Almack's, and accordingly, in 1831, he was returned to the House of Commons as the Member for St. Ives. Inspired with popular predilections, he found his way to those benches from which the cause of the people was pleaded, and became conspicuous in the ranks of the "English Radicals." He strove in his senatorial capacity to link his name still closer with literature, by his exertions in favor of a law for the protection of dramatic copyright, and of measures for relieving the newspaper press from the burthen of the Stamp Law. Moreover, when Sir R. Peel took office in 1835, Bulwer published a pamplet entitled "The Crisis," which ran rapidly through more than twenty editions, exercised no inconsiderable influence on the elections, won for its author a baronetcy, and would have opened for him the path to official life had he accepted the invitation to go forward. The accomplished novelist declined to pursue his political triumph, and at the general election of 1842 he was rejected by the borough of Lincoln, which he had represented for ten years. For several years after he was excluded from Parliament.

Years went over, however, and in 1851, when parties had been broken up and recast, he, having meantime, inherited Knebworth, with the estates of his mother's family, and assumed by Royal licence the historic name of Lytton, again entered the political arena, with a pamplet in the form of "Letters to John Bull," recommending a settlement of the Protection question on terms of mutual compromise; and when Parliament was dissolved in 1852 he was a successful candidate for the county of Hertford, and took his seat in the House of Commons as a Conservative and a supporter of Lord Derby. In his aspirations after Parliamentary success and political power, Sir E. Bulwer Lytton has, doubtless, to contend against such prejudices as ever in similar circumstances beset the path of those who have proved their genius and won their fame by works of fiction. His parliamentary speeches and motions, however, which are thoroughly English in character and popular in sentiment, have been eminently calculated to disarm prejudice; and he is now, we believe, pretty generally recognized as a great parliamentary personage, who, in the event of a ministerial change, may, with advantage to the interests of the country, take a prominent part in the administration of national affairs.—[Illustrated Times.

Galileo's Renunciation of the Copernican System.

Here is Galileo's celebrated adjaration of the truth of the system of Copernicus: "I, Galileo Galilei, aged 70, and on my knees before you, most reverend Lords, Cardinals, and general Inquisition of the Universal Church against heretical depravity, having my eyes on the Holy Gospels, which I do touch with my lips, do swear that I believe, always have believed, always will believe, every article with the Holy Catholic Apostolic Roman Church holds and teaches and preaches; and as I have written a book in which I have maintained that the sun is the centre, which false doctrine is repugnant to the Holy Scriptures, I, with sincere heart, do abjure, curse, and detest the said error and heresy, and generally every other error and heresy, and sect contrary to said Holy Church."

Two Millions of Tons of Silver.

The future historian of Great Britain will doubtless relate, among the fashions of the nineteenth century, the rise and progress of aquariums,—how ladies, grown weary of buying and losing and re-buying their cats and dogs, drowned their sorrows in salt water, and transferred their affections to a lively shrimp. But while they are exploring the living wonders of the deep, scientific men have been ransacking the sea for treasures, if not as interesting, at least as valuable as the beautiful zoophites; and their experiments have led them to the conclusion that the ocean holds dissolved two million tons of silver.

To three French chemists the discovery is due. They took gallons of water from the coast of St. Malo, a few leagues from land, and analyzed it in two ways. A portion of the water they acted upon by the usual tests on silver, and the presence of the precious metal was clearly ascertained. The remainder of the water they evaporated, and the salt they obtained they boiled with lead.

This gave them a button of impure lead, which they subjected to what is called cupellation. This rather grand word denotes a very simple process. The button is placed upon a little tiny saucer made of lime and is submitted to heat sufficient to melt the lead, but not high enough to effect the silver, should any be present. The lead soon begins to melt, and, as it melts, it is sucked up by the porous little saucer or cupel; it grows smaller and smaller, until no lead remains, and in its place is a little brilliant speck, far brighter than the boiling lead. The cupel is then removed from the fire, and as it cools the red-hot sparks cool too, and you have a homœopathic globule of silver, very much like one of those small pills that druggists delude smokers into buying to take away the smell of the fragrant weed. The operation, as I have said, is very simple, and is the ordinary mode of procuring silver from the ore. Analyses are being made in this way every day at the Mint. When the presence of silver is doubtful the work is most exciting. I saw an English ore so tested the other day, and sure enough, after a few minutes of anxious watching, shone forth a bright spark about the size of a pin's head, for which our eyes were longing. The ore proved a very rich one, and we shall most likely hear more about it.

But we must not forget our French friends. Again and again they repeated the experiment with the same success. Then they sat down and made the calculation that a cubic mile of ocean contains two pounds and three-quarters weight of silver. After this, they made another series of experiments: they gathered seaweeds, preferring those known to botanists as fuci: because, as those plants have no roots to insert into the rocks, they must derive all their aliments from the sea. These they analyzed, and found them twenty six times richer in silver than the water itself.

The results attracted the attention of an English chemist, Mr. Frederick Field, who is engaged in assaying silver in Chili; they induced him to commence a course of experiments upon the copper or yellow metal with which the hulls of vessels are sheathed. His knowledge of chemistry told him that if the sea contained silver, he would in all probability find the metal on the bottoms of vessels that had been at sea. He soon had an opportunity of testing the correctness of his surmise. The Ana Guimaraens, a large vessel under the Chilian flag, was hauled down to be repaired near Coquimbo, where Mr. Field resides. The ship had been seven years at sea, and trading the whole of the time in the Pacific Ocean; so that if silver existed in any ship's bottom it certainly would in the Ana Guimaraens! A few ounces of the metal sheathing were taken, and after a careful analysis, Mr. Field obtained from 5,000 grains, a trifle more than two grains of silver, which is equal to one pound one ounce two pennyweights fifteen grains in the ton. There was no yellow metal on board the ship by which a comparison could be made with that which had been exposed to the salt water. But shortly afterward another vessel came into dock, and from her cabin a piece of metal was taken which had never been exposed to sea water, and another piece of equal weight was removed from the hull, which had been three years afloat. The metal from the the hull yielded eight times as much silver as that taken from the cabin. Similar comparative analyses were wade on other vessels, and a difference between the two metals was invariably found—the difference varying according to the length of time the ship had been at sea. In those ships that had been the shortest time at sea the difference was least, and vice versa.

But why should there be any silver in the brass and copper used in the cabins? Well, it appears that in these metals there is generally a little silver—two or three pennyweights per ton; and beyond this Mr. Field accounts for it from the employment of masses of metal melted down from old sheathings, which derive their silver from former voyages. One other experiment Mr. Field is at present carrying out. He has granulated some very pure copper—a portion is reserved in a bottle to be compared at a future period with the other portion, which is floating in a wooden box, perforated on all sides, a few feet below the surface of the Pacific. When a good-humored captain puts into Coquimbo, he takes the box in tow and drags it at the stern of his vessel up and down the coast of Chili. Just as you have tried to catch a mackerel's tail, so is Mr. Fiend trying to catch silver with his copper bait.

The curious discovery of sea-water silver gives rise to one or two questions. Where, for instance, does the silver come from? Has it been extracted from the earth by artificial means, the waste of man's diggings, borne to the bosom of the ocean by rivers, which, like giant arteries, burst from the heart of the earth? It could scarcely be that man, avaricious man, could have let two millions of tons of silver so slip through his fingers. No! we may acquit the world of so egregious a blunder. That the presence of silver in the sea is more ancient than human folly or cupidity, M. Durecher and his friends, who first called attention to the subject, have proved by procuring the precious metal from crystals of rock salt which had been deposited anterior to the existence of man upon this earth.

One experiment leads to another. If the sea could be made to yield silver, where might not the metal be found? The wood of the oak, birch, beech, hornbeam, aspen, apple and ash, grow at long distances from the sea, and which had never been manured with salt or seaweed, has been burnt, and in the ashes silver has been detected. But if plants contained silver it was not difficult to infer that it existed also in animals. This was proved to be the case by an experiment which brought these remarkable researches to a triumphant conclusion. An ox was sacrificed to science, and in his blood was discovered the same valued metal.

The explanation of these phenomena is not very difficult. The sulphide of silver, or silver in combination with sulphur, is very widely diffused in nature. Salt water attacks the sulphide and convets it into chloride of silver, which it dissolves by the agency of common salt. So, also, the common salt contained in the water of the earth, acts in a similar manner, dissolving out small quantities of metal, which it carries off and transfers to plants, and from plants it is received by animals in their food.

What the value of the discovery may be, remains to be proved. Wiseacres may shake their heads, and pronounce it useless. But, if no attempt be made to turn it to account, one of two things will be clearly shown; either that silver is not so scarce as some people would make us believe, or else we can do very well without it.

[Household Words.

A crusty old bachelor says that two-thirds of the married men look upon home only as a place where they get warm victuals, and have their washing done.

Sir William Wallace and Robert Bruce.

The contest produced two illustrious commanders, differing widely from each other in the nature of their claims to the admiration of posterity. Very few historical characters, indeed, have come so well through the scrutiny of archæological inquiry as William Wallace. It is true that applying to his position the conditions and nomenclature of a latter nationality which, in a great measure rose out of his services, his real position had been misunderstood; for, however paradoxical it may seem, it would be more accurate to speak of him as the champion of English resistance to Norman tyranny than of Scottish nationality against English aggression. Hence historians, feeling the uneasy consciousness of a certain vagueness of outline, have invested him with the conventional atttributes of the classical hero of the old school books.

It was not to be expected that popular romance should be more accurate than history, so the minstrel Harry represents him as a Hercules clearing his way through armed hosts by superhuman developement of muscle, while in the amiable pages of Miss Jane Porter, he becomes the interesting and accomplished guardsman. But when the paint and gilding, and theatrical properties are removed, the picture of the man still remains great in its original simplicity. In the battle of Sterling he showed wonderful powers of strategy and generalship, since he took up his position at the very point which, for subsequent centuries was deemed the gate between the North and the South; and by timing his attack when the half of Surrey's army was separated from him by the Forth, he accomplished that most thoroughly effective of military operations which, by attacking the enemy in detail, puts a small force on a level with a great.

His capacity for leadership must have been marvelous, since he organized and kept together a vast army of the common people, while their ordinary leaders, the Norman aristocracy, following their natural instincts, had joined the oppressors. And all these families he employed without arrogance, or any overweening personal ambition, indubitably pure—the liberation of a people from an aggressive oppressor. To Bruce, who was also an intrepid and skillful commander, the same high position cannot be awarded. He saw in the settled discontent of the Scots, and their enduring apathy to the Norman rule, the materials out of which an independent sovereignty might be created. With the ardent spirit of his heroic race, he threw himself into thecontest. When the die was cast—and it was by mere accident—he held with chivalrous constancy to this adopted course, bearing reverses with steady resolution, and enduring hardships down to the level of sordid misery with steady, unshaken fortitude. In the end he was successful, and the people whom he delivered were truly grateful. Their gratitude may be said, indeed, to have embodied itself in the constitution and continuous existence of the Scottish nation. Scotland proper dates from Bannockburn. All histories which speak of the country during an earlier period take their tone from the nationality then established.

Poets' Graves.

Chaucer was buried in the cloister of Westminster Abbey, without the building, but removed to the south aisle in 1555; Spenser lies near him; Beaumont, Drayton, Cowley, Denham, Dryden, Rowe, Addison, Prior, Congreve, Gay, Johnson, Sheridan, and Campbell, all lie within Westminster Abbey. Shakespeare, as everyone knows, was buried in the chancel of the church at Stratford, where there is a monument to his memory. Chapman and Shirley are buried in St. Giles in the Fields; Marlowe in the churchyard of St. Paul's, Debtford; Fletcher and Massinger in the churchyard of St. Saviour, Southwark; Dr. Donne in old St. Paul's; Edmund Waller in Beaconfield churchyard; Milton in the churchyard of St. Gile's, Cripplegate; Butler in the churchyard of St. Paul's, Covent Garden; Otway no one knows where; Garth in the church at Harrow; Pope in the church at Twickenham; Swift in St. Patrick's, Dublin; Savage in the churchyard of St. Peter's, Bristol; Parnell at Chester, where he died on his way to Dublin; Dr. Young at Alwyn, Hertfordshire, of which place he was the rector; Thompson in the churchyard of Richmond, in Surrey; Collins in St. Andrew's Church, at Chichester; Gray in the churchyard at Stoke-Pogis, where he conceived his "Elegy;" Goldsmith in the churchyard of the Temple Church; Falner at sea, with "all ocean for his grave;" Churchill in the churchyard of St. Martin's, Dover; Cowper in the church at Dereham; Chatterton in a churchyard belonging to the parish of St. Andrew's, Holborn; Burns in St. Michael's churchyard, Dumfries; Byron in the church at Hucknell, near Newstead; Crabbe at Trowbridge; Coleridge in the church at Highgate; Sir Walter Scott in Dryburgh Abbey; Southey in Crossthwaite Church, near Keswick; Shelly "beneath one of the antique wood-grown towers surrounding ancient Rome;" and Keats beside him, "under the pyramid which is the tomb of Cestius."

The Great Eastern.

This monster steamship is to be launched in July next. An english paper gives the following brief account of her:

An iron hull of the burden of 23,000 tons, nearly 700 feet long and 60 high, will meet his eye—the hull of Mr. Scott Russell's Great Eastern steamship. We must give a few more figures, for every figure is a monster and worth looking at separately. One is a figure of 30,000—the number of the iron plates which compose the enormous erection, each weighing the third of a ton, and each fastened by 100 rivets. The ship will accommodate 4,000 passengers, 800 of whom are first class. On an emergency she could carry 10,000 troops. She will contain 10 boilers and 100 furnaces. The cylinder of every engine will be six feet in diameter, and will weigh five times as much as the great bell of St. Paul's. The screw propeller will be 24 feet in diameter, and the diameter of the paddle wheels will be 56 feet, or considerably larger than the circus at Astley's. The principal suit of saloons will be 400 feet in length, and a promenade round the deck will afford a walk of more than a quarter of a mile. This monster ship will combine steam power in both shapes, screw and paddle, with sailing power. She will carry 11,000 tons of coal; she will be lighted by gas made on board, and the electric light will flicker like St. Elmo's fire at night from her masthead. She will spread 6,500 yards of canvas, and her speed is computed at fifteen knots, or eighteen miles an hour—a rate which will perform the voyage to India, by the Cape and to Australia, in little more than a month.

A Gay Lothario.

A good story is told of a fellow in North Carolina. Having been put in jail for marrying thirteen wives, he made his escape, and was seen three or four days afterwards by a gentleman who recognized him. The gentleman, anxious to secure the reward for his apprehension, invited him to dinner, and then slyly slipped out in pursuit of a constable; but great was his horror on his return to find that the culprit had absconded with his own wife.

An English cockney at Niagara, when asked how he liked the Falls, replied: "They are very ansom—quite so; but they don't quite answer my expectations; besides, I got thoroughly vetted, and lost me 'at. I prefer to look at em in an hingraving in 'ot weather, and in the 'ouse.

All that a man has to do these days to pass for a genius, is to button his coat behind, and wear his hat wrong side out. If he can upset an apple stand two or three times, it will help the matter vastly.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 30, 1857.

Change of Presidency.

A SHORT time before the last Conference held in this city, I received a communication from President Young, wherein it was stated that Judge Appleby was, among others, expected to return home to Utah this season. Previous to this, I had contemplated, as I stated at Conference, leaving him to preside over the Church in the Eastern States, as I considered him the most competent person to occupy that position on my departure for Zion. On receiving this intimation, which was evidently without any regard to the Presidency here, I appointed George J. Taylor my successor.

By the last mail I received a letter from President Young, in which he suggests that ELDER WM. I. APPLEBY succeed me, which will, of course, meet the approbation of all Saints; Elder George J. Taylor is, therefore, released and at liberty to return home. This will be no disappointment to him, as he accepted the Presidency with great reluctance, and ever since has anticipated an appointment from the Valley.

Bro. Appleby will therefore assume the Presidency of the Church in the East, and superintend the publication of THE MORMON, and all Saints are requested to sustain him in that office. JOHN TAYLOR.

New York, May 25, 1857.

Valedictory of President John Taylor.

Farewell Address to the Saints.

BELOVED BRETHREN—As the time has now arrived for our departure for Utah, it may not be inopportune to address you a few words.

It is now some two years and a half since our arrival in the great city of Gotham. Our object in coming was to build up and strengthen the scattered Saints, to attend to the interests of the emigration, and to defend the people of God—by the publication of a paper—against the vituperation, abuse and foul calumny of a degenerate and false priesthood, a vitiated and venal press, and reckless and unprincipled political demagogues. How far we have fulfilled our mission we must leave others to judge. We will briefly, however, review the course we have pursued.

Concerning the emigration, we have diligently looked after the interests of the Saints, whether on their arrival from abroad, during their sojourn with us, or on their further transit westward. We have not only saved them from the many petty annoyances to which other emigrants are subject on their arrival in these eastern cities, and helped them, by counsel and otherwise, to obtain support and employment; but we have been enabled to make arrangements with railway companies, negotiating for their passages on much lower terms than any other people had made, and out of the thousands that have passed through the east, on their journey west, there has no company gone but what has been taken at from one to three and a half dollars per head cheaper than any other passengers. It is but proper here to state that the admirable arrangements made by Presidents F. D. Richards and O. Pratt in Liverpool, the complete organization, order and discipline maintained on our emigrant vessels, as well as the orderly and peaceful disposition of the Saints, greatly facilitate these arrangements, as those engaged in conveying them have less trouble with them than with any other people. In addition to the above, we have also made arrangements at Florence for lands for a depot, for camp grounds, for fuel, and a reduction of one-half of the ferriage on all of our passengers on the Missouri, the Horn and the Loup Fork rivers. Our poor have been cared for by ourself, or the Saints here, through our influence; not one, that we have been informed of, has ever become burdensome to any eastern city, and our sick, with the exception of six or eight persons who went to the hospital, have been nursed and provided for by ourselves. And here let us remark, that our emigration, since its commencement, has paid from one to two hundred thousand dollars in the shape of head money, in the cities of New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia and Boston, for which, with the exception of some isolated cases of sickness, such as the above, we have obtained no returns. This demand upon us, however, we are looking into, and though it is a strong concentrated municipal regulation we hope to be enabled, in conjunction with others, to effect measures for its removal. In justice to Rail-road directors, agents and contractors, it is but proper to say that we have found them ever ready to make things as comfortable as possible for the emigrating Saints, and whenever any mistakes have occurred, pecuniarily or otherwise, we have found them ever ready to correct them.

Concerning the publication of THE MORMON, after making a few remarks, we leave it to be its own expositor. We commenced under very unfavorable circumstances in a city where we were a stranger, and in the midst of the greatest financial difficulties, without a reasonable prospect, humanly speaking, of being able to continue it three weeks. But we felt that we were sent of the Lord to perform a mission and in the name of Israel's God we were determined to try. The Lord has opened up our way, and in the midst of difficulties that frequently threatened to overwhelm us we have been enabled to pursue the even tenor of our way. No man since the commencement of this publication has had to call twice for anything due to him. In this we feel to acknowledge the kind and provident hand of our Heavenly Father, and to praise His name for His kindness unto us. We acknowledge also the liberality of many brethren, and likewise that of kind friends who are not in the church.

In regard to our position, we have fearlessly and boldly maintained the principles of Mormonism: its religious, moral, social, political and philosophical fitness, adaptation and purity, and have openly defied its calumniators, and defamers—whether priests, editors or politicians—to prove anything to the contrary. Our arguments and facts have only been met by a continuation of abuse, falsehood, calumny and vituperation, and no man has been found who dared to meet Mormonism fairly on its issues. We have proved over and over again by positive, uncontrovertible testimony the falsity of their statements, the inaccuracy of their information, and the worthless and unreliable character of their correspondence: like a pack of hounds they still yelp and howl without any definite object. If their pens are dipped in wormwood and gall, their mouths filled with falsehood and abuse, and their sheets teem with vituperation and calumny, it is because of their nature. The celebrated Watt said:

"Let dogs delight to bark and bite, for God hath made them so, Let bears and lions growl and fight for 'tis their nature too."

They forever quarrel among themselves, and abuse one another; they fillibuster in Nicaragua, Cuba, and Lower California; fight in Kansas, and kill one another in Washington; have Vigilance Committees in California; States rebel and pass laws against the laws of Congress; Cities and States pass counter laws,—not to say anything about North and South,—confusion every day becomes more confounded, and the glory of our national institutions is departing. This being the state of things, is it any wonder that the restless should abuse and calumniate us? and if their calumnies are not as extensively met, it is because evil is trumpet-tongued and has a thousand avenues of communication to our one. We have said before, and say now, that we stand prepared to meet Mormonism on its issues before the world at any time. Is there nobody of sufficient stamina to be found to meet and expose a thing which they call so "vile an imposture," so "hideous a monster," and such a "loathsome ulcer on our body politic?" Surely imposture, monsters, and ulcers, are losing much of their loathsome, hideous and repulsive character, when the professed champions of truth are obliged to take subterfuge in falsehood, calumny and vituperation, and dare not investigate them on their merits. What is the matter? It is easily explained. One of the most prominent eastern papers, the New York Herald, says, in their late tirade against the Mormons, that these libellers have no correspondents in Utah; that they are writing for political effect; and that their articles are all manufactured on this side of the Missouri River. So far, then, we consider that we have fulfilled our mission, and put into every honest man's possession a bulwark of truth wherein to entrench himself, a mirror, to reflect the hideous deformity of our calumniators, and have placed in his hands a rod to apply to "the fool's back;" and we still say to the Saints you need fear no evil, the cause of Zion is still onward and upward. Peace dwells in Zion, and righteousness in her habitations; and no power on this side of Hades can harm her inhabitants. We may be afflicted, we may be persecuted; but we shall overcome, for the Lord God has spoken it. "The wrath of man will be made to praise the Lord, and the remainder of wrath He will restrain;" and "man can do nothing against the truth; but for the truth."

Concerning the Saints who sojourn here, we feel that we have done our duty towards them. If they have been poor we have assisted to take care of them; if sick, we have watched over them; if ignorant, or in need of counsel, we have instructed them. We came here and found things in confusion, we have placed them in order. We have organized and set in order two conferences, New York and Philadelphia, and set presiding officers over them, and organized the various branches. We have taught the Saints the the principles of eternal life, and the order of the kingdom of God. It was gratifying for us to learn that about the same time that the spirit began to be poured out upon the Saints in Zion, the same spirit rested upon us; and when they commenced a reformation and re-baptism, so did we, thus showing that the same spirit operates upon all the faithful. We have perfect organizations here, so far as they can be, and all of them are moving on harmoniously, for which we feel to praise the Lord. In addition to this it may be gratifying to the Saints to learn that all the conferences are nearly free from debt; we believe that at this time $200 would cover all their indebtedness. Concerning our own financial affairs, we owe no man anything in this country. No man, Saint or sinner, has called upon us for a legitimate claim but what we have paid it on presentation. If any has any claims upon us now, they will be met in the same way. Those who have paid anything into the Perpetual Emigration Fund, for Tithing or for the Temple, we shall have it entered to their credit on our arrival in the valley.

In our labors here we have been very much assisted by the brethren who have labored with us; among whom are Elders N. H. Felt, Alexander Robbins, Dr. Jeter Clinton, Samuel A. Wooley, Levi Savage, E. K. Fuller, Judge W. I. Appleby, George J. Taylor, Angus M. Cannon, T. B. H. Stenhouse, Alexander Ott, Jacob Hofhiens, John F. Snediker and Arthur P. Welchman. Most of these Elders have taken hold with an energy and zeal that was alike creditable to themselves and useful to the cause.

On taking a retrospective view of our whole course, we retire, for the present, with the satisfactory feeling that we have done our duty. We may have made errors, but they were unintentional, and we are not aware that we could improve if we had it to do over again. In our dealings with the Saints we have been honest and frank; if in our attempts to benefit them we have given offence, it has not been intentional. In our publication we have strictly and unwaveringly adhered to the truth, and we have nothing to recant. We have coveted no man's gold or apparel, nor have we been chargeable to any; but have contributed more, pecuniarily, than any twenty men that can be found. In doing this, however, we have but simply done our duty, and feel to praise the Lord that He has enabled us thus far, by His goodness, to fulfil our mission. We feel on returning to Zion that we go with our garments clear of the blood of all men with whom we have had intercourse. With very great pleasure we turn our back upon this Babel of confusion, corruption and abomination, and bend our steps towards the valley of the mountains, the Zion of our God, where truth reigns, where virtue is not only a name, but is in reality respected—where dwell the upright and honorable of the earth; where exist the oracles of God; and where reside an honorable family circle who, with anxious eyes and throbbing hearts, are waiting to greet us on our return.

In bidding a short adieu to the Saints in the East, let us exhort you to be faithful and carry out the instructions that you have received from time to time, and God will bless you. Cleave to the principles of truth, and let no influence control you to the contrary. Listen unto the teaching of, and sustain, those who are placed over you; be just, be honest, be virtuous, be men of truth, in all your intercourse with men, that when they speak evil of you it may not be in truth, but in falsehood; that if you be persecuted, it may be "for righteousness sake," remembering that God sees you, and that if you be faithful and faint not, you shall reap the reward of your doings. Do all that you can to sustain the hands of those who have charge of THE MORMON, by contributing to its support and also by communicating to its columns. So far as you are able, pay your tithing, that you may have a name and an interest in the Temple of your God, that you may place yourselves in a position to secure an exaltation for yourselves, your progenitors and posterity, in the celestial kingdom of our God. As fast as the way opens, flee from this horrid Babel of confusion, and go to Zion.

To the Elders, we say be diligent, be faithful, preach the word of God with zeal and faithfulness; be diligent and energetic therein. Let this be your daily study and practice, and prove yourselves men of God. Cleave to the Lord, and call upon Him for wisdom and support, and He will hear and answer you, and help your ministrations. Let this apply to all Elders in this country; and when not engaged in labor for your families, labor for souls, for the welfare of the human family, and for the glory of God; and in blessing others, you yourselves shall be blessed, and in due time "shall go to Zion with songs of everlasting joy upon your heads." Sustain those who are placed over you in all their administrations and duties, and in like manner shall you be sustained and blessed.

To those who have charge of THE MORMON, we say fear not any adversary—publish the truth, and nothing but the truth; never condescend for a moment to the low quibbling, chicanery and petty manœuvres of most of the journals of the present day. If you cannot be sustained by truth, fall; and don't publish anything as truth except you know it to be such, and you will find in the end the power of the motto inscribed on THE MORMON—"Truth will prevail." Let men and devils howl, and lie, and calumniate—cleave you to the truth, and, above all, cleave to God. Pray for His support and guidance, and the blessing of the Most High God shall attend you. Labor diligently at the same time in preaching the gospel to all that will hear, and watch over the flock of Christ. And now may the God of peace sustain and keep you, in time and through all eternity, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

We retire to our mountain home with good feelings to all Saints and Elders, and with no feeling of enmity to our enemies, who are blinded by the god of this world. The worst feeling we have to them is that they may see the error of ways, repent of their sins, forsake their works of darkness, leave off lying, and cleave to the truth.

We hope soon to shake hands with those men of God with whom we have associated in former years, and for the present must say to all in this eastern country, until we meet again—FAREWELL.

To the Saints in the Eastern and Middle States—Greeting.

DEAR BRETHREN—Just on the eve of my contemplated departure for Utah, I received an appointment from the authorities in Zion, and have been set apart by President John Taylor to take the Presidency of the Church in the East, and superintend the publication of THE MORMON in the place of President George J. Taylor.

In entering upon the duties of my appointment, I feel that the responsibilities devolving upon me are great. To be a shepherd over the flock of Christ is no small matter—the value of souls who can compute? To have one's skirts clear of the blood of all men, by faithful warnings, teachings, and counsel, requires a person of the purest integrity, a virtuous, holy and upright walk; and to be filled with the spirit of God continually, to enlighten his understanding, to illuminate his mind, and to give him wisdom and intelligence, in order to counsel and direct in righteousness the affairs of those over whom he presides, and proclaim the principles of eternal truth, according to the mind and will of Him who groaned upon the tree, and suffered his own precious blood to be shed for us that we might live.

These are the feelings and sentiments of my soul, and I enter upon the duties of my Presidency with joy, and not with grief (although I would like to see my family and brethren whom I love in Utah) with a sincere desire, and earnest prayer for the welfare and prosperity of the Saints, and the building up of the Kingdom of God.

In order that all the presiding officers and travelling Elders under my charge may understand their several duties, and fields of labor, and all act in unison for the welfare of the Saints, and the extension of the principles of Eternal Truth, and in carrying out, as near as possible, the appointments made at the last April Conference, I therefore, reconfirm, and make the following appointments:

1. Elders Angus M. Cannon and T. B. H. Stenhouse, are appointed my Counsellors.

2. Elder Stenhouse is also appointed to assist in editing and publishing THE MORMON.

3. Elder Charles C. Dulin will continue to assist in this office.

4. Elder Alexander Ott's appointment at last April Conference as President of the New York Conference is hereby confirmed; likewise that of Elders William H. Miles and Charles C. Dulin, as his Counsellors.

5. President Ott is hereby released from assisting in the office and will devote his time in visiting the various Branches of the Church in his Conference, preaching, teaching, instructing and building up the Saints, in setting them in order and teaching them their duties in relation to the support of THE MORMON. He will also correspond weekly for THE MORMON, and also preach wherever a chance may be opened.

6. President Angus M. Cannon's appointment as President of the Philadelphia Conference I hereby confirm. He will visit the different Branches of the Church in that Conference, instructing the Saints, strengthening them, building them up, and preaching the Gospel to all, wherever an opening may be had, and enjoining upon the Saints their duties in all things, not forgetting THE MORMON. As one of my Counsellors, President Cannon is also appointed to travel through the New York Conference (whenever circumstances will admit) to counsel with President Ott, for the welfare of the Saints, preach the Gospel and assist in building up the Kingdom of our God; and will visit other Branches of the Church, under my Presidency, with me or otherwise, whenever the benefit of the Saints and circumstances require it.

7. Elders John Snedaker and A. P. Welchman, will continue to labor in the Philadelphia Conference under the direction of President A. M. Cannon until further orders.

The Presidents over Conferences, Presiding Elders over Branches, and Presidents of Districts, Elders, Priests and Teachers, will be dilligent and see that the Saints do their duty in all things. It is the counsel of the authorities in Zion, and the wish of President J. Taylor that THE MORMON should be continued; but we cannot accomplish this without means to do so; it requires material aid; our bills have to be paid every week. Now, brethren, and ye Saints of the Most High, are you willing to take hold and use your utmost exertions in support of THE MORMON? It comes into my charge without means on hand for its support, nearly all the subscriptions for the present year having been paid in at the commencement of the present volume, and been used in liquidating back indebtedness, hence the necessity of calling upon the Saints now for support and the continuance of its publication, and which must be done. Saints, THE MORMON is the unflinching advocate of your rights, the defender of truth, and of the Kingdom of God. It is the herald of light, and the disseminator of true principles. It imparts to you counsel weekly, and gives the latest intelligence of the affairs of the church in Zion, and throughout the world. It is a refuter of slanders, a shield and protector to the Saints, which certainly makes it a welcome messenger to your homes; and it is the imperative duty of the Saints to uphold and support it, as much so, as to say your prayers or do anything else.

The subscriptions to the Mormon since the commencement of its publication thus far have not one half supported it; scarcely any but Saints subscribe for it, and but few of them, in comparison with the number of Saints residing in the States. We shall endeavor by the aid of our friends to continue the publication of the paper in its present form, avoiding all unnecessary expense, and now call upon all the Saints to hold up our hands, and send on, without delay, subscriptions and donations; likewise the conference funds that the various presiding officers subscribed to at the April conference, and as much more as you can, weekly.

Therefore, let the Presidents of the Conferences, Elders, Teachers, and all, attend to this matter, and impress the importance of the same upon the Saints.

Let the Saints subscribe for the paper, read it carefully, then hand it to their friends; also get their friends to subscribe for it.

Teach the Saints to be cleanly in their habits, virtuous, holy and pure; watchful, prayerful, with an upright walk and godly conversation before all men, shunning all vain and frivolous talk; see that there is no backbiting or evil speaking among the the Saints, and that they keep themselves unspotted from the evils and corruptions that surround them in the world; see that no one partakes of the sacrament unworthily, and that all prepare themselves as fast as possible to gather to Zion.

Let prudence, wisdom and economy be studied; but let no selfish or sordid views or feelings ever enter the heart of any one professing to be a Saint of God when called upon to uphold His work. Brethren, the more we do in the cause of God, the more we will receive from Him, after He has proven us. I have proved it, and I know it.

No papers or books will be sent to any one unless the subscriptions or monies are remitted in advance. It has become absolutely necessary to adopt this rule in order to sustain the paper. Neither will any person be expected to receive subscriptions, donations, or receipts for the sales of the Mormon, retain the means in their own hands, apply it to their own uses, and then advise us to charge it to them. We cannot do any such thing. We are always willing to oblige as far as we can consistently, but such a course would soon decide the continuance of the publication of the paper.

The Presidents over Conferences, and traveling Elders, are requested to report to me, from time to time, the situations of the branches through which they travel. We also wish all those who can contribute any correspondence worthy of publication in the Mormon to do so.

Let Elders be appointed to hold meetings in the cities and towns whenever they can obtain a place to preach, every night in the week if possible—and let the presiding officers do the same whenever they can, and whenever they have an opportunity of doing good, do it. Preach the first principles of the gospel of Christ; let all doctrine you do not understand alone, and seek to save instead of destroy. Proclaim to the people that God has spoken from on high; that the heavens have been unveiled; that angels have administered to man; that Prophets and Apostles have been raised up in this dispensation; that the keys of Apostleship and Priesthood have been restored to man; and that God has now a church established on earth according to the pattern of heaven. Teach faith, repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, and the imposition of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Let all the Saints, officers included, who have not renewed their covenants by being re-baptised according to the counsel of the Presidency in Zion, attend to it forthwith, for no one will be considered in fellowship who refuses or neglects to obey this counsel when they have an opportunity, if they have not already attended to it.

Let the presiding officers see that no Elder or lay member goes through the Conferences collecting means without authority, or idling away time and living upon the Saints. Let all Elders sent here on missions from Zion, report themselves immediately to the Presidency, at New York, when they will have their field of labor assigned them, so that all things may work together in harmony, according to the order of God, and for the benefit of the cause.

A great deal of slander, falsehood and calumny is published and circulated freely at the present time by a venal vitiated Press against the Mormons, but let the wicked howl; we know the work is of God—He is its author, upholder, supporter and protector, and it is bound to prosper, go ahead, and finally triumph. Of this we have not the least doubt, and no power on earth or in hell can stop it. Therefore let us do our duty, come life or come death. God is our shield and protector, and in Him we will ever put our trust.

Whatever counsel may be necessary for us to give for the benefit of the Saints and Elders, will be imparted through the columns of the Mormon or otherwise from time to time.

Thus dear brethren, ye servants of the Most High, clothed upon with the Priesthood of the Son of God, after the order of an endless life, and ye Saints of the Latter Days, your duties are laid before you. Take hold with me and strengthen my hands and uphold the Elders sent among you; hearken to the counsels and instructions given you, and assist me in carrying out the counsel and wishes of our brethren in Zion, and I promise you, in the name of Israel's God, you shall be blest in so doing.

Elders of Israel, be men of God in very deed; honor your Priesthood, honor your calling, be meek, watchful, humble, prayerful and dilligent in all things: seek to be filled with the Spirit of the Lord continually, and let the fire of the Holy Ghost dwell richly in your bosoms, and be ye saviours of men; preach, teach, council, set in order, rebuke and exhort, with all long suffering; preach wherever a door opens, seek after the welfare of souls, and let us all co-operate together to do the work assigned us, so that we may rejoice in our labors and finish our mission with joy to ourselves; meet the approbation of our God and of our brethren in Zion. Can we sit down and say in our heart, "it is enough?" Are there not yet some honest souls who have never heard the Gospel? Are our skirts clean from the blood of all men? Are the Saints prepared for the appearing of the Saviour to inherit the earth, and enter into the Celestial glory and eternal life? Verily no!

Shall we as servants and Saints of the Most High bearing the Priesthood of the Son of the Virgin, members of the Church of Christ, organized after the order of heaven, with Apostles and Prophets, with whom are the keys of Apostleship and Priesthood, to open the door of salvation to a lost and ruined world, to whom angels have ministered, who have heard the voice of God and gazed, while wrapt in the visions of Heaven, upon the glories of the Celestial, Terrestrial and Telestrial worlds, and also upon the misery of the damned? Shall we who have tasted of the good word of God, been made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and realized a portion of the power of the world to come, and the order of Heaven, that leads to crowns, thrones, sceptres, exaltations and dominions, and redemption of our dead. Shall we, I say, ever be unfaithful or weary in such a cause? No, verily no. While water runs, and grass grows; while virtue is lovely and vice hateful; while we have a God to serve and a soul to save; ever let us be unflinching in the cause of Jehovah; continue while the brittle thread of life shall last, until the race is fought and the victory won. W. I APPLEBY,

President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in the Eastern and Middle States.

New York, May 28, 1857.

Departure of Prest John Taylor.

THE readers of the MORMON have doubtless been anticipating the valedictory of Prest. John Taylor. It will be read with mingled feelings of satisfaction and regret. The work he has accomplished in the East, imposed upon him great and constant labor, and when its outlines are summed up, presents something satisfactory to look at, and enough for many to reflect on and be stimulated by his example of unwearied perseverance and faithfulness in the discharge of duty. He has accomplished a good work for which his brethren and sisters are grateful, bless his name, and will assuredly regret his departure.

He left here early on Tuesday morning for Philadelphia, and was accompanied as far as South Amboy by Judge Appleby, President E. R. Young of Connecticut, Judge Dulin, and Elder Stenhouse. The last hours with him were very pleasant and agreeable. His mind was, in a measure, relieved from the care that too often weighed heavily upon him, and his heart beat kindly to the Saints and numerous friends he had left behind. We were glad to see him in such excellent health and buoyant spirits for entering upon his long journey. After dealing out to each his last instructions, counsels and an accompanying expression of personal friendship and best wishes, he left the steam-boat for the trail of the Iron Horse, with the united blessings of his brethren, and prayers for his protection by the way and safe arrival among his brethren in Zion.

We think it not amiss, in connection with the departure of President Taylor, to speak of his son, Elder George J. Taylor, whom the Saints in the East had already begun to regard as their President, but who now returns to Utah. Bro. George started from Utah for New York with his father and the Elders that accompanied him in 1854. For some time after their arrival here, he took part in the labors of this office, then joined Prest. Cannon on a mission to Delaware, under the presidency of Doctor Clinton. A short time previous to the departure of Bishop Felt for Utah he (Bro. George) returned to this office, and succeeded him in his department. He was appointed President of the New York Conference last October, and at last April Conference was accepted unanimously as the future President of the Church in the East. Immediately after conference he left New York for the frontiers to assist in the emigration from the Eastern States. Though the Saints are now disappointed in their expectation of seeing Bro. George in their midst, and listening to his instructions they will cherish his memory and speak with praise of his unassuming manners and kindness to his brethren.

Testimonial.

PREST. A. M. CANNON has forwarded us the following testimonial which the Priesthood of his Conference presented, on Tuesday evening, to Prest. John Taylor:

TESTIMONIAL
PRESENTED TO Elder John Taylor,
EDITOR OF THE MORMON,
AND PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS IN THE EASTERN STATES,
By the Presiding Officers of the Philadelphia Conference, May 26th, 1857.

PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR—Beloved Brother: We, the presiding officers of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in the Philadelphia Conference, embrace the opportunity of your passage through this city, on your return to your family and to the Church in Zion, to testify to you our deep sense of gratitude for the blessings we have received through your labors since your arrival in the Eastern States.

Contemplating the condition of the Saints at that time—scattered, disorganized, without direct instruction from the Prophet of the Most High, and without a defender of our faith as followers of Jesus Christ, and of our rights as American citizens and descendants of honored revolutionary sires, we thank the Lord and His servant Brigham for your appointment to the Presidency of His Church in the East. With joyful hearts we recognize that your voice and pen have awakened us to a lively sense of our duties towards God and His Kingdom; and we feel it equally a duty to testify our approbation of the course you have pursued in the defence of the cause of Truth, and your maintainance of the honor of Israel in the mountains, when the one has been opposed and the other calumniated and maligned.

We have witnessed the many difficulties you had to contend with in establishing THE MORMON, at a moment when your friends were few, scattered, and almost helpless, and deeply sympathized with you; but we rejoice that we can this day congratulate you on the success that has crowned your labors and brought you through the struggle victorious.

While we have, individually, reason to be grateful for your direction and instruction at home by the fireside, in our councils and in our public assemblies, we consider that you have accomplished a still greater work, by your fearless defence of Mormonism and Utah through the columns of THE MORMON. Though at the present moment the Press is flooded with abuse and falsehood, from the pens of Apostates in and out of Utah, anonymous correspondents and corrupt United States officials, who have gained access to the public by corrupting certain editors, who are ever ready to defame and misrepresent for the accomplishment of political purposes, or low, selfish and debasing ends, we consider that your labors have placed Mormonism before the world in a position more consonant with its merits than it previously occupied; and that, though these calumniators may rave, the thinking public sees beyond their spiteful, exaggerated charges, a movement neither of fools, fanatics, impostors or dupes. Your manly and unreserved avowal, for yourself and for the inhabitants of Utah, of adherence to the Constitution of the United States, in word and in spirit, has had its influence upon those who seek to know the politics as well the religion of this great movement on which the attention of the whole world is now fixed. Your labors for toleration to Jew and Gentiles have thrown in the face of our accusers their charge of exclusiveness and bigotry, and shown to the world that those who have the Truth, fear no man, nor the influence of men.

We wish you the highest blessings of the Almighty when you are journeying to your family; may the spirit of the Lord be around you as a wall of fire to shield you from the wickedness of men, the treachery of the Indians; and may you be permitted to greet your family in possession of the rich blessings of heaven, and be met with that approbation from the prophet of the Lord, which we are convinced you have striven to deserve.

Trusting we may all meet you again, and receive individually your approbation as we collectively accord ours to you, we are Your brethren and fellow laborers,

Angus M. Cannon, President of Philadelphia Conference.

Assassination of President P. P. Pratt.

Our readers will doubtless be startled with the above announcement; our heart is deeply pained to say it, but we have no reason for doubting the sad intelligence that has reached us, though as yet only by the way of the public press. A few days ago we were advised of his apprehension near Fort Gibson in the northern portion of Texas, and close upon the receipt of that information we learned by Telegraphic Despatch that he had been assassinated near Van Buren, Ark., May 14. Many of our cotemporaries are rejoicing over the bloody deed, justifying the murderer and spiting out their vengeance with the fury of hell that nestles in their corrupt hearts.

As we have not the space this week that we require to enter into detail, and may, before another issue, receive additional information on the subject, we shall only say, for the benefit of those who are interested, that the lady who returned to New Orleans, from Utah, last fall, for her children—a lengthy account of which was published in THE MORMON, March 14th—has been overtaken en route for her mountain home, by the demon in human form who had so flagrantly violated every vestige of claim to the title of husband. Herself and children are once more in his power. After failing to sustain the charge against Prest. Pratt "of stealing the clothing on the children, in value eight or ten dollars," he followed him some eight miles from the place of trial, and taking advantage of his lonely position, shot him, justifying his crime by a charge of seduction.

Though we deeply deplore the loss to the Church of such a great and upright man, and the bereavement to his family, yet we mourn not. His life has been one of honor and faithfulness; his days have been well spent in the service of His God; his name is revered by thousands and tens of thousands, and will be honored by millions yet unborn, when that of his cowardly assassin and those who have cheered him on to his damning deed, and who now rejoice over their crime will be loathsome and a stink in the nostrils of God and good men.

Utah

As the Governorship of Utah has been the leading question of interest before the public for some time back, and the inhabitants of that Territory are so little aware of the deep and pious interest that is felt for their soul's salvation in these Christian States, and know not how much our wise and great men are nervous about the well being of the poor Mormons, we have concluded to publish the following extracts from Washington despatches and city cotemporaries which will doubtless be read with interest by the folks in Utah. We must, however, inform our Utonian friends that what we now publish is not all that has been published. Did we attempt to give "a full, true and particular account," we should fill our sheet with nothing else for months to come. But this slice from the general lump will, nevertheless, enable them to form an idea of the loving kindness that is rushing to the knuckles of Uncle Sam's pious children, and while they pray "Lord deliver us from our friends," they will keep a watchful eye on their enemies.

How many persons have been offered the Governorship of Utah we know not, nor can we name with certainty the time when the clamor for a new Governor began in the States; but the subject has been before the public at least more than two months. We have before us a telegraphic despatch from Washington, dated March 15th, in which it is stated that Major Ben. McCulloch, of Texas, had the Governorship tendered to him: with that we may commence our string of despatches.

WASHINGTON, March 15, 1857.

"Major Benj. McCulloch, of Texas, has been tendered the Governorship of Utah, but declines."

March 18.

"No action will be taken at present on the subject of the Governorship of Utah."

March 26.

"The Governorship of Utah has been indirectly placed at the disposal of the Hon. Fayette McMullen of Virginia, by intimations from five members of the Cabinet, inquiring if he would accept. No definite answer has yet been returned, and as the place is not inviting the honorable gentleman requires time for reflection."—N. Y. Tribune.

The following week Mr. McMullen was reported to have "indignantly" declined the offer.

April 2.

"Ex-Governor Geary returned to town today, for the purpose of settling his Kansas accounts. His friends are urging him as the man to send to Utah to settle accounts with Governor Brigham Young."

The appointment of Governor of Utah is one of the domestic questions that have been laid over to attend to more pressing foreign questions. It is stated that the appointment was tendered to Major Benj. McCulloch, of Texas, and declined."

April 24.

"The Governorship of Utah has been tendered Major Benj. McCulloch, and it is believed that he will accept the appointment. A letter is now on its way to him, requesting his presence in Washington.

The design of the administration is to pursue a peaceful policy towards Utah, in order that the laws may be executed and the rights of every inhabitant in the Territory protected without recourse to arms.

WHAT IS TO BE DONE WITH UTAH?

April 25.

KANSAS having been put in the way of pacification, by the appointment of a safe and constitutional as well as able Governor, the President is now devising how to send health and safety to Utah.

The truth is, Mr. Buchanan feels much more anxious about Utah than Kansas, for there is ten times more danger of a long and bloody civil war in Utah than in Kansas.

It is thought that Major Heiss, new paper, "The States," speaks upon a perfect knowledge of the embarrassment felt at the White House respecting the management of that remote mountain-cradled Territory. A war with the Mormons must be a war of extermination. That almost inaccessible stronghold is garrisoned by from thirty to fifty thousand hardy fanatics, and the force necessary to storm their mountain fastness, and reduce to submission its religiously insane, but perfectly organized defenders, would leave the cost the Seminole war at least fifty millions behind.

A force of ten thousand volunteers, besides all the aid that could be spared from the regular army, is the least that can take the field with the least chance for success. Even then, it is an even question whether these concentrated fanatics would not sweep before them, like chaff, a force of ten or even twenty thousand men. The invaded can choose their own positions; they can retire, skirmish; scatter, and return to the attack when the chances of victory seem to offer in their favor.

"It is very easy to talk of conquering this American Switzerland, a thousand miles off, where every ounce of supplies will cost us its weight in gold, and where the commissariat will cost more than it did in Mexico, campaign for campaign; but when all is done, what shall we have to pay for the ten or twenty thousand lives and the sixty or eighty millions of dollars we expend upon those rocks?"

This was the answer of one of the best soldiers we have in the army; and it is well understood that Gen. Davis, the late Secretary of War, and his antipodes, Gen. Scott, hold the same opinion about a forcible interposition in Utah. Yet, as an influential portion of the press call impatiently for some action in that direction, Mr. Buchanan will hardly be prepared to sustain the position of "masterly inactivity" advised by many of his friends in the Senate. He may nominate a sound, judicious and liberal man as Governor; but if he is not firmly sustained, he will be a cypher in authority—and if he comes in collision with the Mormon chiefs, how is he to be sustained?

"It would be a happy thing to see law, order and justice reign in Utah; but it will be well to look carefully ahead, and weigh well the costs and the consequences, before we put our hands too far in that Mormon beehive. Bloodshed and demoralization are the necessary attendants of war; but war itself may be preferable to the admission of an alien and leprous community to the general fellowship and equal sovereignty of the Union. It is the most serious and disturbing question of the day at the White House.—N. Y. Sun, May 2nd.

HERBIT.

May 7.

Nothing has been received from Col. Ben. McCulloch, as to whether he will accept the Governorship of Utah. The President is extremely anxious that he should accept the position, and has written him accordingly, urging him to do so. The administration is constantly receiving information from creditable sources communicating new outrages committed by Brigham Young and his deluded followers; and the President is determined to send a sufficient military force there to enforce the United States laws and preserve order. Peter G. Washington is said to be strongly pressed for the appointment of Secretary of Utah. He is thought to be admirably qualified for the post.

May 9.

The Governorship of Utah has been tendered to Major Ben McCulloch, and it is believed that he will accept the appointment. A letter is now on its way to him requesting his presence in Washington.

May 13.

The letter received from Major McCulloch, Deputy Marshal, merely expresses the belief that the Major, "who was not at home," will accept the Governorship of Utah.

May 16.

Official despatches recently received warrant the belief that Brigham Young has fled from Utah, as it is known he was in treaty with the Indians for safe conduct through their country. Ex-Justice Drummond has arrived here for consultation on the affairs of the Territory.

May 18.

To-day it seems to be well understood that Justice Drummond will be tendered the office of Governor of Utah, in case Major McCulloch declines, and I have it from the Judge himself that he will accept upon condition that Gen. Harney is sent into that country with a force sufficient to enable the officers to enforce the laws. In case Gen. Harney and Judge Drummond go to Utah backed by the Government, the Mormons will yield or be compelled to find refuge in another country. They are both cautious but bold men.

The best informed here in regard to Utah affairs do not credit the story of Bringham Young's flight from Great Salt Lake. The rumor probably was started by Young himself for the purpose of allaying anticipated excitement here in regard to recent transactions in Mormondom, and to prevent the departure of an expedition against him until it shall be too late to attempt it this year.

It is understood here that Turner Nelson has declined the appointment of Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Utah. He has been telegraphed to notify the Department immediately if this is the fact, as it is desired to fill the place as early as possible.

I cannot learn that the Administration has definitely determined to send a force to Utah this season. Certainly no troops have yet been ordered to that service, and unless they can start by from the 1st to the 10th of June, when the grass on the plains is fresh it will be impossible for a large body of cavalry to move at all before an other year. I fear there is an unfortunate disposition here to temporize with this troublesome question, and postpone the inevitable issue.—Cor. of Daily Times.

May 19.

A member of the Cabinet to-day received a telegraphic despatch from Major McCulloch, declining the Governorship of Utah. He, however, expects to reach this city in the course of ten days.

It is not true that Judge Drummond has been offered the appointment, but this afternoon a telegraphic dispatch was sent to a Western man, whose name is officially concealed for the present, tendering it to him. Recent information has caused a change in the policy hitherto contemplated, the condition of Utah now being such as to require vigorous measures. Troops in large numbers will be sent thither, probably under command of Gen. Harney. The Administration is anxious to act at once in this important matter, especially in view of the obstruction to judiciary proceedings, and accounts frequently received relative to oppressions by the Mormons of those who do not belong to their fraternity.

May 20.

A large military force has been ordered for Utah, to take their position on the Government reserve, forty miles south of Salt Lake City. The new Governor of the Territory has been selected, but has not yet been heard from, and his whereabouts is unknown. Whoever and wherever he may be, it is understood that he was recommended by Mr. Bright of Indiana.

"The Indian Bureau has received dispatches from Brigham Young, giving an account of his transactions as Superintendent of Indian affairs in Utah, dated March 31, in which he says: 'Since my last report we have had a time of peace, and, apparently, of great contentment generally, and more especially among the Indians.' This is the only allusion he makes to the social affairs of the Territory."—Cor. of Daily Times.

May. 21.

"It is estimated that the troops now moving in the direction of Utah comprise about 2,000 men.

There are two vacant Federal Judgeships in the Territory which will soon be filled, and probably another Marshal will be appointed as preliminary to enforcing the civil process. In the event of opposition on the part of the Mormons to this, the military will be employed to enforce the laws and protect the citizens of the United States from Mormon oppression. It is supposed, however, that no necessity for extreme measures will arise.

The Governorship is still unsettled. Although several gentlemen are solicitous for the position, the Government is evidently anxious to select one who will combine personal bravery with administrative talent and unquestioned discretion.

The programme of operations for Utah will be consummated with the least possible delay."

"No appointment has yet been made of a Governor to Utah. Major Benj. McCulloch, who is expected to arrive here soon, may yet be prevailed upon to accept. If he does not, it is proposed to give Gen. Harney both civil and military powers to act as Governor, until law and order is established in Utah."

From "The General Newspaper Despatch" the same day.

"It is not true that Governor Wright, of Indiana, or any other person, has been selected for the Governorship of Utah. The difficulty exists in finding a man suitable for the emergency."

"May 22.

"My informant was slightly in error in naming the individual tendered the Governorship of Utah. It was Col. Cummins, the present General Superintendent of Indian Affairs west of the Mississippi, instead of Governor Wright. Col. Cummins telegraphed Secretary Thompson yesterday, declining the position. The Administration are again at sea on this subject.

There have been no troops whatever ordered to Utah, nor are there any in that Territory. Col. Steptoe's passage through was the last appearance of our military there."—Daily Times.

May 24.

"It was rumored on the street that Major Heiss had been offered the Governorship of Utah, and had declined. Major Benj. McCulloch is looked for daily, and it is thought he will be made to accept it.

Correspondence from Eld. Edw. Sutherland.

[At a moment when all manner of falsehood is written against the servants of the Lord in Utah, and that by some of the relatives of the writer of the following letter, we think it not amiss to give it to the public. Mr. Edw. Sutherland is an elder brother of Mr. Thomas Sutherland who was killed on the plains last season at the time that Col. Babbitt met his death.—ED.]

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, March. 31, '57.

MY DEAR STENHOUSE—Nearly two years have rolled away since I gave you the parting hand as I was about to leave the shores of England for a long and arduous journey to the home of the Saints in the valleys of the mountains. The feelings of which I was the subject then are at this moment before my mind. Surely nothing but the love of the truth—the gospel of the Son of God—could induce me to forsake my home and former associations to take a long and perilous journey over land and sea to a remote location in the midst of the mountains, thousands of miles away. I thought of the many pleasurable seasons I enjoyed while in the ministry—the new acquaintances I had formed while propagating the truths of heaven, as restored to the earth in these days through the prophet Joseph for the salvation of the human family. It was then I was about to enter on the practical truth pointed out by those truths revealed. It would be impossible to acquaint you in a single letter with the many changes through which I have passed since then. I have turned over fresh pages in human history that have afforded me information of the most useful kind, and added to my experience in the kingdom of God. But notwithstanding the changes and vicissitudes through which I have been called to pass, to feel that I was identified with a people who were noble and true ever caused me to feel, let the future reveal what it might, that I had much to be thankful for, and had gained much in the work.

While traveling to this land I was the subject of many careful reflections, of which the traveling of the people of God in ancient times formed a part. I thought of ancient Israel in their howlings to accomplish their escape from Egypt, if happily they might reach the promised land. I thought of Abraham in leaving his house for a land to which he was a stranger. I thought of the Saints who wandered as strangers and pilgrims on the earth. I thought of the Son of God, who, while "foxes had holes and birds of the air had nests," and every insect had its home, "had not where to lay his head." I thought of the ancient worthies, who left all—their homes and country, their friends and associations, houses and lands—to seek a city out of sight—a city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. What a striking resemblance between the church of God in every age! No wonder its overthrow has been sought in this, as in other ages of its history. How few there are in the present day prepared to endure the loss of all things for the promotion of the truths of the gospel? Mankind vaunt their love of truth and their desire for the salvation of the world, but they are not to be trusted. They love to talk of the endurance of the people of God at other times and under other circumstances, but it will not suit in their day, and when a people like the Latter Day Saints contend for the true order of the church of God, notwithstanding the difficulties with which it has to contend, they, like their great High Priest, are "despised and rejected of men;" but, like him, truth will vanquish every foe, and reign triumphant over all the earth. Such is Mormonism, and such the work it is destined to accomplish. Let pulpits rave and bigots scold in their erring zeal, Mormonism is the friend of humanity, and no man need fear to bow to its mandates, for if he prove faithful, and the words of inspiration be true, the end of that man is peace.

"Its streams the whole creation reach
So plenteous is the store,
Enough for all, enough for each,
Enough for ever more."

I might advert to the doctrines of Mormonism but with these you are well acquainted, they are pregnant with infinite momentiousnes, and while they can be understood by a child, yet they are sufficient to fill the grasp of a Seraph's intellect. They are the bushes of Eternity—the translation of the thoughts and solemn purposes of God into the dialect of man, merged into one grand constellation; they are the brightness of a beautiful world. Genius might flash its curuscations, but its sparks would be profitless. Egypt, Greece and Rome might summon from the shades of death their poets, statesmen and philosophers, and these with their lighted torches might try to paint the pathway to eternal life, but alas their beautiful lights would be but faint and flickering, and only calculated to bewilder and deceive. It is not so with Mormonism; in the one you recognise the genius of man, in the other you acknowledge the intellect of God. Here, from the valleis of the mountains, Gospel light shines forth so that none may fail to comprehend it. It is a sun of God's own kindling—a sun that will extinguish all the lesser lights of previous dispensations and wrap the earth in the light of heaven.

I was much pleased on my arrival in the valley to find the City in such an advanced condition. It speaks in favor of the industry of the people and reflects credit on the authorities. In all public movements and matters of importance the people seek the counsel of President Young, such is the confidence reposed in him. He is in every sense of the word a gentleman. In his general policy he cannot be rivaled, and in his counsel to the people he displays the wisdom that cometh from on high, having for his object the happiness and prosperity of the people over whom he presides. In his public teachings at the Tabernacle he indeed speaks as one having authority—he displays not the eloquence of man but of God, his words are full of eternity, they are charged with the fire of heaven.

As to Bro. Kimball his faithfulness and unflinshing course have been well known in the cause of truth, his soul is large and generous and full of blessing for the Saints, and all who feel well to the cause of the Redeemer.

The same might be said of Bro. Grant, who has lately gone behind the vail, he was an Angel of light among the people of God, and as a flaming sword to the wicked.

Brother D. H. Wells, who now fills his place, I believe will be a great blessing to the Saints. The elements of greatness seem implanted in his nature and filled with the spirit of his calling he promises to play an important part in the latter-day work.

Thus the work of God rolls on bearing the visible impress of its divine origin in the selection of the master minds who are charged with its contracts on the earth. May they live long to bear off the Kingdom, till 'righteousness cover the earth as the water cover the sea.'

I have endeavored in a condensed manner to give you the result of my experience since I last saw you. I was pleased to hear of your arrival in New York and appointment in the Mormon office.

Please present my kind rememberances to Mr. Taylor and your lady, and accept the same yourself.

Yours, very sincerely, E. SUTHERLAND.

FOR THE MORMON.

Philosophical Certainty of a Future State.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONTINUED.

FROM the mercy and wisdom which the eternal mind displays in its infinite evolutions on the grand theatre of the universe, we infer that God, as the personification of the governing principle of Nature, has been existing through the mist of everlasting ages; that the powers of His divine perfection make Him independent and omnipotent; that His object is to see in His creations the reflex of His stupendous wisdom—hence the intelligence, rationality and variety which is manifest in the machinery of the magnificent apparatus of Nature, in which a vast field of numberless glories is presented for the study and contemplation of an endless order of intelligences.

The innumerable host of stars we see at the canopy of heaven, with all the magnificent appendages of celestial scenery, are not able to remain a novelty to God, to represent always new scenes for contemplation to Him; because all those principles, laws and ideas which we find displayed in the evolution of heavenly bodies, in the economy of Nature, had their origin and existence in the fathomless depths of His eternal mind—there they were slumbering during the countless ages of past eternity, till His almighty will put them in operation. Is it then reasonable to suppose that the spirit, which is a part of the divine essence, should after death be in a state of non-entity; that is to say, should cease to exist while the machinery of the material Universe continues to operate? Certainly not.

Again, let us examine the moral faculties of the human mind, which embraces a world of its own, the realm of intellectual and moral operations and enjoyments. Do you know what an ocean of feelings, passions, affections, principles and instincts are slumbering in the inmost recesses of the inner-man? Can the magician's wand perform such wonders as the unsearchable mind does, viz: to dress the world either in the sunbeams of happiness or the lightning flashes of misery; to transform a Heaven into Hell, or Hell into Heaven? God has created man in His own image; he is or ought to be, under all circumstances, the true and beautiful reflex of His wisdom and mercy—hence we see him endowed with a variety of moral powers which like the intellectual ones are capable of an eternal improvement and enlargement, and this expansion of the mental gifts is brought about by exercise, trials and difficulties; so that the development of our physical and intellectual powers involves a vast field of ordeals or tests, in which all our energies and principles are called into action.

On analyzing the moral powers of the human character, we find that there are many principles in us, as for instance, parental and fraternal affection, courage, temperance, gratitude, generosity, philanthropy, charity &c. No matter how depraved man, how full of abominations the world has always been;—no matter how often the voice of virtue has been drowned in the flood of unheard immoralities, there are many examples both in sacred and profane history; where moral greatness nobility and beauty of the soul are sublimely personified as sufficient illustrations of the foregoing remarks of man's capability of moral improvement, as for instance: Damon and Pythias, the ties of whose friendship could not be dissolved by all the terrors of an ignominious death; Regulus, the noble Roman, preferred suffering the most excruciating tortures and even death, to being dishonest and turning a traitor to his country. Cyrus, of whose life and campaigns, the eminent Greek writer Xenophon, gives an elaborate account, had all the qualities of a noble and beautiful soul; he was brave, wise, moderate and generous, and exercised all his moral powers to happify his people. Scipio, and Phocion, and others whose moral courage and noble sentiments gave their illustrious names the crown of immortality. Aristides, whose sole aim was to be virtuous and promote the interests of his country. He possessed an extraordinary greatness of soul, to which all his passions were brought in subjection. The love of virtue and his country did overcome all feelings of selfishness, revenge, hatred and jealousy. His integrity and disinterestedness as public treasurer, was shown by his love of poverty.

In the sacred records however, we find in our Lord and Saviour, the most beautiful incarnation of divine perfection, as a personified beau-ideal of everything noble and virtuous; every idea of his was a sunbeam of Godliness, every word a blessing, and at the end of his sojourn on the earth, he sacrificed his life for the salvation of a fallen world. We find, that in all ages of the world's history, men have risen to demonstrate the power of virtue and promote happiness among the human family; men who from the pure motives of philanthropy, sacrificed their own interests at the shrine of beneficence.

Shall we then suppose, that such noble-minded, public-spirited, energetic men, who by the brilliancy of their moral powers, were well qualified to happify infinitely their fellow beings, should be annihilated, i. e., be forever swept from the stage of action? That after they have been struggling for a few fleeting years in this vale of tears, to diffuse happiness among mankind, their powers, that were so active on earth, should be paralyzed for ever? The introduction of such an hypothesis is not rational, if we bear in mind, that our sphere of operations in this sublinary existence is very limited; as a variety of causes do interfere with a full development of the moral powers of man. It is a fact that the generality of mankind are so little favored by fortune and circumstances, that all their time is merely taken up with earning an honest subsistence for themselves and their families, consequently a great development of the intellectual and moral powers, is there out of the question entirely. Then we have to know, that the most active sway of these powers is confined to a very short time, as their expansion generally does not take place before the meridian of life, and then when just engaged in philanthropic and virtuous pursuits, men are frequently snatched off by the icy hand of death. Independent of the above, a great many physical obstacles interfere often with the operation and expansion of the moral powers, as for instance, want of means, sickness, weak constitution, &c., that paralize frequently the exertions of the most philanthropic minds.

Is it then consistent with the mercy and intelligence of God to suppose that such moral gifts are bestowed upon us, that a longing, a desire is implanted in us to do good to our fellow-intelligences, for the purpose of seeing them never fully developed, and that those men whose virtue and philanthropy entitled them to the praise and esteem of coming generations should be swept forever from the sphere of existence, that their moral powers were extinguished forever; or is it more reasonable to suppose that all those noble and beautiful gifts will be in full play and development in a future world, where all the creations will be dressed in the bloom of immortality. The latter argument is sustained by the fact, that the supreme wisdom of God adapts the faculties and gifts of a being to the sphere in which it is to operate; in fact, we find this throughout the different departments of Nature, where means are generally in proportion to the ends. On examining the phenomenal world, we discover traces, yes, a system of universal beneficence, as for instance in the beautiful panorama of celestial scenery presented to our enraptured gaze during the night, in the peculiar properties of heat, light, &c.—[To be continued.

Notice.

THE Saints who desire to send means to their friends in Europe, can have the same attended to, by forwarding any sum they wish in current money, to this office, enclosing one dollar or more, in proportion to the amount sent, to defray the expenses of procuring Bills of Exchange, making remittances, foreign postage, &c., describing particularly to whom, and where they wish to have it sent.

All subscriptions, donations, &c., for the support of THE MORMON, or Conference Fund (except the donations and Conference Funds raised in the Philadelphia Conference, which will be forwarded as usual through President Cannon) must be sent hereafter to my address; as also Tithing; P. E. Fund, and donations for the Temple from those who wish to contribute the same, so each person may be duly credited, and the means forwarded to Zion, and have their names entered in "The Book of the Law of the Lord."

No Power of Attorney, or other legal instrument of writing, going to Europe or elsewhere, forwarded to us for the urpose of sending to Washington in order to obtain the attestation of the Department, and the British Consul's Certificate and seal to the same, will be attended to in future; unless the means to defray the expenses and foreign postage accompanies the Instrument, as there is considerable expense attending it as well as labor. We would like to oblige all, and are willing to give our services when we have opportunity; but we cannot advance means to defray such expenses.

All communications intended for THE MORMON should be addressed—Editor of THE MORMON, New York. Otherwise direct to my address, Box No. 3957, New York Post Office. W. I. APPLEBY.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are he kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

No. 42 Main Street, St. Louis, Mo., (at the Sign of the Deer in Windows.)

WE are now in receipt of our stock of Goods for the coming season, which enables us to say, that we have now in store, and for sale, the LARGEST and most COMPLETE assortment of Guns, Pistols, Sporting Apparatus, and Goods selected expressly for the arming of wagon trains, for crossing the plains, the markets of Santa Fe, Salt Lake, and Oregon, &c., that can be found in any HOUSE in the WESTERN COUNTRY!

Among the most staple articles now on hand, can be found upwards of 2,000 DOUBLE AND SINGLE SHOT GUNS; 2,500 MUSKETS AND UNITED STATES RIFLES, both new and second-hand, with flint or percussion locks; COLT'S REVOLVERS, of all sizes, ALWAYS on hand, in quantities to satisfy almost any demand, and at EASTERN PRICES. Also, all the most improved patterns of Revolvers and other Pistols now in use.

N. B.—We, the undersigned, being practical men in all matters appertaining to the arming and equipping of Emigrant and Merchant wagon trains for crossing the plains, renders our experience worthy of consultation, to make it the more easy for the emigrant and trader to supply themselves with the necessary articles, viz: FIRE ARMS, FIXED AMUNITION, PROVISIONS AND GROCERIES, of all kinds; Wagons, Tents, Horses, Mules, Oxen; in short, everything necessary for their comfort.

We also beg leave to call the attention of EASTERN HUNTING PARTIES, that wish to spend a few months on the plains, that we have all the necessary arms and equipments, and at prices as low as they can be furnished in any Eastern city.

We keep constantly on hand, (or make to order,) TARGET, HUNTING, and MINNIE RIFLES, which we guarantee to be superior to any in the country.

We also keep constantly on hand the CELEBRATED SHARP'S PATENT RIFLE, which is the safest and most destructive weapon ever invented, for sale at the Manufacturer's prices, for cash.

Please call and examine for yourselves, as it is no trouble for us to answer questions, or show goods.

The Search for Happiness.

"Seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you."
Jesus.

Ye countless hosts who throng life's busy stage,
From early years to careworn hoary age,
In eager search for some Elysium bright,
Whose joys prospective charm your mental sight,
Some antidote for pain and sorrow's throes,
Some healing balm, some cure for human woes,
Some beacon light to guard from evil's way,
Some star to lead to an eternal day.

From regal thrones where tinsell'd honors hang,
To haunts where reigns chill penury's sharp pang,
Where unassuming myriads toil and pine,
And worth lies slaughter'd at ambition's shrine;
Through every grade and clime, in every age,
One object still your fervent thoughts engage.
True Happiness, by each and all confess'd,
Your hope—your aim to be supremely blessed;
Your strong desire to know the joys above,
Where all is peace and harmony and love.

Yet, Ah! How devious the paths ye tread,
Each by some ruling spirit onward led,
'Mid doubts and sorrows falt'ring, on ye go,
For ever strange to joys ye fain would know.
List, erring mortals, hear instruction's voice,
And make the wisdom from above your choice.
Seek not the day where reigns Egyptian night,
Nor yet in perfect weakness seek for might:
Seek not for order where confusion reigns,
Nor confidence where but distrust obtains:
Seek not for life, and harmony, and peace,
Where woe and death's dread elements increase;
Hear the Great Teacher and His sayings keep,
That which ye sow, that shall ye also reap!

Stand in your ways and seek the good old paths,
Where virtue's heroes won unfading wreaths;
Give ear: For joyous news to human-kind
Is spread abroad, and all who seek may find;
A Prophet's voice is heard through every land,
And all the way of life may understand;
The sombre shades of Error's deepest night,
Are fleeting fast before celestial light:
O hear ye all the Gospel's joyful sound,
In it a cure for all your ills are found!
Seek then above for truth and wisdom pure,
Yea, ask of God, and light from Heav'n secure.

The Priesthood's power to Earth is come again,
To lead, instruct, and make salvation plain,
To teach, to comfort, and dismiss your fears,
To cheer and bless you in this vale of tears;
To show how unity and Truth shall spread,
Till Earth's redeem'd, and every sorrow fled:
Till all is pure and holy once again,
And angels mingle with the sons of men:
Till all shall know and do our Father's will,
And endless joys shall every bosom fill;
Then the Redeemed shall shout with one accord,
Glory and Praise to our Almighty Lord!
And like the voice of many waters sing,
Honor and might to Heaven's Eternal King!

Canton.

From "The American Merchant in Europe, Asia and Australia."

At last I am in sight of Canton, the grand capital of China trade, where heads of houses most do congregate—where money is obtained from wealthy Chinamen, middle-men, brokers, etc., who get it from bankers in the interior—where orders are given to the houses and agents up and down the coast where wires are pulled—secret expeditions fitted out—teas and silks and imports are talked on an extensive scale—where so many merchants have made in a few years of active labor fortunes in the trade, and where hospitality abounds and kind attentions are showered upon the stranger. Yes, this far-famed Canton, known to every school boy, and every young merchant who ever learned to talk ship—Canton, the centre of all Eastern exchange, the grand bourse of Chinese Asia.

The cabmen of Albany—the hack drivers of Montreal—the kling boatmen of Singapore, must retire in favor of the boatwomen that came near smothering our boat in order to get a fare to the pier; such an infernal yelling and jabbering, pulling and and hauling, rowing and sculling, screeching and gesticulating, can be found no where else. Why, it is enough to drive one into a lunatic asylum. It ought not to be tolerated, for sometimes it is positively dangerous when the tide is running a perfect sluice. Some of the women are very comely, and in their peculiar Bloomer costume and strikingly original style of head dress, you can but be attracted. As in Hong Kong, twenty-five cents is all they expect for rowing ashore a boat load. After paying in some cases from $10 to $15 in Melbourne, I really felt ashamed to give the girls here so little; but I was cautioned against introducing bad habits by giving them more. These poor creatures live entirely upon the river, and how I cannot tell, for in the vicinity of Canton there must be at least from 50,000 to 60,000. A typhoon or a fire, I should think, would completely sweep them away, for they lie huddled together like so much firewood.

Arriving on New Year's morning I was most fortunate; for, in accordance with our time-honored custom, calls were being exchanged, and I was just in time to pay my respects and wish the pleasant returns of the year to the eighteen European, English and American ladies then in Canton, whose cordial welcome is most pleasant to remember. Beautiful houses, large and commodious, all joined together, or only separated by a small alley-way, splendidly furnished, and none without engravings or pictures; fancy Chinese ornaments and specimens of every kind of Chinese ingenuity met your gaze, and everything seemed fresh and new to me, all different from the Western world. The new comer delivers his letters and calls upon those whose acquaintance he wishes to make; and then, if properly introduced, come attentions on every side. My home is delightful and my kind entertainer makes me feel that during my stay in Canton his house is mine. He has done a large business in his day, and I think him one of the most industrious men I ever saw. Breakfasting, tiffins, dining, excursion parties to the White hills, to the Honan temple, the Parsee gardens, the curiosity shops, music in the evening, or bowls, or billiards, or books, or papers—you may take your choice; but your time will soon fly away among a people who only try to anticipate your wants and pleasure.

The billiard room and bowling alley are private clubs, well managed and well attended; good tools to work with and Chinese makers. At the reading room you may find books and papers, and all the printed gossip of the day, as at the Hong Kong Club. You can soon do up the lions of the place, after you have gone round the walls of Canton and run the risk of getting your nose punched by a bamboo for your boldness in looking in the gate. After you have looked into the shops in old and new China streets, walked round the factory garden, where foreigners are allowed the entire space of about eight hundred feet in length by one hundred and twenty deep, for trees and plants, a church, a lodge and benches, and paths, for public promenade and nothing more, and you have been once all round to see whom you may know, and in one week's time most likely you know them all, for knowing one it secures the entree to the rest.

After you have been through the hongs and go-downs, seen the tea prepared for shipment, and the way it is got up, and talked with some of the Chinese merchants who insist upon your taking with them a cup of tea without milk or sugar, the grounds in the cups, each made expressly for each person; after you have chin-chinned several of these Hong merchants and heard them expound commercial affairs; after you have been over the Dutch Folly, the pavilion of the fire genii, the Lyre pagoda at Wampoa; the wonderful gardens—wonderful because so singular and novel; after you have seen the duck-hatching up the river, where the young ducks are traced in all their stages; after you have been to the White Hills on your Chinese pony, or carried up by your Chinese coolie, in your Chinese chair, and looked down upon the City of Canton, with its one hundred and twenty-four temples and halls, pavilions and pagodas; after you have perfectly satisfied your curiosity by looking at the flower boats and gazing at the beautiful specimen of Chinese frailty so fantastically dressed; after you have seen all these, you will have a right to say that you have killed all the lions at Canton. It takes but a short time to run through the list, and when once seen it is time to go over the ground a second time.

The City of Canton is about one thousand years old, but no foreigners have ever had the entree to its interior. Notwithstanding the treaty provides for going into Canton, by diplomacy and intrigue the Chinese officials have managed to break faith, and keep out all outsiders. How much longer this will last remains to be seen. The foreign population of the Hongs occupy about fourteen acres of land, none of which can be owned by the residents. Some of the Hongs rent for $4,000, and so on down to $1,200 per annum. In 1822 most of these buildings were destroyed by fire. The residents are called factors; hence the name factories. On every side of you, Pigeon English—that horrible jargon of mutilated baby talk which custom has made law—meets you. From boatwomen to shopmen—houseboy to compradore—you hear nothing else. I endeavored to get a copy of Hamlet's soliloquy, which was translated into Pigeon English, but I have failed to do it. I can only remember its commencement.

"To be or not to be" reads: "Can—no can." Send for your hat, and this would be the style: "Go top side—sabe—that hat—pay my." A noise is heard in an adjoining street; the cause, says the servant, is "Chiney woman have catchy one piece bull chilo." In other words, it would read: "Mrs. Pigtail of a boy." I called upon some ladies; boy returns: "No man can see," intimating probably that they were not at home. For "yes," read "can do." "How many to dinner this evening?" My boy promptly replies: "Four piece man—two piece missie." Of course I have laid in a good stock of Chinese presents; I should be considered the veriest barbarian did I not. I have been through all the shops buying sandal wood fans and card cases, ivory chess men and whist counters, purses and boxes, studs and Jade stone, bronze ornaments, bamboo work, carved necklaces and walnuts, and bracelets and rings, silver and copper ornaments, and a thousand other little notions which will soon reduce your loose cash, especially where your sovereign or pound sterling is worth but $4. It makes a wide difference in one's finances.

Since the rebellion, Canton has been active, and its sister ports—younger in experience, younger in commerce, younger in years—are gradually taking away her prestige. Foo Choo is getting the black teas, while Shanghai takes the silks in large quantities, and the green teas, but Canton, nevertheless, has the wealth, the capital, the headwork, the experience and the exchanges; she is still hard to beat, and may yet be able to hold her head as high as her northern branches. We must wait. I was much surprised to find such battalions of Parsees promenading in the factory gardens, all speaking understandable English. These high turbaned merchants are taking off the best share of the opium trade; and now a clipper steamer, the Lightning, plies between Calcutta and Cumsingmoon—opium and advices her only "pigeon." Some of the names of these men seemed to have been given them purely for the amusement of the Western merchant, for they have a strange sound, mixing up common and uncommon names, Scriptural and sectional. My few days' visit has gone, I can hardly tell where, but to-morrow I am bound to the north, and my next chit-chat you may expect from Shanghai or Foo-Chow Foo.

Genteel Economy.

It would be well for some of the more highly-waged of our operative classes to know what is sometimes done, in the way of economical living, by persons whom they regard as their superiors. It often happens that a clergyman, a medical man, a teacher, or some other person of the so-called middle classes, has less income than an artisan. We lately heard of active ministers of the Established Church living on eighty pounds a year. We know that there are Episcopalian ministers in Scotland—officiating chiefly among the gentry—on similar stipends. Were there an advertisement for instances of surgeons and country schoolmasters not realizing over a pound a week, we apprehend there would be an inpouring of answers like a spring-tide in the Severn or the Solway. Yet all of these people live with their families in a style notedly more elegant and sightly than do the generality of such of the working people as enjoy equal or larger incomes. And not only this—but they often contrive to educate their children and bring them forward in life, in a manner never dreamt of by the most highly salaried operatives.

A remarkable instance of this has lately been revealed through a privately printed memoir of Mr. Thomas Tomson, advocate—an eminent legal antiquary, and the man to whom the public has been indebted for the arrangement of the national records of Scotland. This gentleman, who was the intimate friend and associate of Jeffrey, Cockburn, and all that set, sprung from a manse in Ayrshire, where the family income was one hundred and five pounds sterling a year. The worthy clergyman not only gave his son Thomas the education required for the bar, and the means of paying his fees on passing advocate, but reared another son to his own profession; besides whom there were other children to be provided for. How such feats were accomplished on so small means, while all the time the usual hospitalities of a rural parsonage were maintained, surpasses conception; yet we are assured they were performed, and the means were strictly no more than what is here stated; neither did the father of that family leave one shilling of debt.

It will be of no use to try to make out this a peculiar and rare case, or as depending on conditions which only existed in a past age, for it is notorious that a very considerable proportion of the young men in both parts of the island, entering the legal profession, whether as barristers or solicitors, as well as those destined for the profession of the civil engineer, and for services in India, are the children of clergymen possessed of incomes inferior to those enjoyed by many operatives. The present chief-justice of England is one of the sons of such a clergyman, and many others could be pointed to, now occupying distinguished situations in life. It is a marvel of no rare kind, to see an English clergyman sending his son or sons, to Oxford, for an education, calling, while it lasts, for an outlay equal to the entire annual proceeds of the benefice. In these cases, of course, there must have been a saving during many years in order to meet the requirements of a few.

How is it that persons of small income in the middle classes make such good and laudable results out of their little means? There can rest no doubt that it is done only by great self-denial and frugality. The principal work is that of Genteel Economy. There are elegant tastes calling for gratification; but they are quietly set aside. There is accomplishment that might adorn the saloons of the affluent; but it is calmly thought, perhaps with a sigh condemned, to "waste its sweetness on the desert air." Scenes of public gaiety are avoided, because they infer dresses that cannot be afforded. The friend is left uninvited, because the family menage can scarcely show before a stranger. What is called a very quiet life—that is, a life without the excitement from society which is one of its necessaries—is submitted to without a murmur, but not without suffering—sometimes not without positively hurtful consequences. The daily experiences of tradesmen and servants are often of a more enviable kind. Can anything be more affecting than a life in which so much that is needed, and that could be enjoyed, is dispensed with and postponed. We here see men and women to whom the future is more important than the present—to whom the intellectual is of more than the material—the sentimental than the sensual—persons who, resigning themselves perhaps to a narrow and ungenerous lot, indulge the hope that their offspring will rise to something better, and for the realization of that hope are willing and ready to make great sacrifices. If to make the future overrule the present, and to subordinate our own gratifications to those of some other person, is to advance in the scale of moral being, great praise is surely due to those who from such motives, practise a genteel economy. Self-denial in such circumstances truly has in it that religious beauty which is only illusively associated with the self-denial of the ascetic.

Amongst the hand-workers, there is often equal or superior means, but much seldomer the disposition, to fashion the ways of a household to the attainment of some postponed benefit. Nor is this wonderful, when we consider that the sense of such benefits is not so apt to be engendered in that class of minds. The intelligent member of the middle class sees what blessings attend refined life, when supported by sufficiency of means; he strains for those blessings, accordingly, for himself or his children. The artisan is shut out from contact with such things, and so far from hoping for, does not even think of them. Hence the so frequent and so sad spectacle of menage equally coarse and extravagant luxury without comfort or refinement, and, what is more painful to look at, indulged in on the very brink of want and dependence. Till the sturdy operative shall be elevated by education and circumstances to higher ideas of what is really worth straining for in life, he will continue to fall far behind the genteel poor, in these respects.

The Genteel Poor! name of pity and ridicule to many—a favorite theme of sarcasm among novelists and dramatists ever since modern fiction arose. And yet we do seriously believe that the genteel spirit is often not merely a softener of poverty, but a means of redemption from it. When the educated person of the middle classes is reduced to pennilessness, as often happens in this variable world, what is it that keeps him from sinking into, and being lost in the obscure multitude, but this spirit? What but this gives him the desire to struggle again up the slippery scope of fortune? A gentleman, now in a very distinguished situation in life, has assured us, that when he found himself, in his youth, brought, by the misfortunes of his family, into association with the humbler class of people, it was, alone, the sense of the better sphere of life he had been in which inspired him with the industry and self-denial by which he has worked his way so far upward. And we can well believe it. It may be called by such names and be rightly applied, then we would assume and defend the position, that pride and vanity are things not without their use in our moral economy.—[Chamber's Journal.

The Pyramids.

The approach to the Pyramids is first a rich green plain, and then the Desert—that is, they are just at the beginning of the Desert, on a ridge, which of itself gives them a lift above the Valley of the Nile. It is impossible not to feel a thrill as one finds oneself drawing nearer to the greatest and most ancient monuments in the world, to see them coming out stone by stone into view, and the dark head of the Sphinx peering over the lower sandhills. Yet the usual accounts are correct which represent this nearer sight as not impressive—their size diminishes, and the clearness with which you see their several stones strip them of their awful or mysterious character. It is not till you are close under the great Pyramid, and look at the huge blocks rising above you into the sky, that the consciousness is forced upon you that this is the nearest approach to a mountain that the art of man has produced.

The view from the top has the same vivid contrast of life and death which makes all wide views in Egypt striking—the desert and the green plain; only here, the view over the Desert—the African Desert—being much more extensive than elsewhere, one gathers in better the notion of the wide heaving ocean of sandy billows which hovers on the edge of the Valley of the Nile. The whole line of the minarets of Cairo is also a peculiar feature—peculiar because it is strange to see a modern Egyptian city which is a grace instead of a deformity to the view. You also see the strip of Desert running into the green plain on the east of the Nile, which marks Heliopolis and Goshen.

The strangest feature in the view is the platform on which the Pyramids stand. It completely dispels the involuntary notion that one has formed of the solitary abruptness of the three Pyramids. Not to speak of the groups, in the distance, of Abou-Sir, Sakara, and Dashur—the whole platform of this greatest of them all, is a mass of pyramids and tombs. Three little ones stand beside the first, three also beside the third. The second and third are each surrounded by traces of square enclosures, and their eastern faces are approached through enormous masses of ruins as of some great temple; whilst the first is enclosed on three sides by long rows of massive tombs, on which you look down from the top as on the plats of a stone-garden. You see, in short, that it is the most sacred and frequented part of that vast cemetery which extends all along the western ridge for twenty miles behind Memphis.

It is only by going round the whole place in detail that the contrast between its present and its ancient state is disclosed. One is inclined to imagine that the Pyramids are immutable, and that such as you see them now such they were always. Of distant views this is true, but taking them near at hand it is more easy from the existing ruins to conceive Karnac as it was, than it is to conceive the Pyramidal platform as it was. The smooth casing of part of the top of the Second Pyramid, and the magnificent granite blocks which form the lower stages of the third, serve to show what they must have been all, from top to bottom; the first and second, brilliant white or yellow limestone, smooth from top to bottom, instead of those rude disjointed masses which their stripped sides now present; the third, all glowing with the red granite from the First Cataract. As it is, they have the barbarous look of Stonehenge; but then they must have shone with the polish of an age already rich with civilization, and that the more remarkable when it is remembered that these granite blocks which furnished the outside of the third and inside of the first, must have come all the way from the First Cataract. It also seems from Heodotus and others, that these smooth outsides were covered with sculptures. Then you must build up or uncover the massive tombs, now broken or choked with sand, so as to restore the aspect of vast streets of tombs, like those on the Appian Way, out of which the Great Pyramid would rise like a cathedral above smaller churches. Lastly, you must enclose the two other Pyramids with stone precincts and gigantic gateways, and above all you must restore the Sphinx, as he (for it must never be forgotten that a female Sphinx was almost unknown) was in the days of his glory.

Even now, after all that we have seen of collosal statues, there was something stupendous in the sight of that enormous head—its vast projecting wig, its great ears, its open eyes, the red color still visible on its cheek, the immense projection of the whole lower part of its face. Yet what must it have been when on its head there was the royal helmet of Egypt; on its chin the royal beard; when the stone pavement by which men approached the Pyramids ran up between its paws; when immediately under its breast an altar stood from which the smoke went up into the gigantic nostrils of that nose, now vanished from the face, never to be conceived again. All this is known with certainty from the remains which actually exist deep under the sand on which you stand, as you look up from a distance into the broken but still expressive features.

And for what purpose was this Sphinx of Sphinxes called into being—as much greater than all other Sphinxes as the Pyramids are greater than all other temples or tombs? If, as is likely, he lay couched at the entrance, now deep in sand, of the vast approach to the second, that is, the Central Pyramid, so as to form an essential part of this immense group; still more, if, as seems possible, there was once intended to be (according to the usual arrangements which never left a solitary Sphinx any more than a solitary obelisk) a brother Sphinx on the Northern side, as this on the Southern side of the approach, its situation and significance were worthy of its grandeur. And if, further, the Sphinx was the giant representative of Royalty, then it fitly guards the greatest of Royal sepulchres; and with its half human, half animal form, is the best welcome and the best farewell to the history and religion of Egypt.—[Ex.

Anecdotes of Milton.

When about to compose, he prepared himself—as did Cicero—by reading some of the Greek poets, or having them read to him, after he became blind. And we will remark that reading the peotry of the best authors, as a preparation for writing poetry, has a much greater influence upon the mind in composing than might be imagined, as the writer doubtless catches more or less of the fire and inspiration of his author.

It is well known that he was blind, but the manner of his losing his sight is perhaps but little known to most readers. It was occasioned by his celebrated controversy with Salmasius. When he first proposed to answer that learned man, but ridiculous writer, he had lost the use of one of his eyes. His physicians declared that if he applied himself to the controversy, he would also lose the other. But his patriotism was not to be baffled. He continued to apply himself to it, in spite of the warning, and the other was soon closed forever.

The pride of Milton in some things was great, and equal to his genius. As an evidence of it, Hartop lent him fifty pounds, soon after the Restoration, which the poet returned to him with much difficulty, as his circumstances were very low. Hartop would have declined it, but Milton sent an angry letter, which was found in Hartop's papers.

As to Milton's sociability, when much pressed by the conversation of others he was unsociable and even irritable. He was in the habit of condensing his poetry, and would sometimes dictate a certain number of lines, and then reduce them to one-half the quantity.

Street Worship in Russia.

There is no place in the world where a man with a very small capital can easier gain, if not an honest, at all events a competent livelihood, than in Moscow. All he has to do is to spend a few roubles in the purchase of a grimy and obscure saint on canvass, with a tin of gilt glory round his head, and a new frame; to find out a doorway or an arch near a thoroughfare, where he can place this masterpiece on a table, and get room for himself on a chair, and there, with a wooden basin, or an old cap for a money box, sit patiently till his customers come. They are not long in arriving. Behold here is a mujik coming to market; the picture catches his eye; he likes it; he makes a few inquiries about it from the proprietor, who assures him that the saint has great interest in the very highest quarters, and has done an immense deal of good to all his clients.

The mujik is satisfied; on goes his cap, and down goes his head, while his hands busily wander from chest and brow in self-benediction; his wild locks fly over his face and bob back again, as, with increasing fervor, he utters his prayers to the obfuscated image before him. When he thinks he has made a favorable impression, he put his hands in his pocket, drops a few copecks into the saint's treasury, and goes on his way rejoicing. "Surely," said I to a Russian, "these poor people ought to be the best in the world, they say so many prayers." "Ah! the gamins," replied he; "au contraire, they have need of all their prayers, they sin so much; and these saints listen so readily they are encouraged to commit all kinds of rogueries.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 6, 1857.

Proclamation to the Saints.

As many of our subscribers have informed us that oftentimes THE MORMON does not reach them, (although regularly mailed,) I have considered it wisdom to continue the notice in this week's issue of the change of Presidency, and my Proclamation to the Saints under my charge, and confirm some more official appointments, in order that all may be duly advised of the duties required of them, and act accordingly.

W. I. A.

Change of Presidency.

A short time before the last Conference held in this city, I received a communication from President Young, wherein it was stated that Judge Appleby was, among others, expected to return home to Utah this season. Previous to this, I had contemplated, as I stated at Conference, leaving him to preside over the Church in the Eastern States, as I considered him the most competent person to occupy that position on my departure for Zion. On receiving this intimation, which was evidently without any regard to the Presidency here, I appointed George J. Taylor my successor.

By the last mail I received a letter from President Young, in which he suggests that ELDER Wm. I. APPLEBY succeed me, which will, of course, meet the approbation of all Saints; Elder George J. Taylor is, therefore, released and at liberty to return home. This will be no disappointment to him, as he accepted the Presidency with great reluctance, and ever since has anticipated an appointment from the Valley.

Bro. Appleby will therefore assume the Presidency of the Church in the East, and superintend the publication of THE MORMON, and all Saints are requested to sustain him in that office. JOHN TAYLOR.

New York, May 25, 1857.

To the Saints in the Eastern and Middle States—Greeting.

DEAR BRETHREN—Just on the eve of my contemplated departure for Utah, I received an appointment from the authorities in Zion, and have been set apart by President John Taylor to take the Presidency of the Church in the East, and superintend the publication of THE MORMON in the place of President George J. Taylor.

In entering upon the duties of my appointment, I feel that the responsibilities devolving upon me are great. To be a shepherd over the flock of Christ is no small matter—the value of souls who can compute? To have one's skirts clean of the blood of all men, by faithful warnings, teachings, and counsel, requires a person of the purest integrity, a virtuous, holy and upright walk; and to be filled with the spirit of God continually, to enlighten his understanding, to illuminate his mind, and to give him wisdom and intelligence, in order to counsel and direct in righteousness the affairs of those over whom he presides, and proclaim the principles of eternal truth, according to the mind and will of Him who groaned upon the tree, and suffered his own precious blood to be shed for us that we might live.

These are the feelings and sentiments of my soul, and I enter upon the duties of my Presidency with joy, and not with grief (although I would like to see my family and brethren whom I love in Utah) with a sincere desire, and earnest prayer for the welfare and prosperity of the Saints, and the building up of the Kingdom of God.

In order that all the presiding officers and travelling Elders under my charge may understand their several duties, and fields of labor, and all act in unison for the welfare of the Saints, and the extension of the principles of Eternal Truth, and in carrying out, as near as possible, the appointments made at the last April Conference, I therefore, reconfirm, and make the following appointments:

1. Elders Angus M. Cannon and T. B. H. Stenhouse, are appointed my Counsellors.

2. Elder Stenhouse is also appointed to assist in editing and publishing THE MORMON.

3. Elder Charles C. Dulin will continue to assist in this office.

4. Elder Alexander Ott's appointment at last April Conference as President of the New York Conference is hereby confirmed; likewise that of Elders William H. Miles and Charles C. Dulin, as his Counsellors.

5. President Ott is hereby released from assisting in the office and will devote his time in visiting the various Branches of the Church in his Conference, preaching, teaching, instructing and building up the Saints, in setting them in order and teaching them their duties in relation to the support of THE MORMON. He will also correspond weekly for THE MORMON, and also preach wherever a chance may be opened.

6. President Angus M. Cannon's appointment as President of the Philadelphia Conference I hereby confirm. He will visit the different Branches of the Church in that Conference, instructing the Saints, strengthening them, building them up, and preaching the Gospel to all, wherever an opening may be had, and enjoining upon the Saints their duties in all things, not forgetting THE MORMON. As one of my Counsellors, President Cannon is also appointed to travel through the New York Conference (whenever circumstances will admit) to counsel with President Ott, for the welfare of the Saints, preach the Gospel and assist in building up the Kingdom of our God; and will visit other Branches of the Church, under my Presidency, with me or otherwise, whenever the benefit of the Saints and circumstances require it.

7. Elder William H. Miles will continue to preside over the Church in the city of New York.

8. Elder Samuel Harrison will continue to preside over the Church in Philadelphia.

9. Elder James F. Cleary will continue to preside over the Church in Boston.

10. Elders John F. Snedaker and A. P. Welchman, will continue to labor in the Philadelphia Conference under the direction of President A. M. Cannon until further orders.

11. The regulations of the Presidents over other Branches of the Church in the Conferences will be left for the Presidents of Conferences to attend to: in all cases of appointments, however, consulting the President of the mission at New York.

The Presidents over Conferences, Presiding Elders over Branches, and Presidents of Districts, Elders, Priests and Teachers, will be dilligent and see that the Saints do their duty in all things. It is the counsel of the authorities in Zion, and the wish of President J. Taylor that THE MORMON should be continued; but we cannot accomplish this without means to do so; it requires material aid; our bills have to be paid every week. Now, brethren, and ye Saints of the Most High, are you willing to take hold and use your utmost exertions in support of THE MORMON? It comes into my charge without means on hand for its support, nearly all the subscriptions for the present year having been paid in at the commencement of the present volume, and been used in liquidating back indebtedness, hence the necessity of calling upon the Saints now for support and the continuance of its publication, and which must be done. Saints, THE MORMON is the unflinching advocate of your rights, the defender of truth, and of the Kingdom of God. It is the herald of light, and the disseminator of true principles. It imparts to you counsel weekly, and gives the latest intelligence of the affairs of the church in Zion, and throughout the world. It is a refuter of slanders, a shield and protector to the Saints, which certainly makes it a welcome messenger to your homes; and it is the imperative duty of the Saints to uphold and support it, as much so, as to say your prayers or do anything else.

The subscriptions to THE MORMON since the commencement of its publication thus far have not one half supported it; scarcely any but Saints subscribe for it, and but few of them, in comparison with the number of Saints residing in the States. We shall endeavor by the aid of our friends to continue the publication of the paper in its present form, avoiding all unnecessary expense, and now call upon all the Saints to hold up our hands, and send on, without delay, subscriptions and donations; likewise the conference funds that the various presiding officers subscribed to at the April conference, and as much more as you can, weekly.

Therefore, let the Presidents of the Conferences, Elders, Teachers, and all, attend to this matter, and impress the importance of the same upon the Saints.

Let the Saints subscribe for the paper, read it carefully, then hand it to their friends; also get their friends to subscribe for it.

Teach the Saints to be cleanly in their habits, virtuous, holy and pure; watchful, prayerful, with an upright walk and godly conversation before all men, shunning all vain and frivolous talk; see that there is no backbiting or evil speaking among the the Saints, and that they keep themselves unspotted from the evils and corruptions that surround them in the world; see that no one partakes of the sacrament unworthily, and that all prepare themselves as fast as possible to gather to Zion.

Let prudence, wisdom and economy be studied; but let no selfish or sordid views or feelings ever enter the heart of any one professing to be a Saint of God when called upon to uphold His work. Brethren, the more we do in the cause of God, the more we will receive from Him, after He has proven us. I have proved it, and I know it.

No papers or books will be sent to any one unless the subscriptions or monies are remitted in advance. It has become absolutely necessary to adopt this rule in order to sustain the paper. Neither will any person be expected to receive subscriptions, donations, or receipts for the sales of THE MORMON, retain the means in their own hands, apply it to their own uses, and then advise us to charge it to them. We cannot do any such thing. We are always willing to oblige as far as we can consistently, but such a course would soon decide the continuance of the publication of the paper.

The Presidents over Conferences, and traveling Elders, are requested to report to me, from time to time, the situations of the branches through which they travel. We also wish all those who can contribute any correspondence worthy of publication in THE MORMON to do so.

Let Elders be appointed to hold meetings in the cities and towns whenever they can obtain a place to preach, every night in the week if possible—and let the presiding officers do the same whenever they can, and whenever they have an opportunity of doing good, do it. Preach the first principles of the gospel of Christ; let all doctrine you do not understand alone, and seek to save instead of destroy. Proclaim to the people that God has spoken from on high; that the heavens have been unveiled; that angels have administered to man; that Prophets and Apostles have been raised up in this dispensation; that the keys of Apostleship and Priesthood have been restored to man; and that God has now a church established on earth according to the pattern of heaven. Teach faith, repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, and the imposition of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Let all the Saints, officers included, who have not renewed their covenants by being re-baptised according to the counsel of the Presidency in Zion, attend to it forthwith, for no one will be considered in fellowship who refuses or neglects to obey this counsel when they have an opportunity, if they have not already attended to it.

Let the presiding officers see that no Elder or lay member goes through the Conferences collecting means without authority, or idling away their time and living upon the Saints. Let all Elders sent here on missions from Zion, report themselves immediately to the Presidency, at New York, when they will have their field of labor assigned them, so that all things may work together in harmony, according to the order of God, and for the benefit of the cause.

A great deal of slander, falsehood and calumny is published and circulated freely at the present time by a venal vitiated Press against the Mormons, but let the wicked howl; we know the work is of God—He is its author, upholder, supporter and protector, and it is bound to prosper, go ahead, and finally triumph. Of this we have not the least doubt, and no power on earth or in hell can stop it. Therefore let us do our duty, come life or come death. God is our shield and protector, and in Him we will ever put our trust.

Whatever counsel may be necessary for us to give for the benefit of the Saints and Elders, will be imparted through the columns of THE MORMON or otherwise from time to time.

Thus dear brethren, ye servants of the Most High, clothed upon with the Priesthood of the Son of God, after the order of an endless life, and ye Saints of the Latter Days, your duties are laid before you. Take hold with me and strengthen my hands and uphold the Elders sent among you; hearken to the counsels and instructions given you, and assist me in carrying out the counsel and wishes of our brethren in Zion, and I promise you, in the name of Israel's God, you shall be blest in so doing.

Elders of Israel, be men of God in very deed; honor your Priesthood, honor your calling, be meek, watchful, humble, prayerful and dilligent in all things: seek to be filled with the Spirit of the Lord continually, and let the fire of the Holy Ghost dwell richly in your bosoms, and be ye saviours of men; preach, teach, council, set in order, rebuke and exhort, with all long suffering; preach wherever a door opens, seek after the welfare of souls, and let us all co-operate together to do the work assigned us, so that we may rejoice in our labors and finish our mission with joy to ourselves; meet the approbation of our God and of our brethren in Zion. Can we sit down and say in our heart, "it is enough?" Are there not yet some honest souls who have never heard the Gospel? Are our skirts clean from the blood of all men? Are the Saints prepared for the appearing of the Saviour to inherit the earth, and enter into the Celestial glory and eternal life? Verily no!

Shall we as servants and Saints of the Most High bearing the Priesthood of the Son of the Virgin, members of the Church of Christ, organized after the order of heaven, with Apostles and Prophets, with whom are the keys of Apostleship and Priesthood, to open the door of salvation to a lost and ruined world, to whom angels have ministered, who have heard the voice of God and gazed, while wrapt in the visions of Heaven, upon the glories of the Celestial, Terrestrial and Telestial worlds, and also upon the misery of the damned? Shall we who have tasted of the good word of God, been made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and realized a portion of the power of the world to come, and the order of Heaven, that leads to crowns, thrones, sceptres, exaltations and dominions, and redemption of our dead. Shall we, I say, ever be unfaithful or weary in such a cause? No, verily no. While water runs, and grass grows; while virtue is lovely and vice hateful; while we have a God to serve and a soul to save; ever let us be unflinching in the cause of Jehovah; continue while the brittle thread of life shall last, until the race is run, the battle is fought, and the victory won.

W. I APPLEBY,
President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in the Eastern and Middle States.

New York, May 28, 1857.

Notice.

THE Saints who desire to send means to their friends in Europe, can have the same attended to, by forwarding any sum they wish in current money, to this office, enclosing one dollar or more, in proportion to the amount sent, to defray the expenses of procuring Bills of Exchange, making remittances, foreign postage, &c., describing particularly to whom, and where they wish to have it sent; at the same time not holding myself responsible in any manner whatever unless the money reach me.

All subscriptions, donations, &c., for the support of THE MORMON, or Conference Fund (except the donations and Conference Funds raised in the Philadelphia Conference, which will be forwarded as usual through President Cannon) must be sent hereafter to my address; as also Tithing; P. E. Fund, and donations for the Temple from those who wish to contribute the same, so each person may be duly credited, and the means forwarded to Zion, and have their names entered in "The Book of the Law of the Lord."

No Power of Attorney, or other legal instrument of writing, going to Europe or elsewhere, forwarded to us for the purpose of sending to Washington in order to obtain the attestation of the Department, and the British Consul's Certificate and seal to the same, will be attended to in future, unless the means to defray the expenses and foreign postage accompanies the instrument, as there is considerable expense attending it as well as labor. We would like to oblige all, and are willing to give our services when we have opportunity; but we cannot advance means to defray such expenses.

All communications intended for THE MORMON should be addressed—Editor of THE MORMON, New York. Otherwise direct to my address, Box No. 3957, New York Post Office. W. I. APPLEBY.

Found Him Out.

We once heard a simple story about a not over bright boy, who, on the eve of his departure from home for service with a stranger, was cautioned by his mamma to "keep a close mouth" or the folks would find out that he was a fool. The boy left, and on his arrival at his new place became the subject of interrogatories; but mindful of the last maternal instruction he was silent. Not a word could be drawn from him. Unsuccessful efforts to get an answer exhausted the patience of the interrogator, and then came the burst that revealed the annoyance—"You're a fool! you're a fool!" The poor lad thinking that his fortune was spoiled, returned home, sobbing and crying "Oh, mother, they've found me out, they've found me out, they said I was a fool!" The fond, caressing mother, who thought all eyes as blind as her own, half vexed and more grieved demanded why he had not kept her instructions. "I did mother, I did," sobbed the boy; "but they found me out, they said I was a fool!" So it is, there are things in this lower world which cannot be hid from even the gaze of mortals, disguise them as you may, keep silence, "Burke" them if you will, they will out sometime. After such a lengthy preface we take particular pleasure in laying before our readers the following, which we clip from the Chicago Weekly Tribune, of May 28th:

Judge Drummond of Utah.

We have had occasion to allude to this worthy who professes to hail from Chicago, and who has made quite a lion of himself in the newspapers.

The Oquawka Plaindealer contains an article which is conclusive that the Judge should have very little to say about immoralities in Utah, or indeed anywhere else.

The Plaindealer states that at the time he was appointed Judge he was a resident of that town.

"And if his private history were written it would unfold a career of as cruel and inhuman treatment to a family, as could be found in the annals of infamous husbands. The press in this place well knew his perfidy, but, out of regard to the feelings of his family, remained silent. After Drummond's resignation, and return to the States he seemed to evince no desire to visit his family. When it was announced through the press that he was in Chicago, Mrs. Drummond proceeded thither to seek an interview with him; and although she stopped at the same hotel, and remained one night while he was there, he managed to screen himself from her sight, and the next morning stealthily got aboard of the train and came to this place, and took two of his children away with him. His wife remained a week in Chicago seeking in vain for her faithless husband; and then returned home only to have a more bitter pang added to her already broken heart to find that her children had been spirited away, she knew not where."

We have long known Drummond to be all that his family knew him to be, and which they very naturally wished to conceal from the public; but neither they nor we are in possession of any secret; wherever the wretch has been he has exhibited his real nature, he has left his blasting mark, and thousands know him to be what he is. Before he left Utah he well knew that the people of that Territory would expose his abominations, and he took the first opportunity to write against them to damage their character, and, as he hoped, thereby to invalidate their testimony; but has he succeeded? Verily no! He has lied, he has made numerous unfounded charges, which have been published and republished, again and again, all over the Union, and by which he has, doubtless, stirred up the worst feelings of the people against the Mormons, and very nigh succeeded in placing the administration at Washington in a dilemma; but when the present clouds that now indicate a raging storm against the Mormons, shall have passed away and the morrow bring with it clearer times, then will Drummond wither before the brightness of Truth—the tangible, incontrovertable facts, which a new Governor or "Special Commissioners" will discover if they examine impartially the evidence pro and con.

The Oquawka Plaindealer has not published his timely revelation of this scapegrace to favor the Mormons; but from a sense of justice to the public, and none need suspect that we have a friend in the Chicago Weekly Tribune—as it is our unscrupulous enemy—the fac simile of our New York cotemporary of the same name. The fatality that rushes on the criminal to the great imprndent act which reveals his crime, has followed the "horse-trader" Judge and villainous wholesale calumniator of Utah, who would have rejoiced in the massacre of thousands of unoffending persons for the purpose of covering up his dark deeds, but he has at length got to the end of his rope.

A Wicked Charge Exposed.

Among the many who have rushed into print recently against Mormonism is one—whom we would, for the sake of others, fain never name—William Smith. He has send a lengthy letter to the New York Tribune to help Drummond through the mess he has got into. As he only mentions one thing that has some claim to novelty and a notice of it from a proper person has been handed to us for publication, we bring him before our readers.

NEW YORK, June 1, 1857.

EDITOR MORMON—Dear Sir: I deem it a duty I owe to truth to notice through your valuable paper the letter of William Smith, addressed to the Editor of the N. Y. Tribune, and published in that paper, on the 28th ult., at least that portion of his letter touching the death of my father, Samuel H. Smith. He says:

"I have good reason for believing that my brother, Samuel H. Smith, died of poison in Nauvoo, administered by order of Brigham Young and Willard Richards, only a few weeks subsequent to the unlawful murder of my two brothers, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, while incarcerated in Carthage jail."

However much I deplore that such a statement is given to the public, I am in no manner surprised. My uncle's course—since he was expelled from the church, has been such that I am prepared to read from his pen any calumny against President Young and the leaders of the Church without astonishment.

William Smith knows that my father, his brother, died of billious fever and not of poison.

After the assassination of his two brothers, my father was pursued for some miles, by two of the mob, whose object was evidently to shoot him likewise. Fleeing for his life, he did his utmost in bodily exertion to increase the swiftness of his horse, and in so doing was necessarily excited in body and mind. In this state he was compelled to ride through a creek which laid him down in sickness on his arrival in Nauvoo. He died of billious fever, of which fact there are many witnesses, and not of poison. The above is the only reliable statement concerning his death.

It is anything but agreeable to expose my uncle, nevertheless justice to those accused and my own sense of obligation to stand by the truth, compel me to do so.

I am, dear sir, yours, &c.,

SAMUEL H. B. SMITH.

Apostates generally lie so glaringly that we seldom take the trouble to refute their statements. When we do notice them it is more generally with a view to furnishing the Church historian with links in the chain of their career than from any conviction that our labors are required to warn the public against their impositions. Where they are known the odor of their corruptions is sufficient to indicate the state of their being to all whose senses are not impaired by the same dark course, without our drawing aside the veil to expose the putrid mass whence it emenates. The writer of the foregoing letter has considered it his duty to expose his uncle's wickedness, though at the risk of incurring the displeasure of many esteemed relatives; but indisposed to wound others, he has confined his letter to that only which pertained directly to the death of his honored father. We approve of his course: our veneration for Joseph, Hyrum, Don Carlos and Samuel, worthy brothers who died for their faith in a living God, an unchangeable Redeemer, an everlasting Gospel—in Mormonism; our high appreciation of the virtues that adorned the lives of their worthy and honored parents; our esteem for many of their relatives who have maintained their integrity before God—men and women who have kept themselves pure and unspotted from the corruptions of an adulterous generation—induce us to leave William Smith in the obscurity where his deeds have launched him. How has the mighty fallen! William Smith strikes hands with and endorses the "Temple mysteries" of that mean, filthy and corrupt Van Dusen, whose very presence disturbes the equilebrium of our stomach, and a feeling worse than that which springs from sea-sickness creeps over our system when we look at him—loathsomeness and disgust.—ED.

Nicaragua

"MANIFEST Destiny" has turned her back upon fillibusterism, for the present at least, and Gen. Walker and staff are enjoying, as well as they can, the cordial greetings of their friends in the United States. For some months past, reports from Nicaragua were like those from "Bleeding Kansas" before the November election; or, more recently, like those from Utah—bogus and made to order, strength and color varying according to the public demand. Walker has had numerous friends and enemies in the States, and particularly in this city and New Orleans. Equally interested—the one party in his success, the other in his defeat—they have each done considerable at systematic lying to help, and to defeat, his cause. If a spicy yarn could warm up the blood of that long line of illustrious captains and colonels to be found in both cities, get them on to the platform to jumble together "Patriotism," "Humanity," "Manifest Destiny," and secure barrels of pork and biscuit for the starving, rifles and howitzers for the heroes "by the sailing of the next steamer," so could as great a fib cool their courage, paralize their energies, stop supplies and diminish the chances of Walker's success—at this work both parties have been amazingly busy.

While fillibusterism has been fighting in Nicaragua the forces of neighboring States, the monied men in this city, who had planned rich speculations on defeat and on success, have likewise done quite an amount of pen fighting. So unreliable had become the editors here and the wire-pullers at New Orleans, who professed to be the best and the earliest posted on the smiles of fortune, that no sensible man could for months past credit a report from the seat of war, and would'nt even risk his reputation on a guess. Whether General Walker was likely to be engaged in shooting President Rivas as a traitor, or Rivas was quartering and beheading Walker as his country's enemy; whether the brave General Henningsen was hanging as high as Haman the allied Generals of Costa Rica, Guatemala, Salvador and Hondurus, according to his promise, or they were making him dance some feet from terra firma, was to all unknown; but the veil is now rent asunder and the mystery is solved.

Walker had been hedged up more than four months in Rivas, without hope of deliverance; desertions from his little band were frequent, accessions to his ranks from the States; no increase to his provisions; they were living on dogs, cats, stewed hides and etceteras, when they could scrape them together, till the hope of their larder was reduced to three horses, two mules and two oxen. Col. Titus, of Kansas notoriety, who had a reputation for pluck before he went down among the Greasers, seems to have taken the first steps to lead to the termination of hostilities—starvation rather. He slipped down to San Juan del Sur and got the commander of the U. S. sloop-of-war St. Marys, Capt. Davis, to try and effect a settlement between Walker and his allied enemies. The Captain succeeded, and Walker and his army, a little over two hundred, surrendered to the Stars and Stripes. Gen. Walker and staff got on board the St. Marys, on the 1st of May, and were conveyed to Panama; ran across the rail to Aspinwall, and steamed up via Havana to New Orleans, where they landed on Wednesday of last week, and were warmly greeted by their friends. Gen. Henningsen arrived in this city on Thursday by the Illinois City, and was enthusiastically received. The surrendered army will get home some time shortly. So ends for the present fillibusterism in Nicaragua; but according to report from the Crescent City, Walker has still faith in Manifest Destiny, and may before long tempt her again to take him into her service.

Advice to Immigrants.

The following counsel, given by a Kansas correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, sounds so much like the sober sense of experience that we think other immigrants, as well as those for "Bleeding Kansas," may suffer no loss by its perusal. —[ED. MORMON.

Firstly, Let every man who purposes seeing Kansas this year, make up his mind firmly and conclusively that he will find no mansions, very few pianos, comparatively nothing in the way of carpets, and a general stagnation in the article of crinoline. Let him take a fond final look at the gravel walk and orchard which his grandpapa provided, and especially let him secure a daguerreotype of that admirable stone wall which closes in his stubborn acres. Let him make up his mind to eschew such luxuries as butter the moment he gets West of St. Louis. A taste of this article, as it appears on the Missouri boats, will convey to his mind remeniscences of galvanic batteries, Leyden jars, and other scientific astonishments which entered into his early education. Let him expect when he reaches Kansas to find a full-sized sand bar in his stomach and general indications of snags. This will not hurt him. The water of the Missouri resembles a tincture of brick yard, but in the experience of this writer it is entirely healthful, and damages no one who keeps it unmixed with the lava of Western bar-rooms. Let our new pioneers come fully prepared to sleep occasionally under the protecting shelter of the stars. A tent or covered wagon, one hundred miles West of the Missouri River, are luxuries which any person will learn to appreciate. A genuine Kansas man has many a time made up his bed on prairie grass, tied his horse to his boot, slept comfortably and awaked gratefully. While he cheerfully resigns his own mattress and buffalo robe to the comfort of every stranger, he smiles at the regrets which arise from the memory of the maternal warming pan. In brief, if you come to Kansas to make a home, you must go to work and make it. If you come expecting to find it already made, you will inevitably be disappointed. * * * Many enthusiasts came up the river, expecting to find a ready made Arcadia. They landed at Leavenworth or Quindoro, hurried to the fire-place, cursed the weather, retreated to the steamboat and negotiated passage to St. Louis. I must confess that I do not think Kansas has lost much by these desertions. The chief gainers have been the steamboat-owners and Railroad Companies, and our candidates for pioneer honors have turned out chiefly illustrations of the vacum existing between the fool and his money.

Hand-Cart Company Started.

THE following extract from the correspondence of Elder Amos M. Musser will answer the enquiries of many of our readers:

ST. LOUIS, May 25, 1857.

MY DEAR BRO. STENHOUSE * * * Bro. Little writes me that the first Hand-Cart Company left Iowa City on the 22nd inst. and the remainder will move as soon as possible. The grass is very short indeed for the season of the year. The price of cattle, provisions and everything is high. All these measurably militate against our emigration. Prest. Snow has gone to visit the camp. I shall leave here to-morrow with some of the hand-cart Saints and a large invoice of supplies—all for Florence. I shall remain at that point to assist in settling up the business after the Saints have all passed.

In haste and brevity, with kind love,
I remain yours truly,
A. M. MUSSER.

The New Settlements.

FLORENCE, Douglas, N. T.,
May 12, 1857.

EDITOR MORMON—Dear Bro: Believing that many of the readers of THE MORMON would like to know something of the goings on in the Nebraska Mission, I will give you a short account of our operations.

On the 22d of April, I started from Florence with seventeen men, with teams and seeds for the place selected for the establishing of a settlement on Beaver River, where I arrived on the 28th ultimo. On the 27th a farm of about 500 acres was laid out, and we commenced our farming operations and put in some seeds and wheat. On our return to Florence with Bro. Nathan Davis on the 2d of May, the St. Louis and Alton Companies had just arrived. After every thing was ready for starting, Bro. Wm. Martindale arrived here with the cattle for said companies. On the 11th inst., the brethren left for our new location, where we have about one hundred men. Bro. Martindale and myself purpose starting to-morrow morning and we will probably get to Genoa on Beaver River, where some more land will be laid out so as to be ready for working order by the time the men get there.

In consequence of the late season, feed for cattle is very scanty. The company went out in good spirits and willing to carry out the instructions of the authorities. By the blessings of the Lord, we will raise grain and vegetables enough to comfort the hearts of the Saints, who are trying to do the will of the Lord. Some of the brethren have taken their families with them. May the Lord bless and strengthen His servants that they may do much good in gathering the honest in heart. Wishing that the blessings of Heaven and earth may rest upon the faithful, I remain yours in the Gospel of Peace.

A. CUNNINGHAM.

Latest of Utah.

THE latest not from but of this important Territory we learn in the following despatch:

IMPORTANT FROM UTAH—HIGHHANDED PROCEEDINGS OF BRIGHAM YOUNG.

ST. LOUIS, June 2, 1857.

The Leavenworth Herald learns from Mr. Williams, who left Salt Lake on April 15, that there was great excitement at that place. Brigham Young was carrying things with a high hand and driving the Gentiles away. Judge Stiles, the United States Marshal, and the Surveyor General with his family and a large number of emigrants, had been obliged to leave the Territory.

The N. Y. Herald in noticing this despatch adds that the official gentlemen named in the above "had left the Territory, fearing their lives were in danger." "Guilt makes cowards of us all," said the immortal poet, but where did the Herald learn that they were afraid of their lives? He does not read it in the despatch. Perhaps he has learned as we have that more than one of them have endangered the relationship of their head and shoulders, by the transgression of a law not appreciated in New York—THOU SHALT NOT COMMIT ADULTERY. When they come along we are prepared to talk plain and serve them as we have Drummond if they lie as he has done.

President P. P. Pratt.

WE anticipated last week that we would have received before this some reliable information of the circumstances attending the base murder of this honored servant of the Lord, but we have learned nothing additional, worthy of notice at the present time.

Governorship of Utah.

Last week we published a long list of contradictory despatches from the Washington correspondents of the daily press, about the appointment of a successor to His Excellency Governor Young and sending troops to Utah; the subject is interesting, we continue the list.

THE UTAH GOVERNORSHIP SETTLED.

WASHINGTON, May 29, 1857.

The Governor for Utah has been appointed at last and has accepted of the appointment. The announcement will be made in a few days. Major McCulloch positively refused.—Cor. of N. Y. Daily Times.

TWO THOUSAND TROOPS ORDERED TO UTAH.

May 29.

The Secretary of War and Gen. Scott have been actively engaged for some days and have about completed the arrangements to send a large military force to Utah, under command of Gen. Harney. Orders have just been issued to the necessary staff departments to have the following troops in readiness as soon as possible:—Second Regiment Dragoons, Fifth and Tenth Regiments of Infantry, and Capt Phelps' Battery of Light Artillery, making upwards of two thousand troops. The administration are still without a Governor of Utah.—Cor. of N. Y. Herald.

THE GOVERNORSHIP OF UTAH.

June 2.

Major McCulloch has again emphatically declined the Governorship of Utah. A selection will, however, positively be made in a few days, when the vacant judgeships in that Territory will be filled, and other measures adopted with a view to the effective organization of the administrative machinery.—The general Newspaper Dispatch.

Arrival of the Westmoreland.

This packet ship, with the company of Saints whose names we have already published, arrived at Philadelphia on Sunday afternoon. We have not yet received any account of their voyage, arrival at Philadelphia, and departure for Iowa City, from any of the brethren, but we glean from the Philadelphia Ledger of Tuesday that:

"Only three deaths have occurred during the entire passage; two children were buried at sea, and a man, 90 years of age, was buried on shore yesterday (Monday,) having died just as the ship came to pilot ground. One male child was born, and named partly after the ship and partly after the Captain: WESTMORELAND DEACON; this, our reporter informs us, was the cause of a general holiday throughout the length and breadth of the ship, with the exception of the forecastle, the inmates of which stood at a reluctant distance from the associative tendencies of the Saints."

We understand that the company left for Iowa City on Tuesday.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

Spain is reported to have settled amicably with Mexico. The intente cordiale has been brought about between Prussia and Switzerland, and the King of Bavaria is trying to reconcile King Bomba to kiss Napoleon and Queen Victoria.

Her Majesty's eldest daughter is really to go to Prussia with a marriage portion of £40,000 and an allowance of £8000 a year.

Fighting is going on with the Chinese. No change in their affairs.

General Toddleben, the Russian engineer, and to whom the late and present emperors are indebted for the Sebastopol fortifications, has fixed the first week in September to visit England, and attend the banquet to be given to him by the officers of the Royal Engineers.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

The conflict between the municipality of this city, headed by Mayor Wood, and the newly created Commissioners of Police, the appointees of the Governor of the State, continues to be the all-absorbing topic of local interest. The constitutionality of the new Metropolitan Police Bill is disputed by his worship the Mayor, and he holds on to his authority. The city Supreme Court decides in favor of its constitutionality, but he nevertheless carries it before the State Court of Appeals. For more than a month the city police have thus had two masters—the Mayor and the Commissioners. Some have stopped with the Mayor, others have joined his rivals. Democracy is in the ascendancy in the city—Black Republicanism is in the majority at Albany. The city Democrats charge the Black Republican legislators with aiming at their overthrow by depriving them of their rights, and thus they squabble, while at the same time they cry rebellion in Utah.

The French "Extradition case," which has been pending here since last January, has terminated. Eugene Grelet died in Eldridge street jail about two weeks ago, from grief, insufficient air, and want of proper accommodation. Commissioner Betts, after a lengthy hearing for and against delivering up the prisoners to France, sent on his decision to Washington, favorable to the demand, and on Saturday, Louis Grelet, the brother of the deceased, was hurried off in the Arago for Havre. The others are expected to be set at liberty.

Gen. Henningsen is the lion of the city. On Monday evening, in spite of the uncomfortable weather, the disciples of "Manifest Destiny" in torchlight procession, and some thousands of the curious, got the length of his residence up town, led on by a band of music, to honor the General with a serenade. His reply to the complimentary address was in exculpation of his fallen Chief.

The late murder at Newburg is still a mystery. The body of the murdered woman was said to be recognized last week. A French negro residing in Boston was ready to swear that it was that of his "pretty white wife," and furnished information that was strongly against certain parties in this city. They were apprehended, but before examination, the negro's lady appeared, to the great chagrin of the wonder-hunting crowd who had gathered to the court to hear the awful disclosures.

Ohio has been in a fever for the last eight days. The State and United States authorities have come into collision over some fugitive slaves. While the authorities have been in arms and fighting each other, the ebony folks took advantage of the confusion and cleared out by the "underground railway."

Gov. Walker has got to Kansas, and has great hopes of satisfying the cravings of the leeches who have fed on "Bleeding Kansas."

Commissioner Reed has got his instructions, and is expected to leave shortly for China, to watch the movements of France and England and see that Uncle gets a slice of the plunder.

Gen. Walker is said to be on his way to Washington—object not public. Captain Davis has already rendered an account to the Administration of his course in terminating the Nicaraguan war. Nobody finds fault.

At the election of municipal officers for the city of Washington, D. C., on Monday, there was a dreadful row. The United States Marines were called out to preserve the peace; but being fired upon by the rowdies, they returned the fire and killed several persons and wounded a great many more.

The Mormons:
What is to be Done with Them?

Some of our cotemporaries have been publishing long letters dated from Utah, and containing heart-rending accounts of the sufferings inflicted on poor helpless women by the brutality of the Mormon leaders. It is perhaps as well that the public should know that these letters are made up on this side of the Mississippi, and we have no doubt do more credit to the imagination than to the memory of their writers. No journal has a correspondent in Utah at the present time. It reflects some credit on the ingenuity of our cotemporaries to have bethought themselves of getting up an excitement about Utah just as Kansas died out.

Of the facts of the case in Utah, it is very difficult to form a reliable judgment, simply because our most reliable authorities, such as Judge Drummond, now in Washington, are tainted with a suspicion of interested motives. Judge Drummond, we hear, has no objection to return to Utah as Governor, with a proper armed force to void his quarrel with the Mormons. But it may be assumed as a fact that the United States authorties have been set at naught there, and that polygamy exists to a certain extent among the leading members of the Mormon government. We have no idea that polygamy is a common institution, or that, as a general thing, the Mormons have more wives than other people. The laws of common sense, economy, and domestic harmony forbid the general practice of polygamy; even in countries like Turkey, Persia, and China, where the civil and religious law upholds polygamy, it is, we know, a rare occurrence. Nor do we imagine that any peculiar dispensation of nature enables the Mormons or any considerable portion of them to live in a manner which example, precept, and desire have proved unable to popularize in the most luxurious oriental countries. With this reservation, then, and understanding the polygamic institutions of Utah as being a modern convenience for the private luxurious uses of Mr. Brigham Young and a select few of his associates, we conceive that the case of the Mormons can be grasped in a very moderate compass.

There is no authority in the Constitution to justify an interference by Congress or the Federal Government with such an institution as polygamy in a Territory. It is as clearly without the pale of Congressional or executive regulation as slavery; if Congress may not pass a law to govern the one, it may not pass a law to govern the other; if the President cannot interfere to drive slavery out of Kansas, neither can he assume to drive polygamy out of Utah. Marriage, a civil contract, is essentially subject to the control of local, municipal, or civil laws; the Federal Government has nothing to do with it, and Congress can make no laws defining its nature, altering its effect, or prescribing penalties for breaches of its obligations committed by people residing within a Territory of the United States.

Those, therefore, who assumed that Mr. Buchanan was going to carry fire and sword among the Mormons because they were polygamists, and to put down polygamy by force of arms, gave the President very little credit for judgment or knowledge of the instrument under which he holds his powers.

But if the Mormons have really rebelled against the United States authorities, violated the United States Courts, and expelled the United States judges—as we believe there is ample evidence that they have done—the United States have the right and it is their duty to punish them. They are entitled to send an armed force into the Territory, to inquire into the offences committed, to punish the guilty, to offer security for the future, and to give the United States Courts adequate protection. This line of duty, properly carried out, will, we apprehend, achieve every useful purpose.

The force required for Utah should consist of not less than 3,500 men formed into a corps d'armee under proper leaders, and provided with arms of all kinds, including light artillery. They should not be selected from the present ranks of the army. On the contrary, men for the purpose should be enlisted in the cities and villages; a preference being given to young married men over all others: and a few regular soldiers being thrown in from time to time to leaven the mass. With this army, which ought to be followed by a thousand women or more, there should be sent to Utah a man of great nerve, firmness and legal skill as Governor. His line of duties should be traced to him so closely as to leave him no room for indiscreet zeal on the one hand, or timorous concession on the other. And finally, with the Governor, there should be sent a staff of Christian missionaries selected for their skill and boldness from the various churches. It should be made the duty of these missionaries, immediately on their arrival at Utah, to commence a series of discussions on the cardinal points of Mormonism, with a view to show the absurdity of the system, and the errors of polygamy. We apprehend that a full and free discussion of the subject would explode it in the eyes of its most devoted adherents. And if Mr. Brigham Young, or any one else were so far to forget those clauses in the Constitution which secure to citizens of the United States freedom of speech and of discussion, as to interfere with the missionaries or their discussions, why, then, it would, of course become the duty of the Governor, to lay hands on the offender and prevent the repetition of the offence.

This policy would be likely to bring the Mormons to reason; perhaps no other presents so few objections.

Correspondence of President John Taylor.

ELMIRA, N. Y., May 27, 1857.

BRO. APPLEBY—My Dear Sir: Having a few moments leisure, waiting for the New York and Erie train, I avail myself of this opportunity of addressing you a few lines.

Being detained in Philadelphia yesterday, by invitation, I went, in company with Bro. Angus Cannon, to see the rifle factory of Messrs. Sharpe & Co., at Fairmount. It is a very extensive establishment, and fitted up in most admirable style. Taste, talent and ingenuity are everywhere displayed in the varied manipulations in the manufacture of this very efficient fire-arm. Almost every part is done by machinery; and if in full operation, they must be capable of manufacturing a very great amount. Mr. Sharpe is now engaged more particularly in the manufacture of pistols on the same principle as the rifle, which, although in a sudden emergency, in the hands of a greenhorn, would not be as efficient as that of Colt's, yet, from the facility of loading and the great force with which they throw a ball, in a continued fight with a practiced hand, would probably be quite as useful; they also have the great advantage of being more portable. I had the pleasure of an introduction to Mr. Sharpe, whose name, associated with his rifle, figures so extensively throughout the world. We were shown every courtesy by Mr. S., who, with one of his associates, whose name I have forgotten, took very great pains to show us through their establishment and explain the various operations. I find that Mr. Sharpe is not only good at inventing rifles, but is also expert in using them. I requested his judgment in picking out one for me—for which I am indebted to the good feelings of my Philadelphia friends. In trying it he shot a number of balls at a mark with great rapidity and accuracy, several of them going through the same hole. The balls went through a five or six-inch plank, and afterwards knocked pieces of stone off a wall on the other side. I was very much pleased with my visit and with the short interview I had with Mr. Sharpe, whom I found to be a gentleman; not only, however, on this account, but in having seen the "raal simon-pure" Mr. Sharpe, whose rifles have been put in competition with border ruffianism.

This morning I left at 7 1-2 A.M. and arrived here at 9 P.M., having enjoyed a very pleasant day's ride. We passed over a spur of the Alleghany Mountains; we ascended the banks of the Schuylkill, until they dwindled away in the mountain tops, and then traced another purling, rippling stream on this side of the mountains—the north branch of the Susquehanna—until, uniting with the east branch at Williamsport, it, like the Schuylkill, became a mighty river. The mountains on this route are none of your bald caps, rocky, barren, or desolate; but whilst they rear their heads in majestic grandeur, they are clothed in rich verdant foliage to their very peaks. It is true they are only miniature mountains, a sort of pocket pieces, in comparison with our Sierra Nevada or Rocky Mountains, yet they are nevertheless some pumpkins. The land seems generally to be of a good quality along the route, and grass, wheat and other grains seem to flourish well; rye, in particular, is strong, green and good-looking, and as it is now in head, presents a beautiful wavy appearance when moved by the wind. We passed through a coal region. The manufacture of iron seems also to be very extensive. The inhabitants seem to be busy and thriving; prosperity is the usual concomitant, associated with industry, of agricultural and mineral wealth. It is really pleasant, at this season, to pass through those beautiful valleys; the scenery is picturesque and romantic. The bubbling fountain, the rushing, foaming stream, the majestic river, the varied landscape, with the maple, the pine, the birch, the beech, the oak, and other denizens of the forest, all clad in their richest spring attire, and varying in shades of green, from the lightest and most delicate tints, to the darkest hues, mixed up with a dense underbrush blossoming in its varying colors—each and all portray Nature in her most gorgeous aspect, and present a view very pleasing to the eye. A great amount of magnificent pine trees grow on those mountain sides, the logs of which are either floated down the river, or converted into lumber and rafts, or carried by railroad.

Nothing particular occurred on our route; but one unfortunate wight, who either could not or would not pay his fare, was unceremoniously left in the woods either to feed or prey upon the charities of the benevolent.

I was going to write about lowing herds, frisking lambs, bleating sheep, beautiful cascades, &c., but the shrill whistle of the iron horse reminds me that I must put up paper and pens, or be as remorselessly left as the aforenamed adventurer. 11 o'clock I go to—no, not to bed, but to take a nap, if I can, in a car. Talk of shake-down beds, this is certainly a shake-down.

DUNKIRK, 27th, 11 o'clock.—Here I am, then; but I ought not to have been here, had it not been for those curious "connections" that George wrote about. I leave at half-past two to-day, and have just about time to see to my baggage, eat dinner, and say to you—adieu. I awoke this morning about the time that Sol peered over the mountains, to find myself in the midst of a forest in its natural state, just as when the red man used to have his pow-wow, play with his papoos, chase the deer, or join in the war dance—where is he now? Either gone to the happy hunting grounds, or driven before the heaving, swelling tide of what is termed civilization. But I must stop again. Adieu.

I am in very good health, and feel well. With kind love to all my friends,

I remain, as ever,

Yours in the E. C.,

JOHN TAYLOR.

Emancipation of Dred Scott and Family.

ST. LOUIS, May 26, 1857.

Dred Scott, with his wife and two daughters, were emancipated to-day by Taylor Blow, Esq. They had all been conveyed to him by Mr. Chaffee, of Massachusetts, for that purpose.

Cape De Verds Islands.

WASHINGTON, May 27, 1857.

An official letter from Cape de Verds says the crops there, though not abundant, are sufficient to keep the people from actual want. More than twenty thousand inhabitants in the islands and Archipelago had fallen victims to cholera.

From New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS, May 28, 1857.

Gen. Walker's friends confidently assert that he will go back to Nicaragua in 30 to 60 days, with plenty of men and means. He and his Staff attended, by invitation, this evening, Spalding's Ampitheatre. The house was densely crowded, and when Gen. Walker appeared the house rose and cheered him most enthusiastically, the band playing the national airs.

Gen. Walker will address a public meeting here to-morrow night on "Neutral Ground."

Mr. Joseph Bennan, editor of the Times, died yesterday. His funeral took place to-day, and was largely attended. He was the compatriot of John Mitchell and Thomas Francis Meagher.

Fatal Steamboat Explosion.

TORONTO, May 29, 1857.

The boiler of the steamer Inkermann, exploded this afternoon at 4 o'clock, instantly killing two men and dangerously wounding six. The crew consisted of twenty-two men, of whom Captain McBroome, Peter McLaughlin, and one other, are the only ones that escaped uninjured. No passengers were on board. It is feared that there are still ten more bodies in the wreck as that number are missing.

Great Excitement in Ohio.

CINCINNATI, May 29, 1857.

Deputy United States Marshall Churchill and eleven assistants left this city last Tuesday to arrest four persons, in Mechanicsburg, Champaign County, this State, charged with harboring fugitive slaves nine months ago. The arrests were made on Wednesday, when a writ of habeas corpus was taken out; but before it could be served, the United States officers, with their prisoners, were beyond the borders of the county. Another writ was taken out in Green County, and served by the Sheriff, assisted by a large crowd of citizens. The United States officers resisted, and several shots were exchanged, but, finally, the United States officers were overpowered, taken prisoners and brought to Springfield for trial for resisting the Sheriff in the discharge of his duty. The greatest excitement prevailed.

The United States Marshal telegraphed the Secretary of the Interior to-day for instructions regarding the arrest and imprisonment of the United States officers at Springfield, but the nature of the instructions received in reply has not yet transpired. Judge Leavitt, United States District Judge, issued a writ of habeas corpus to-day, and the Marshal has gone to Springfield to serve it. In case resistance is offered, it is reported that the United States troops will be called out.

Bloody Election Riots in Washington.

WASHINGTON, June 1, 1857.

During our city election to-day there were serious disturbances at several of the voting places.

The Mayor obtained from the President an order to call out two companies of Marines, having stated to him, upon the representation of credible citizens, that a band of lawless persons, most of them non-residents, had attacked one of the polls at which the election was in progress, and after maiming twenty good and peaceable citizens, had dispersed the Commissioners of Election, and threatened further violence on any attempt to carry on the election.

The Mayor directed the marines to the Northern Liberties, whither the rioters had conveyed a swivel. He commanded them to disperse, informing them that troops were there solely to preserve the peace. This order the rioters tauntingly disregarded, when the swivel was wrested from them, during which one marine was shot. The most fearful alarm prevailed, frequent shots being fired by the rioters, and the marines returning the fire. It was soon discovered that five or six persons had been killed and twice as many wounded, the larger portion of them innocent persons, so far as could be ascertained.

The verbal accounts of the particulars are extremely contradictory.

The city has been thrown into the most feverish state of excitement, and the occurrence is being everywhere discussed. The marines are still in reserve at the City Hall.

Anniversary of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery of Boston.

BOSTON, June 1, 1857.

The Two Hundred and Nineteenth Anniversary of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery, the Hon. Marshal P. Wilder, Commanding, was celebrated to-day with the usual military and social exercises.

At the dinner in Faneuil Hall a communication was read from Lord Palmerston, giving the history of the parent corps in London, of which Prince Albert is now commander.

Prince Albert was chosen an honorary member of the Boston Company amid much enthusiasm, the band playing "God Save the Queen," and winding up with "Yankee Doodle."

Speeches followed by Ex-President Pierce, Gov. Gardner, Mayor Rice, Collector Austin, Ben Parley Poore, Josiah Quincy, Jr., Gen. John S. Tyler, and other distinguished citizens.

The principal officers commissioned for the ensuing year are Col. Thomas Chickering, Captain; Col. W. W. Bullock, First Lieutenant, and Capt. Charles A. Kimball, Second Lieutenant.

Nahum Capen says he has received no official news of his appointment as Postmaster of Boston, and doubts the truth of the telegraphic announcement to the effect published on Saturday morning.

Terrible Catastrophe.

NEW ORLEANS, June 1, 1857.

The steamship Louisiana was burnt in Galveston Bay on Sunday morning.—Eleven persons were certainly lost in her, and Col. Bainbridge of the army, and thirty-one others, are missing. Twenty-five persons were saved by the steamer Galveston.

General William Walker left this city for Washington, this evening, by way of the river.

Railroad Accidents.

PHILADELPHIA, June 2, 1857.

The freight train, which left here early this morning for New York, was plunged into Rancocas creek by the drawbridge at that place being left open. The train was going slow at the time, and the engineers and others on the train jumped off in time to save themselves. The passenger train from New York was delayed nearly two hours in consequence of the accident, and had to return to Burlington and take the other track. The leaving of the drawbridge open is supposed to have been done by design.

GRAFTON, O., June 2, 1857.

Dr. C. D. Lewis, Professor in the Eclectic Medical Institute of Cincinnati, had his skull fractured yesterday afternoon, on the road from Wheeling, while imprudently thrusting his head from a window of the car while passing through Board Tree tunnel, forty miles west of this place. He is still living, but his recovery is considered hopeless.

Know Nothing Triumph in Canandaigua.

CANANDAIGUA, June 2, 1857.

At the charter election this day, the whole American ticket was elected by 100 majority over both the democrats and republicans, with three tickets in the field. Four hundred votes were polled.

FOR THE MORMON.

Philosophical Certainty of a Future State.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONCLUDED.

Just as well as there are instincts, restless and boundless desires in the mind to improve continually, morally and intellectually, which are all hints of a greater sphere of action in a world to come, so there are twinges of conscience—those silent monitors or furies that rise from the depth of the soul and cause man to look upon himself with dismay; the mirror which his own conscience represents, makes the wicked shudder. Hence, those sudden, strange, vague fears with which man is so often seized under singular circumstances, and which may be accountable for a future state of existence.

It is only justice and consistency that every action should find its reward, or, as the scripture says, that we shall reap as we have sown; and if we reason from analogy, that, as in the physical world every effect is proportionate or aggregate to its cause, we suppose the same in the moral world. Hence we may expect to see a noble action rewarded and a foul deed punished; but frequently circumstances prevent justice from having its free course, when the guilty is only exposed to the horrors of his evil conscience, which tells him that the justice and mercy of God requires that beings who cannot be rewarded or punished here below should meet with their destiny in a state of futurity.

History speaks emphatically of some great men, as for instance Tiberius, one of the most cruel Roman emperors, a perfect tyrant, spreading terror and dismay wherever his power reached. He had frequently ordered wholesale slaughters for the gratification of his fiendish lusts. His debaucheries made him an incarnate satyr; yet, although beyond the common power of man, he was, according to the letters he wrote to the Senate, tortured with the agonies of a despairing man; wherever he went in his gorgeous palace, the reproach of his conscience arose like furies, and made him feel horror-struck. Historians relate of Charles IX., King of France, who had caused and assisted in the horrible massacre of St. Bartholomew, that the peace of his mind was disturbed ever afterwards; that he was frequently seized during the night with sudden alarms, fears, imagining to see those rise whom he had slaughtered; in fact, he had to suffer the greatest agonies. D'Aubigne relates of Henry IV. that he said in the circle of the most intimate friends, that eight days after the massacre of St. Bartholomew he saw a vast number of ravens perch and croak on the pavillion of the Louvre. Charles IX. started up sometimes at night, called for the grooms of his chamber, had them go out and listen to a great noise of groans and moanings in the air, and then he fancied to hear some furious and threatening voices, the whole of which was a true portraiture of the clamor he had heard on the night of the massacre.

A great many other persons of rank and power might be quoted in similar instances, but suffice it to say, that those terrors of an evil conscience are nothing but the awful forbodings of a future life. If not, why is it that men of rank, power and courage, who have nothing to fear from the puny arm of man, who can command nations, should tremble horror-struck in the silent hours of the night? How is it that men, like Antiochus Epiphanes, Herod, King Richard III., and other potentates, after their fiendish lusts and passions were gratified, their plans accomplished, and their own persons and possessions perfectly prepared to meet any outbreaks of popular dislike, and safe from the hand of hatred and revenge, should feel alarmed in regard to a future life? I say future life, because every mental fear involves a dread of something lying in the future. What reason had they to fear even God himself, if there is not a future existence? Still, they were seized in the recesses of their gorgeous palaces with unutterable anguish, and trembled at the sight of shadows; if there is no tribunal of justice, after this life, then this mental agony appears as a psychological enigma.

We would then infer from the foregoing, that the voice of conscience, (that silent monitor in man,) is the voice of God, who abhors the actions of corrupt and wicked men, and gives this evidence that there is a tribunal for the just and unjust; that there is a future state of existence, where everyone will be rewarded according to his deeds in the flesh, and according to the light and knowledge he possessed; where all physical, mental and moral deficiencies and anomalies will be made up; where to everyone a just destiny will be meted out; hence, we see, that the virtuous and the noble-minded feel calm and serene at the approach of death, and are willing to exchange the scenes of this life for those of a future existence.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are he kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait; car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

PARTICULAR NOTICE TO SALT LAKE, SANTA FE, AND CALIFORNIA TRADERS.

HORACE E. DIMICK & CO.'S
GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM,
FOR SHOT GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, BOWIE KNIVES, AND SPORTING APPARATUS of every variety, is at
No. 42 Main Street, St. Louis, Mo., (at the Sign of the Deer in Windows.)

WE are now in receipt of our stock of Goods for the coming season, which enables us to say, that we have now in store, and for sale, the LARGEST and most COMPLETE assortment of Guns, Pistols, Sporting Apparatus, and Goods selected expressly for the arming of wagon trains, for crossing the plains, the markets of Santa Fe, Salt Lake, and Oregon, &c., that can be found in any HOUSE in the WESTERN COUNTRY!

Among the most staple articles now on hand, can be found upwards of 2,000 DOUBLE AND SINGLE SHOT GUNS; 2,500 MUSKETS AND UNITED STATES RIFLES, both new and second-hand, with flint or percussion locks; COLT'S REVOLVERS, of all sizes, ALWAYS on hand, in quantities to satisfy almost any demand, and at EASTERN PRICES. Also, all the most improved patterns of Revolvers and other Pistols now in use.

N. B.—We, the undersigned, being practical men in all matters appertaining to the arming and equipping of Emigrant and Merchant wagon trains for crossing the plains, renders our experience worthy of consultation, to make it the more easy for the emigrant and trader to supply themselves with the necessary articles, viz: FIRE ARMS, FIXED AMUNITION, PROVISIONS AND GROCERIES, of all kinds; Wagons, Tents, Horses, Mules, Oxen; in short, everything necessary for their comfort.

We also beg leave to call the attention of EASTERN HUNTING PARTIES, that wish to spend a few months on the plains, that we have all the necessary arms and equipments, and at prices as low as they can be furnished in any Eastern city.

We keep constantly on hand, (or make to order,) TARGET, HUNTING, and MINNIE RIFLES, which we guarantee to be superior to any in the country.

We also keep constantly on hand the CELEBRATED SHARP'S PATENT RIFLE, which is the safest and most destructive weapon ever invented, for sale at the Manufacturer's prices, for cash.

Please call and examine for yourselves, as it is no trouble for us to answer questions, or show goods.

Remember the place, No. 42 North Main street.

Tribute to Kane

BY MR. FITZ-JAMES O'BRIEN.

Aloft, upon an old basaltic crag,
Which scalped by keen winds that defend the Pole,
Gazes with dead face on the seas that roll
Around the secret of the mystic zone,
A mighty nation's star-bespangled flag
Flutter's alone.
And underneath upon the lifeless front
Of that drear cliff, a simple name is traced;
Fit type of him, who, famishing and gaunt,
But with a rocky purpose in his soul,
Breasted the gathering snows,
Clung to the drifting floes,
By want beleaguered, and by winter chased,
Seeking the brother lost amid that frozen waste.

Not many months ago we greeted him,
Crowned with the icy honors of the North.
Across the land his hard won fame went forth,
And Maine's deep woods were shaken limb by limb.
His own mild Keystone State, sedate and prim,
Burst from decorous quiet as he came.
Hot Southern lips, with eloquence aflame,
Sounded his triumph. Texas, wild and grim.
Proffered its horny hand. The large-lunged West,
From out its giant breast,
Yelled its frank welcome. And from main to main,
Jubilant to the sky,
Thundered the mighty cry,
Honor to Kane!

In vain—in vain beneath his feet we flung
The reddening roses! All in vain we poured
The golden wine, and round the shining board
Sent the toast circling, till the rafters rung
With the thrice-tripled honors of the feast!
Scarce the buds wilted and the voices ceased
Ere the pure light that sparkled in his eyes,
Bright as auroral fires in Southern skies,
Faded and faded. And the brave young heart
That the relentless arctic winds had robbed
Of all its vital heat, in that long quest
For the lost captain, now within his breast
More and more faintly throbbed.
His was the victory; but as his grasp
Closed on the laurel crown with eager clasp,
Death launched a whistling dart;
And ere the thunders of applause were done
His bright eyes closed forever on the sun!
Too late—too late the splendid prize he won
In the Olympic race of Science and of Art!

Like to some shattered berg that, pale and lone,
Drifts from the white North to a Tropic zone,
And in the burning day
Wastes peak by peak away,
Till on some rosy even
It dies with sunlight blessing it; so he
Tranquilly floated to a Southern sea,
And melted into heaven!

He needs no tears, who lived a noble life!
We will not weep for him who died so well;
But we will gather round the hearth, and tell
The story of his strife.
Such homage suits him well;
Better than funeral pomp, or passing bell!

What tale of peril and self-sacrifice!
Prisoned amid the fathomless of ice,
With hunger howling o'er the wastes of snow!
Night lengthening into months; the ravenous floe
Crunching the massive ships, as the white bear
Crunches his prey. The insufficient share
Of loathsome food;
The lethargy of famine; the despair
Urging to labor nervously pursued;
Toil done with skinny arms, and faces hued
Like pallid masks, while dolefully behind
Glimmered the fading embers of a mind!
That awful hour, when through the prostrate band
Delirium stalked, laying his burning hand
Upon the ghastly foreheads of the crew.
The whispers of rebellion, faint and few
At first, but deepening ever till they grew
Into black thoughts of murder: such the throng
Of horrors round the Hero. High the song
Should be that hymns the noble part he played!
Denying himself—yet ministering aid
To all around him. By a mighty will
Living defiant of the wants that kill,
Because his death would seal his comrades' fate;
Cheering with ceaseless and inventive skill
Those Polar winters, dark and desolate.
Equal to every trial, every fate,
He stands until Spring, tardy with relief,
Unlocks the icy gate,
And the pale prisoners thread the world once more,
To the steep cliffs of Greenland's pastoral shore
Bearing their dying chief!

Time was when he should gain his spurs of gold
From royal hands who wooed the knightly state;
The knell of old formalities is tolled,
And the world's knights are now self-consecrate.
No grander episode doth chivalry hold
In all its annals, back to Charlemagne,
Than that long vigil of unceasing pain,
Faithfully kept, through hunger, and through cold,
By the good Christian knight Elisha Kane.

Ants in Africa

A species commonly known as the "drivers" (termes bellicosa) are so denominated from the fact that they compel almost every other species of the animal creation to get out of their way, or submit to the alternative of being devoured. They are a black or dark-brown species, which, in size and general appearance, is not unlike the common ant of this country. It has a sharp, flat head, terminating in a pair of horizontal nippers, with which it can give a very severe pinch; and if it gets hold of a soft part of the skin, it always draws blood, but leaves little or no irritation after it is removed.

The "driver" is the enemy and assailant, not only of every other insect, but of everything which comes in its way. They traverse the country by day and night in trains of a quarter or half-mile long. They form a running stream, and persons about to step over the train, as it glides along under the grass, frequently start back under the impression of its being a snake. When moving about in these long files, they are either about to change their residence or are in search of food. They are always preceded by a few straggling guards, who keep them informed of any dangers or difficulties that may lie in their way. It is astonishing with what rapidity a note of alarm can be transmitted from one end of the line to the other. The soldiers, who always keep along the side of the regular column, the moment they receive a note of alarm, set off with all possible dispatch for the point of danger, while the main body is either brought to a dead halt, or turned backward; but as soon as the obstruction is removed, or is found not to be insuperable, the main army is set in motion again. They seem to have regular leaders, all the while as if to keep up a constant communication between the front and the rear.

When about to cross a well-trodden path, where they are likely to be disturbed, the soldiers weave themselves into a complete arch, extending across the whole width of the path, under which the females and laborers bearing the larvæ pass without the least exposure. The construction of the arch with their own bodies is one of the most singlar and interesting things to be met with in the history of insects. One ant is raised entirely above the ground by having one pair of feet interlocked with the fore feet of another standing upright, and the other pair with another in the same posture on the opposite side of the arch. Any number of these are formed, and bound together by other ants stretching themselves lengthwise with the arch, and serving as traverse beams to hold the different parts together. The arch, when formed, holds togther with the greatest tenacity, and looks like a beautiful network of beads.

I have frequently put the end of my cane under the arch, and raised it four or five feet from the ground without letting a single ant fall. As soon as they are raised up, however, they begin to unravel themselves from either end of the wreath, but instead of dropping to the ground, they mount up to the end of the cane, and make for the hand which has assailed them. When disturbed in this way, the whole body of soldiers spread themselves over a space of twenty or thirty feet in diameter, over which neither man nor beast can pass without getting some of them upon him, and receiving a few sharp nips. A horse can scarcely be forced through them, and a dog never does, except with a bound and a leap, and even then is sure to get one or more about his claws, which are very apt to get hold of his lip in his attempt to remove them from his toes.

They frequently visit dwelling houses; and if at night, as is frequently the case, it is always to the no little discomfiture of the inmates. They enter by some small hole; and, from the point which they spread themselves over the floor, along the walls, ann over the surface of the roof, like a great scouring army. Every nook, and corner, and crevice in the house is explored, and no insect, however small, can elude their search. The human inhabitants are generally apprised of the approach by the fluttering of cockroaches and the squeaking of the mice which have fallen in their toils. The mouse is usually seized in the first instance by a single ant; but in his foolish attempt to get that one detached, instead of running off with it to a place of safety, he gets half a dozen more on him. In this distress and agony, he falls down and cries out, and is soon overpowered by a multitude sufficient to destroy a much larger animal. In a very few minutes not a trace of the mouse can be seen, except a little hair and a few of his larger bones; and in the morning the floor may be seen strewed with the wings of cockroaches that have been destroyed in the night.

It is necessary for the human inhabitants to abandon the house during their occupancy of it, which, however, is not more than a few hours, and they are more than repaid for this temporary inconvenience by having the house completely rid of all other insects, which is no small matter in any tropical country. I have known persons to be entirely destroyed by them, who, from sickness or lameness, could not get out of their way, and had no one to remove them. It is said that criminals were once punished on this part of the coast by being laid across the tracks of these insects with fetters on. This would be a refinement of cruelty for which no parallel can be conceived. If this ever was the custom of the country, it has long since passed away.

These ants seldom retain possession of any one house more than a few hours; but sometimes it takes them several days to get through all the houses of the same village. There is scarcely any way by which their progress can be arrested; and as a general thing, it is thought to be the best policy to let them take their regular course. They perform an important service, and the inconvenience which they occasion is temporary, and may well be endured for the advantages which are derived from it.

But in nothing is the ingenuity of these little insects more remarkably displayed than in the expedient to which they frequently resort to cross a little stream on the sand beach after a shower of rain. Sometimes their train is cut in two by one of these little streamlets. To plunge into it singly, they would soon be swept away by the rush of the current.

They come to the edge of the water, raise their antennæ and point them from one direction to the other, as if they were taking a scientific view of all the dangers of the crossing. They wander up and down the stream with the greatest uneasiness, and finding no other way to cross, form themselves into a compact knot or raft of a dozen or more, and launch themselves upon the stream. They have, by previous observation, made sure that they would strike a projecting point or bluff on the opposite shore, and not be carried by the current into the main river. The moment they touch the other side they use their claws like anchors, and hold on until the whole company disengage themselves and march off in single file in the track of those that have preceded them, for hours together; and I have seen raft after raft of these little creatures go over safely, when if they had attempted to get across singly, they would all have been swept into the river.—Rev. J. L. Wilson's Western Africa.

The Late Sultan of Muscat.

The Sultan or Imaum of Muscat, whose death was announced a short time since, was so remarkable a Prince as to deserve some notice of his character and extended reign. An Oriental Sovereign, who establishes a firm empire over dominions before unsettled; who cultivates the arts of peace; who forms wise and useful alliances with Western powers, and whose reign is prolonged for more than half a century, must possess qualities deserving of admiration. Syed or Said, the deceased Sultan, came to the throne in 1806, at the age of 17 years. His dominions were partly in Asia and partly in Africa. Muscat, from which he derived his title, is a very considerable seaport and commercial depot in the province of Oman, on the Arabian shore of the Persian Gulf, and commanding the narrow entrance of that gulf. Oman, the most easterly portion of Arabia, and about 350 miles in length, constituted the Asistic dominion of the Imaum, which he delivered from vassalage to the Wahabees.

But he also partly inherited and partly wrested from the Portuguesean Territory several hundred miles in length on the eastern coast of Africa, called Zanguebar, with a large and beautiful island called Zanzibar, in which island he resided during the latter years of his life. The Imaum of Muscat was a man of dignified and noble presence, but not a warrior. His conquests were effected chiefly by means of his alliances, and especially by his alliance with England and the East India Company. He formed a considerable navy of five English-built frigates, but he employed them in commerce, not in war, and carried on a very extensive trade with India and various parts of the East. Like Mehemet Ali, he traded largely upon his own account, and thereby accumulated riches, which he did not, like the Pasha of Egypt, squander in warlike enterprises. He had the sagacity not merely to avoid the quarrels and intrigues to which Oriental Princes are so prone, but to fortify himself by treaties with the strongest maritime powers—namely, England, France, and the United States, and to remain perfectly faithful to his engagements.

At a time when the slave trade was largely carried on from his coasts, he entered into a compact with our Government to put down the traffic, and he did so externally, though not within his own dominions. He was wise enough to encourage foreign commerce by very low custom duties, and thus he gratified his love of money more effectually than by rapaciously grasping it. He also made extensive plantations of sugar canes, cloves and coffee, and thereby enriched himself and his people. While an ally of England, and never giving ground of offence or jealousy, he yet concluded a special treaty with the United States, relative to the trade of Zanzibar, in consequence of which the American trade with that fertile and populous island is much greater than the English. In 1844 he concluded a treaty with France. By such wise measures he laid solid foundations for his own power and prosperity, and a great part of his long reign was devoted to the quiet reaping of the fruits which he had sown. He was not a man of high moral qualities, but his wisdom as a ruler has not often been surpassed. He has left no children by two wives, but one of his sons by a concubline was Governor of Zanzabar, and the governments of England and France have agreed to recognize his eldest son as his heir. According to the Journal des Debats, to which we are indebted for many of the above facts, the French Government has sent a frigate to Zanzibar, not perhaps without some view to the possibility of that island or the Territory of Zanguebar falling into French hands. The more interesting part of the late Imaum's dominions, however, is that which commands the entrance to the Persian Gulf, and which will become of still greater importance when the railway from Seleucia to the Euphrates and the navigation of that great river shall make the Persion Gulf the highway to India.

A Bath at Damascus.

FROM THE FRENCH

Scarcely had I entered the establishment, when two strong men belonging to the bath laid hold of me, and in an instant I was stripped to the skin. One of them then passed a linen shawl around my waist, while the other fastened on my feet a pair of gigantic pattens, which at once made me a foot taller. This mode of shoeing not only rendered flight impossible, but, by its clumsy elevation, destroyed my equilibrium; and I should inevitably have fallen, had not the two men supported me on either side. I was fairly caught. We passed into another room; here the vapor and heat stifled me. I thought that my guides had mistaken the way and got into an oven. I tried to shake them off, but my resistance was anticipated. In a few moments I was astonished at perspiration poured from me, my lungs began to dilate, and my respiration returned. In this state I passed through five or six rooms, the heat of which increased so much, that I began to believe that man had for five thousand years mistaken his proper element, and that his appropriate destiny was boiling or roasting.

At last we came to the stove room. There the fog was so dense, that I could not see two steps before me; and the heat so entirely insupportable, that I partly fainted. I shut my eyes, and resigned myself to my guides. After leading, or rather carrying me, a few steps further, they took off my girdle, unhooked my pattens, and extended me, half swooning, on something like a marble table in the middle of the apartment. Here again I soon became accustomed to the infernal atmosphere. With my other senses, my sight revived, and, despite the fog, I made out with tolerable accuracy the surrounding objects. My tormentors seemed to have forgotten me for a moment; they were busey at one side of the room. I lay in the centre of a large square saloon, encrusted, to the height of five or six feet, with various colored marbles; a series of spouts threw out incessantly streams of steaming water, which, falling on the pavement beneath, glided thence into four basins, like cauldrons, at the four corners of the room. On the surface of the water in these basins was an indefinite number of bald heads bobbing about, and expressing, by the most grotesque contortions of face, various degrees of felicity. This spectacle so occupied my attention, that I scarcely heeded the return of my masters. They came, however, one with a large wooden bowl of soapsuds, the other with a ball of fine flax. Suddenly one of the rascals innundated my face and neck with his suds; and the other, seizing me by the shoulder, rubbed most furiously my face and breast with his flax. This treatment, and the pain induced by it, were so perfectly intolerable, that all my powers of resistance and resentment waked at once. I bolted upright, kicked my flaxen friend half across the room, and planted my fist in the face of soapsuds with such goodwill, that he laid sprawling on the floor. Then, knowing of no other remedy for the soap (which was blistering my skin,) I boldly plunged into the larger basin. I had misjudged; the remedy was worse than the disease. Before, my face and neck were cauterized, now, my whole body was scalded; the water was boiling! I yelled with pain; sprang on and on and over my neighbors, who could not comprehend my case; and got out of the tub almost as rapidly as I got in. However, I was not rapid enough to escape the effect of the ablution; my body was as red as a lobster. I was stupefied! I must be dreaming, or riding a night-mare! Yet there was no deception. Here, under my very eyes, were men stewing in a broth of which I had tried the temperature, who evidently took great delight in the operation. What could it mean? My notions of pleasure and pain became confused; they could enjoy what to me was agony! I once more resolved to resign myself to fate. I doubted my own judgment. I distrusted my own senses. I determined again to submit to my tormentors. They came, having recovered from my assault. I followed them without resistance to another basin. They made signs to me to descend the steps. I obeyed.

From this I passed to another of a higher temperature, but still supportable. I remained in it, as in the first, about three minutes. I then proceeded to the third, which was still some ten or twelve degrees hotter; and, finally, reached the fourth where I had commenced my dread apprenticeship. I approached it with the greatest repugnance, but I had made up my mind to go through with my desperate adventure. I first dipped my toe in the water. It was hot, certainly; but not so scalding as before. I gradually immersed my whole body, and was surprised to find it endurable.

My attendants now again took me in hand. They replaced the linen around my waist, bound a shawl on my head, and led me back through the rooms by which I had entered (taking care to add to my covering at each change of atmosphere) until I arrived at the chamber where I was so unceremoniously stripped. Here I found a good carpet and pillows. My turban and girdle were taken off; I was enveloped in a large woollen gown, laid down like an infant, and left alone. I had now an undefinable feeling of comfort. I was perfectly happy; yet, so exhausted, that when the door was opened, half an hour after, I had not changed my position by the movement of a finger or a muscle. The new comer was a sinewy and well set Arab. He approached my couch as if he had some business with me. I looked on him with a sort of dread very natural to a man who had passed such an ordeal as I have described; but I was too weak to attempt to rise. He took my left hand; cracked all its joints, and did the same to the right. After my hands, he administered upon my feet and knees; and, to finish the matter, he dexterously threw me into the position of a pigeon-to-be-boiled, and gave me the coup de grace by cracking the vertebræ of my spine. I screamed with terror, thinking my backbone was broken to a certainly. My nasseur then kneaded my arms, and thighs for a quarter of an hour, and left me. I was weaker than ever; my joints all pained me, and I had not strength sufficient to cover myself with the carpet. A servant now brought me coffee, pastiles, and a pipe; and left me to intoxicate myself with perfume and tobacco. I passed half an hour in a drowsy state, lost in the vagaries of a delicious inebriation, experiencing a feeling of happiness before unknown, and entertaining a supreme indifference to every (absent) earthly thing. I was awakened from this by a barber, who shaved me, and combed my whisker and moustaches. Next, my Arab returned, to whom I made signs that I wished to depart. He brought my clothes, assisted me in my toilet, and led me to the chamber opening on the vestibule, there I found my cloak. The cost of this entertainment, which lasted three hours, was a piastre, or five francs of our money.

Fashionable Religion

It would be very interesting to know exactly, how New York spends its Sabbaths, particularly when we remember that there are not churches enough to seat one-half the population of the metropolis, and that the places of worship which are open are with a few exceptions never more than half-filled. The Roman Catholics are very constant in their attendance at church, but the poor Protestant generally finds the temple too fine, the congregation too much impregnated with mammon worship and too splendid in attire for the proper understanding of the dispensation of Him who was meek and lowly and had no place to lay His head. So the poor Protestant falls into loose habits on Sunday. He reads novels or sleeps, and is speedily accounted among the ungodly that are to be cast into the outer darkness where there is weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth.

The churches as well as the theatres have followed the fashionable movement up town. On all the avenues may be found religious edifices generally more able—more suggestive of the promps and vanities of this wicked world than of the pure and holy precepts which should be inculcated within their walls. The gorgeousness of the edifice—the magnificence of the congregation—the Pecksniffian discourse of the fashionable preacher—the gems from the last improper opera are worked into sacred music for the choir—all these are the elements of religion after the modern improved style.

Fashionable religion is generally a good speculation in a pecuniary point of view. The pews are sold at auction after the fashion that Barnum disposed of the choice seats to hear Jenny Lind. Very large sums are netted in this way. Occasionally, the fashionable churches burst like other mercantile speculations. One of the most exclusive, situated in the Fifth avenue, is now in a tight place, financially speaking. It is heavily in debt, and in danger of being sold out by the Sheriff. It is a Baptist church, but the preacher is not exactly the type of Him who preached in the wilderness of Judea. His raiment is not of camel's hair, but of the finest broadcloth; his meat is something more elaborate than locusts and wild honey; the water of his Jordan comes from far away in the country, and is carefully warmed for fear that the faithful might take cold in immersion. He does not cry "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand," but he preaches pleasant dulcet discourses, showing the whitest o hands—the most immaculate of pocket handkerchiefs—the most splendid of ambrosial curls. He is a sweet preacher for the ladies, and thoroughly understands the dilletanism of modern Christianity. Decidedly, John the Baptist would be astonished at his Fifth avenue representative. It is to be hoped that the bulls and bears of Wall street will forget their quarrels for a while and come down handsomely for the relief of the modern John the Baptist.

It is a curious fact that the Reformation was brought about by the luxury, corruption and effeminacy which crept into the bosom of the mother church and that now those who profess Protestantism, are following in the same evil courses against which Knox, Calvin and Luther launched their thunders. In simplicity of attire, abstinent habits of life and devotion to the interests of their flocks, the Catholic clergy now stands pre-eminent. On the other hand, the representatives of the stern old Puritans, who could not bear the sight of a surplice, are turning away to all sorts of abominations. There is no more of the solid old Cotton Mather piety left among us. There are velvet cushions, artistic music, sweet preachers, nicely worded somnolent discourses, worshippers rolled up in Russian sables and loaded with diamonds, splendid churches, where the atmosphere is redolent with perfumes, and the very light shaded with many colored tints, heavy floating debts, crushing mortgages, but not a drop of the manna of righteousness, unless a poor sinner for a moment, under fear of the mighty sexton offers up his lonely prayer in a free seat. Such is fashionable religion in New York in these latter days. Read Christ's Sermon on the Mount, and let us have a fashionable discourse, with the thirteenth verse for a text.—[New York Herald.

Civility is a Fortune.

Civility is a fortune itself, for a courteous man always succeeds well in life, and that even when persons of ability sometimes fail. The famous Duke of Marlborough is a case in point. It is said of him by one cotemporary, that his agreeable manners often converted an enemy into a friend; and, by another, that it was more pleasant to be denied a favor by his grace, than to receive one from other men. The gracious manner of Charles James Fox preserved him from personal dislike, even at a time when he was politically the most unpopular man in the kingdom. The history of the country is full of such examples of success obtained by civility. The experience of every man furnishes, if we but recall the past, frequent instances where conciliatory manners have made the fortunes of physicians, lawyers, divines, politicians, merchants, and indeed, individuals of all pursuits. In being introduced to a stranger, his affability, or the reverse, creates instantaneously a prepossession in his behalf, or awakens unconsciously a prejudice against him. To men, civility is, in fact, what beauty is to a woman; it is a general passport to favor, a letter of recommendation, written in language that every stranger understands. The best of men have often injured themselves by irritability and consequent rudeness, as the greatest scoundrels have frequently succeeded by their plausible manners. Of two men, equal in all respects, the courteous one has twice the chance of fortune.—Ex.

Severe, but True.

The pungent Mr. Ryle, in one of his tracts, gives these sentences: "The plain truth is, that many believers in the present day seem so dreadfully afraid of doing harm, that they hardly ever dare to do any good. There are many who are fruitful in objections, but barren in action; rich in wet blankets, but poor in anything like christian fire. They are like the Dutch deputies, who would never allow Marlborough to venture anything, and by their excessive caution prevented many a victory from being won. Truly, in looking round the Church of Christ, a man might sometimes think that God's kingdom was come and God's will was being done on earth, so small is the zeal that some believers show. It is vain to deny it."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 13, 1857.

A New Movement

Our readers will perceive in the telegraphic despatch from Washington of the 4th inst., that a Governor for Utah has been found and his policy blocked out. After reaching Utah he is "to issue a proclamation, that such persons residing in the Territory, male and female, as desire to return to the States, shall receive protection and necessary assistance from the government." This is a "splendiferous" move. "Goodness gracious!" who won't pray for long life and a happy death to the Democratic Administration at Washington, if they only carry out this move. Talk of compromises—this is the compromise of all compromises. Who won't be pleased now? Apostates will doubtless be grateful for deliverance from the society of those whose sacred laws they have trampled upon; the Mormons will be quite as thankful for the unoccupied space their absence will leave for better folks; and the Gentiles cannot fail to be benefitted by such accessions to their numbers. Seeing, then, that all parties will be considerably benefited, we go in for the movement. It is admirable in conception; carried out in detail it may be something more glorious than it has entered into our minds to conceive. We long for its realization. Hurry it up. We promise the administration and the new Governor our hearty co-operation. Send us on the proclamation, and we will give it the widest circulation. We shall lead the van by publishing it in this paper; we shall send it to, and speak for its publication, in the Western Standard, San Francisco, California; in the Millennial Star, Liverpool, England; in Zion's Trumpet, Wales; in the Scandinavian Star, Copenhagen, Denmark; in Zion's Watchman, Australia; in the Truthteller, Geneva, Switzerland: and by way of pamphlet, we can have it published by our Elders in France, Germany, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Gibraltar, Cape of Good Hope, East Indies, China, and in all the nations and islands of the sea where a Mormon is to be found. All this, we were about to say, we should do free, gratis for nothing; but on remembering that Uncle Sam is expected to have some twenty-three millions in his long stocking before many months, moulding, for aught we know, for want of a free circulation, our charity withers; the benevolent sentiment is stifled; and we come to business behind the counter, and offer to do all that, and as much more if we can, for the circulation of the Proclamation, for a reasonable share of the dollars. We are aware that other papers have a greater circulation than ours; but then the administration have doubtless a greater wish to do good than to seek after the vain glory of the world. We know that we are the best advertising medium for this business, ask a share of Government patronage, and give our reasons for speaking so highly of our paper for this business. Apostates are well aware of the greediness with which their lies have been received in the States; they know that the public are hoaxed continually by editors, and would, therefore, treat the Proclamation as one more added to the great list of fabrications. From want of confidence, they would take no preparatory measures for leaving the Territory, and thus the sublime mission of the new Governor and the army would, in a measure, fail. If they read it in our paper they would believe it; besides, the Mormons in Utah did they believe that the General Government intended to bestow such a favor on the Territory, as take away the grunting portion of the community, they might be tempted to elbow that class they wanted to get rid of, and really prepare something like a return emigration to justify Uncle's expenditure. All this, we think, can be better accomplished through the publication of the Proclamation in THE MORMON, and the papers we have named, than by publishing it in the papers of the Gentiles. We would, in the event of being selected, likewise recommend the folks in Utah to take early advantage of the "assistance and protection;" and as the female portion of the community are to be the special objects of care, we would also assure them that the object of the mission was their deliverance from thraldom, and not to replenish the monogamic christian institutions, such as Five Points and Blackwell's Island, which in their simplicity they might judge it to be. Let the Government only try us, and they will see how nicely we will prepare the road before the Governor. His mission won't fail if he sticks to us. We get credit for knowing a thing or two.

If it be not treason to give a hint, we had serious thoughts of hinting to the administration to take into their kind consideration the terrible condition of many of the inhabitants of the States. What a pity it is to see a Governor and an army of assistance and protection going over the plains to Utah without doing good by the way. What if a Proclamation was published in the States, and all the inhabitants, male and female, who were discontented with their positions, were informed that they had now the opportunity of going to Utah with the assistance and protection of Government? What of that, gentlemen? Glorious again! All the corrupt Mormons living in the pure, virtuous cities of the States could then clear out. Who in the Cabinet will take this up? This is something like business. No fun, gentlemen, we assure you—all downright, good, sober earnest. Furthermore we are certain that from ten to one hundred persons can be found crying in the States to go to Utah for every one that can be found in that Territory longing for a return to the States. The gentleman in the Cabinet who takes up this subject, and puts it through in a right manner, will have his name handed down among the honorable men of the earth, and shall no more be associated with Drummond and the long string of blackguards who are thirsting for blood, and in their fury so blinded that they do not discover the eyes of the world fixed upon them, and know not the power of a righteous God who will overthrow them for sheding the blood of innocence.

A Chicago Cotemporary and Drummond.

LAST week we published that portion of the Oquawka Plaindealer's article on Drummond which the Chicago Weekly Tribune thought prudent to give to its readers, though at the time we clipped it from that paper we were convinced that the Plaindealer had said more of the scapegrace and accordingly sent for it. Our readers will perceive by President Taylor's extract from the Missouri Republican that our Chicago cotemporary had in reality skipped over one important item—"JUDGE DRUMMOND WAS ACCOMPANIED BY HIS BEAUTIFUL AND ACCOMPLISHED LADY" ! ! "That is an item as is an item." We should not be surprised if we find out that the Republican has likewise kept something back. But what induced the Weekly Tribune to publish the article from the Plaindealer and yet skip over three lines? To save his reputation from the charge of bigotry, he decided to publish as much of it as was absolutely necessary for that purpose, and no more. The very important item which we have placed above in large letters for the convenience of short-sighted bigots would corroborate our charge about Ada Carrol—the editor of the Tribune, therefore, concluded to say nothing of it: very smart man. To admit that he had been hoaxed by Drummond while his honorable, legitimate, heart broken wife was living in the same State, and not such a wonderful distance either from Chicago, was really too much for that immaculate editor. Now, Mr. Editor, that you are convinced that your "Hon." Judge Drummond "was accompanied by his beautiful and accomplished lady" to Utah, while his wife and children were living in Oquawka, you cannot fail to perceive the commencement of the Judge's troubles. The neglected Mrs. Drummond of Oquawka had relatives in Utah, who, of course, were rejoiced to read in the Deseret News of the arrival of the Hon. associate-justice Drummond and lady in Great Salt Lake City, and who, brushing up to the Judge in anticipation of seeing and welcoming Mrs. Drummond, were thunder struck at the change. This, among other folks, might have passed for fashion, or, as the Judge had predecessors who found that Polygamy created a monopoly "which was peculiarly hard upon the officers sent to reside there," it might have been regarded as a precautionary convenience, but among the Mormons where things get called by their own names it passed for what it was. That he was despised is verily true—not because that he was an officer of the Federal Government, but because he was Drummond with "the beautiful and accomplished lady" with all the etceteras. The name of Washington is dear to every American—not because that he was twice the first officer of the United States, but because he was WASHINGTON—an embodiment of virtue. Do you understand it? Eh!

That Drummond had motives for injuring the Mormons, all must see. Will the Chicago Tribune, which has been republishing in the West the slanders of Drummond in the East, now turn from the evil of its ways? We shall see. We are so accustomed to be maligned, abused and lied about, that we have got used to the operation and don't harbor malice so firmly that we can't forgive—should, therefore, the editor of the Weekly Tribune, turn from the error of his ways and admit that Drummond was a corrupt defamer of the Mormons and try to undo the evil that he has done we shall forgive him and use up the other defamers as we have the "horse trader" Judge, till all the world and his wife just sees them as they are.

Since the foregoing was in print we have received the Oquawka Plaindealer, June 5th, from which we extract the following:

JUDGE DRUMMOND AGAIN.

DRUMMOND has been writing another letter which has been published in the N. Y. Daily Times and copied into other papers. He is evidently bent upon gaining some notoriety, and we are disposed to help him along in this respect. We see that our article published two weeks since, showing up his rascalities, has been quite extensively copied and commented upon, and will perhaps have as wide a reading as his letters. We received a letter a few days since from a lawyer in Chicago giving us a few particulars of one of Drummond's swindling operations by which he had pocketed some $9,000, and refuses to make restitution. We stated in our former notice of this worthy that on his way to Utah he was accompanied by a female companion, while he had left his wife and family residing in this place. While Drummond was in California, after he had left Utah, Mrs. Drummond received a letter without signature through the post office dated at Sacramento City, written by the brazen-faced harlot who accompanied Drummond. The following is a literal copy of this letter. The literary attainments of the writer gives some idea of the elevated taste and refinement of the Judge's companion:

"Madam why did you write to my Husband Did you not know of his Marriage before he went to Utah. if you did not I want to let you know it is so. he has told me & Shone me the Divorce. which you Applied for & got. under these circumstances you should not write. to him any sooner then you would write. to any one Els.

"Here is his hand writing perhaps you know it."

Accompanying the above letter was enclosed a portion of a letter which Mrs. Drummond had written from this place to her husband, which conclusively proved the intimacy existing between Drummond and the writer of the letter. And yet this same Drummond has the assurance to write letters deploring the adulterous practices of the Mormons, and is travelling about endeavoring to create a sensation, and make folks believe he is a pattern of morality, when he is nothing but a heartless scoundrel, and deserving of a residence in the Penitentiary. His wife has given up all hopes of his reclamation, and has settled down a poor grief-stricken woman. She has the sympathy of all who know her in this place, while her husband is as heartily despised.

Utah.

WE are pleased at being able to lay before our readers once more some authentic information on the doings of the inhabitants of Utah. We have heard so much lately about the Mormons there: how they were so awfully wicked, burning volumes of law, breaking up courts, saucy to Uncle Sam's representatives, and actively engaged in preparations for turning the world upside down, that it is quite refreshing to learn from themselves how they are moving along. We have received the Deseret News for April and a considerable number of letters. We publish to-day the April Conference minutes, which is ever read with pleasure by the Saints. One new feature at Conference is worthy of particular notice—the appearance on the platform of young men cradled in Mormonism, the sons of honored Sires. Their minds unclouded by the false traditions of Christendom, unacquainted with the sophistry of a deceitful world, they speak and act as youths who fear God and know no other fear—ready at any moment to go, to come—and bid fair to take an active part in carrying off victorious the kingdom of God. Every thing in the Territory seems to indicate good times. The Reformation preaching has done much good. Every man and woman has been brought to the test, and all have had an opportunity of examining their inmost thoughts, and the intents of their hearts. The Saints have rubbed their eyes, shaken the drowsiness from them, and apparently feel ready for any work that will contribute to the upbuilding of Messiah's Kingdom. The chaff and the scum have likewise got a start, and from all accounts, California and the States are likely to receive considerable accessions, and among the crowd some who, possibly, may another day, when they have spent their father's patrimony and fed a while on husks, repent and seek their home again.

We publish elsewhere some items from the News which, at the present time, are of considerable interest. The visit of his Excellency Governor Young, accompanied by some hundreds of good and brave men, to the northern settlements, has been extensively commented on by sapient editors in the States. According to their dictum, his journey through the Indian grounds was with the view of negotiating with the Red Men for assistance, if any emergency should require their arrows and tomahawks; but the recent arrivals from Great Salt Lake City—even the apostates—inform the well informed editors that the Eastern rumors of war had not yet reached that Territory; and the ding dong that has alarmed the nervous about the active preparations in Utah for resistance to Uncle Sam's army was simply a creation of Utah's calumniators. All is peace in the Territory. Instead of the militia doing more duty by way of preparation for hostilities, the News publishes excellent measures from the pen of the Lieut. General, Daniel H. Wells, for a more simple organization than what has heretofore existed, in which less parade and fugling will be required. In this connection it may not be amiss for our European emigrants to learn that in Utah every able-bodied man above 18 years of age and under 45 does military duty as the Constitution requires—pretty much as is required in the northern States of Europe. We frequently see an old musket and other fire arms lying along with baggage; but it seems a pity, unless it be an heir-loom, for our brethren to be at the trouble and expense of bringing from afar anything that is not positively the best of its kind. When those who have means arrive in the States, and wish such things, they should take the best; and according to Beecher, and our opinion, Sharpe's rifles are useful instruments, and decidedly well worth the carriage. Many of our boys prize highly Colt's pistols, and are generally carried by emigrants for protection in crossing the plains. We anticipate a day when some of our clever mechanics in the States and in the different nations will be gathered home to Zion, and, instead of spending their genius and strength in making weapons of destruction, they will be called upon to beat swords into plowshares, spears into pruning-hooks, and learn the art of war no more; but if we are to believe our New York cotemporaries and rumors from Washington, such peaceful occupations need not be anticipated in 1857.

The Returning Officials.

THE N. Y. Tribune of Wednesday publishes the cut up portion of the Oquawka Plaindealer's article on Judge Drummond, which we published last week, and adds the following:

"Whatever may have been the case with Judge Drummond in particular, there cannot be a doubt that almost all the officials appointed by Pierce for the Territory of Utah were persons of very questionable character. It is from them that the greater part of the recent attacks upon the Mormons, in the shape of letters from Salt Lake City and otherwise, have emanated—a kind of evidence, it must be confessed, not to be received without a good deal of scrutiny. The last accounts from Salt Lake City, are, that the United States Marshal and the Surveyor-General had followed the example of Judge Drummond, thus leaving the Territory almost bare of Federal officials. It is said they have been driven away, but that is a point upon which we should prefer to hear both sides. We have, as our readers are aware, no very high opinion of Brigham Young and his Mormons, nor have we either a very high opinion of President Pierce's Border Ruffian officials."

We are satisfied with this acknowledgement so far as it goes; but we would ask the editor of the Tribune if he considers that enough for all the slander that has been given to the public by his paper? Why does he not publish our refutation of their slanders? We ask fair play, but no favors from any quarter. When the Tribune gives both sides it will be time enough to talk about fairness.

A Filthy Slanderer.

IN addition to the article which we publish elsewhere from the columns of the N. Y. Tribune of Wednesday, our attention has been called to a rabid attack upon the late Mrs. McLean and Mormonism, on the same page of that paper. We have seldom read an article which created within us more disgust for its author. By whatever name he may be known, his pen shows him to be a spiteful viper, who, if he merits anything, merits richly to be kicked from Maine to Texas and from there to Timbuctoo, where he might learn good manners and rise in the scale of being. He is a calumniator, a liar and an ass, and those conclusions every rational person will be forced to, on reading the letter of this unfortunate lady and his abusive attack.

As evidences of his stupidity, impudence and other characteristics of a low, ill-bred scoundrel, whose own beastly passions lead him to judge others to be of the same stripe as himself, two statements from his article will suffice. He says:

"She taught their young lips to utter blasphemous nonsense, which she called prayer."

Had the mother written what she taught her children to pray, he might have considered it "blasphemous nonsense;" but as she has not done so, how can he judge and condemn that of which he knew nothing? None but an impudent, low scoundrel would thrust himself before the public to attack a lady, of whose sincerity none can doubt—whatever their conclusions may be of the faith she has espoused. The writer is what we said he is, or he is the murderer of Mr. Pratt or some of the black gang of his associates who have got access editorially to the columns of the Tribune, to justify the murderous deed by their slander and misrepresentation.

He calls Joseph Smith "a blackguard, without intelligence," and his supporters men of the same class, whose "sermons are incoherent farragoes of slang, smut and nonsense," a people converted and held together by the institution of Polygamy for the gratification of their "unhallowed lust."

Joseph Smith's life is before the world, and they can best judge of him who knew him, and those who knew him best loved him best, and would have given their lives to his assassins to have saved his. Mormon sermons may be far from the standard of orthodox perfection; they are, however, not meant to tickle the ears of the people; but the writer's charge that polygamy was the stimulus to conversion and the enchantment that keeps Mormonism from dissolution reveals the corruption of his own filthy heart. Polygamy would doubtless have charms for him, if it were the institution his depraved heart and brain would make it; but his judgment of others only exhibits his penchant to the world.

We tell the Tribune that that article is a disgrace to its columns, and we ask for the name of its author that his infamy may not be charged upon another.

President P. P. Pratt

AWARE that the eyes of the whole Church are turned to us for information on the assassination of this honored servant of the Lord, we have refrained from publishing anything on the subject, but that which we could rely on with the utmost confidence. We have waited patiently and are pleased at now being able to lay before our readers the letter of the "late Mrs. McLean." Her letter needs no comment.

There remains still something to be written on this sad tragedy. Who have contributed to the murder? We wish the presiding authorities of the Church in Cincinnati, St. Louis, and on the Frontiers, who have any information on the subject, to have the kindness to forward immediately to this office the names of parties and the part they played in the tragedy. We know there is something to be gathered up and shall be glad to have it immediately.

CLINTON HOUSE, Iowa City,
May 30, 1857.

BRO. APPLEBY—My Dear Sir: I arrived here on Saturday, about noon, in good health, having only rested four hours since I left Philadelphia. Although it rained, I proceeded forthwith to camp, which is about three miles from this place. The camp is beautifully situated on a gentle elevation on a rolling prairie. The white wagon sheets and tents, the order of the camp, and some pretty looking wagons, presented a beautiful and picturesque appearance, whilst the movements of the cattle and mules, the busy hum of industry in the preparations for a move, reminded me forcibly of former days.

With the exception of my son George, who has been affected with a temporary bleeding of the lungs, I found all in the enjoyment of good health—all seemed cheerful and happy.

A company of hand-carts, of upwards of one hundred, left about a week ago, and Bro. Little has all in readiness for the Danish brethren when they arrive; and as I have made arrangements in Philadelphia for their quick transit, I am in hopes it will not be long before they arrive here. Bro. Wm. Young arrived here with a herd of cattle on Thursday last; those for the brethren in the East are expected to-morrow. I was afraid before I arrived here that things had moved too slow; but I find that had they been earlier it would have been an injury, as there is now scarcely grass enough to sustain the cattle; it is thought that the season is quite three or four weeks later than ordinarily. I think the brethren have been very judicious in their movements. Bro. Erastus Snow was here to see the first hand-cart company off, and left about two days before I arrived. I expect to leave here after to-morrow.

The following about that scamp, Judge Drummond, the pet writer for the leading journals, may be interesting to the readers of THE MORMON, as it is from a paper published in the city of his former residence, and where his family resides, and is corroberative of what we have written:

From the Missouri Republican.

JUDGE DRUMMOND OF ILLINOIS.

"This gentleman has been conspicuous for some weeks past as the writer of letters making serious charges against the morality, the decency, and the respect of the Mormons at Utah for the Constitution and laws of the United States. We confess, therefore, we were not prepared to find charges of an equally flagrant and extravagant character preferred against this same individual by the Oquawka Plaindealer, published in the town in which he formerly lived. We hope there may be some mistake in this statement; but if not, all will agree that this Jugde is 'no better than a Mormon.' The Plaindealer says:

'At the time he received his appointment of Chief Justice (he was only Associate Justice, ED. MOR.) he was a resident of this town. He left his wife and family here to go to Utah, and by the time he had reached the Missouri river, according to a correspondent of the New York Tribune, who appears to have been travelling on the same boat, "Judge Drummond was accompanied by his beautiful and accomplished lady." The press in this place well knew his perfidy, but out of regard to the feelings of his family, remained silent. After Drummond's resignation and return to the States, he seemed to evince no desire to visit his family. When it was announced through the press that he was in Chicago, Mrs. Drummond proceeded thither to seek an interview with him; and although she stopped at the same hotel, and remained one night while he was there, he managed to screen himself from her sight, and the next morning stealthily got aboard the train and came to this place, and took two of his children away with him. His wife remained a week in Chicago, seeking, in vain, for her faithless husband, and then returned home, only to have a more bitter pang added to her already broken heart, to find that her children had been spirited away she knew not where.'"

Yet this is that noble Judge! that HONORABLE JUDGE !! that UPRIGHT JUDGE!!! that Judge who is the very soul and essence of probity and honor, upon whose testimony our immaculate editors would send out armies to Utah, murder thousands of innocent persons, and deluge the valley with blood; and which the editors of the New York Times and Tribune would gloat over, as Nero did over burning Rome, and would like to glut their sanguinary appetites in the blood of the Saints. But speak softly, don't say anything, he is a United States officer and wears the ermine, and it will be treason to expose him.

Everything here is business and bustle. I am constantly asked, "Are you going to the land sales?" Although this is a small place, all the hotels are crowded; speculation is rife on every hand, and all anxious to make fortunes in a hurry—can't wait; lots and land and sites, and sites and lots and land. This is at present the terminus of the railroad west—the jumping-off place. The land between here and the Mississippi river—which we rode over on the rail—is excellent; this State, indeed, bids fair to be wealthy.

As ever, yours, &c.,
JOHN TAYLOR.

Correspondence of Prest. Appleby.

WESTPORT, Conn., June 8, 1857.

T. B. H. STENHOUSE—My Dear Sir: You are aware that I left New York on Saturday evening last, at 20 minutes past three o'clock, in the cars for this place, with the expectation of filling an appointment for a meeting the following day (Sabbath,) that had been previously published, at or near a place called North-field, some nine miles north of this place.

On my arrival at Westport I found Brother E. R. Young, (President of the Norwalk and Westport Branch of the Church) with his carriage in waiting for me. After a short ride we arrived at his house, where I tarried until Sabbath afternoon, when he conveyed me to the place of meeting. On my arrival there, I found a small congregation in waiting, the greater portion having previously left, not believing I would be there on account of the rain, which had been falling during the morning.

However, the news of our arrival was soon circulated, and in the course of half an hour or so, a good and attentive congregation of ladies and gentlemen was present, who listened with breathless attention during my discourse, which occupied about one hour and a half; after which Bros. Young, Bonton and Bradley bore their testimony to the truth of the remarks. The congregation appeared confounded, as our doctrine was entirely new to them, never having heard it before to my knowledge. Several had their Bibles with them, and marked the passages of scripture to which I referred them. They said that they had heard and read so much about the Mormons in the public papers that their curiosity was excited, and wished to hear for themselves about this strange people, every where spoken evil against. One gentleman subscribed for THE MORMON, and at the request of the congregation, another meeting was appointed to be holden at the same place, two weeks from that day. They said they wished to hear both sides of the question.

The congregation appeared well satisfied with what they had heard, (my discourse being on the "First principles of the gospel") and I left with good feelings and spirits, believing that my visit there will be conducive of much good; perhaps some honest soul there may yet come out and obey the truth; whether or not they shall not lack of having a fair warning given them.

I enjoyed my visit much, and rejoiced in the God of my salvation, for truly I enjoyed His spirit, and praise be to His holy name for the light and truth from heaven revealed. Elders of Israel, arouse from your lethargy, and left up your voices, and seek for openings to preach, there are hundreds of honest souls yet throughout the States, that have never heard the sound of the Everlasting Gospel, that has been revealed from the Heavens in these days by the administration of holy angels. Clear your skirts of the blood of all men, that you may be counted worthy to stand when the Saviour appeareth. My respects to all in the office. Yours truly,

W. I. APPLEBY.

WEDNESDAY, May 10.

Since writing the foregoing to Elder Stenhouse, we have arrived at home, and are again in our sanctum, attending to the duties devolving upon us. In looking over our exchanges, and others, we see that almost every paper we take up contains more or less in "their columns" in relation to Utah, Gov. Young, and the Mormons. Some of the articles contain a small portion of truth, but the greater portion are mean, contemptible, silly, falsehoods, made out of "whole cloth," with such men as Judge Drummond, William Smith, Ferris & Co., for their authors.

In relation to the two former "gentlemen" we are pretty well posted, and we would advise them to keep still, or else we shall adhere to the scripture injunction, "Answer a fool according to his folly. For the present, we turn the former over to the charge of the Oquawka Plaindealer, Illinois, and the second where we will leave all apostates, in the hands of the Almighty, and under His withering curse. Of the latter gentleman (Mr. Ferris) he has written a book of falsehood and nonsense in relation to the Mormons, and it "won't sell," and he must write some more falsehoods, and have the same paraded before the public, in order that he may advertise his book. Hear him: "In the summer of 1855, at the request of my publishers, I prepared a supplimental chapter for a new edition of my work on the Mormons, and took GREAT PAINS TO INFORM MYSELF," &c. Indeed, the following will exhibit his knowledge and "great pains:" "Already has FERIMORZ LITTLE, one of the Saintly gang, undertaken to impeach the statement of Judge Drummond. But let no one doubt the verity of the Judge's statement. I know he has correctly stated in regard to LITTLE himself, who was Mayor or Marshal of the city while I was there, and about whose antecedents, rich of Mormon odor, I was well informed." Now we have lived at G. S. L. City for seven years—was there while Mr. Ferris was there, and know Mr. Ferimorz Little, and we do know and declare that the foregoing statement of Mr. Ferris is a positive falsehood. Ferimorz Little is not, neither has he ever been, either Mayor or Marshal of Great Salt Lake City or any other city in Utah; this we positively know. Mr. Ferris, you can go to San Francisco and set up your law office, "you will pass."

Many of the would-be respectable journals are publishing such silly tales, emanating from such a source, and exposing their consummate ignorance, like the "Little Villain" of the New York Daily Times. Some few weeks since, a "GENTLEMAN," representing himself to be the editor of that paper, came into our office, and wished to make inquiries concerning our doctrines, &c., and purchased some of our books—wishing, as he said, to be "posted up," as he was green in relation to our principles, &c. The gentleman made a purchase of some books, and since that time nothing but a tirade of abuse and calumny has he ever published in relation to the Mormons; not one single iota has he ever advanced (neither can he) to refute any doctrine or principle believed in by the Mormons, by argument, reason, or common sense. Indeed, his own words are true; he has shown, and keeps showing his verdancy all the while; and so it is with Philosopher Greeley. But the Black Republicans cannot excite to mobs, and murder any more in Bleeding Kansas for political purposes; they now turn to Utah, as the base of their "niggardly" operations, for political cliquery and jugglery, and making Utah and the Mormons the hobby to militate against President Buchanan and the Democratic party.

We tender our thanks to the editor of the New York Herald, because he has independence enough to publish both sides of the question, both for and against us; and we appreciate honor, it is so scarce, or small favors, let them come from whom they may. Indeed, we tender our thanks to all of our defamers; their publications, circulating as they do, are the best advertisements that Mormonism can possibly have. It is the means of hundreds and thousands coming out to hear the Elders preach, and learn of our doctrines, who never would had it been otherwise. Scores are coming to our office to purchase our works. From Michigan, Boston, and even from North Carolina, scores of strangers flock to our meetings; and far and near the cry is, "Come and preach for us, we want to hear what you Mormons have to say." So publish on—quite cheap when we can get all the advertising we wish done gratis.—ED.

Correspondence of Prest. Wilford Woodruff.

G. S. L. CITY, May 1, 1857.

EDITOR MORMON—Dear Sir: The weather for the past month has been very dry, and generally warm. The health of the inhabitants of the city is excellent.

The past conference was very interesting. The teachings of the First Presidency were appropriate and seasonable: 33 missionaries were sent to Europe, 22 to Canada, 13 to the Sandwich Isles, 11 to the States, and 2 to California.

A great many have been called to go on the road between here and the States; some to make settlements, others to engage in the service of the "Express and Carrying Company."

Quite a number have left these vallies, and are returning to the States, and others to California.

Since the arrival of Bros. Ellsworth and McArthur last fall with the hand-cart companies, hand-carts have become popular; insomuch that the Missionaries for Europe, Canada and the States have substituted the hand-carts for the past mode of travel, and are now traveling en route for the States by that method of conveyance. The 23d ult. was the day appointed for their starting, which created an unparalleled excitement in the starting of Missionaries from these vallies. Appropriate addresses were delivered by Elders Hyde, Woodruff, L. Snow, and others. The band and a large concourse of citizens conveyed them on to the bench and witnessed their departure. The Presidency organized them towards the mouth of the Kanyon.

APRIL 24th.—Gov. Young, Hon. H. C. Kimball and Gen. D. H. Wells started before sunrise, and the balance of the company during the day, on their tour to Salmon river and the Northern country.

The Sabbath school children from the various wards organized for a May walk this morning, and promenaded on the bench, and in City Creek Kanyon, gathering flowers and branches with green foliage, under the superintendence of their respective Directors; and about 2 P. M.

met in the 14th Ward, where they formed a line, and with their appropriate banners and devices, walked through the principal streets and passed the Governor's residence; then proceeded to the Tabernacle at 4 o'clock, where their parents were invited, and I delivered them an address. The brass band accompanied them, and with their soul-inspiring music, added pleasure to the interesting spectacle.

Yours truly, W. WOODRUFF.

Mormonism in London.

ELDER J. D. ROSS, in writing from the English metropolis, May 15th, adds the following paragraph on the progress of the work of the Lord there, which will doubtless interest some of our readers:

ELDER T. B. H. STENHOUSE—Dear Bro.: "I am sure you will be glad to learn that the great majority of the London Pastorate has already made the covenant of tithing and been re-baptized, and every week some are embracing the Gospel and being baptized into the church. The circulation of President Pratt's tracts is having a good effect upon the public mind in this part of the Old World. Open air preaching has now commenced; and every officer that has renewed his covenant takes his turn in sounding the Gospel trump on the streets of this great metropolis. I presume that we will have about one hundred and fifty preaching stations in London every Sunday. What, with our preachers and tracts, the two millions and a half that reside in this great city will, in time, have an opportunity afforded them of hearing something of Mormonism. It might be interesting to you to be informed as to who are our traveling Elders in London Conference at present. Your old friend, Elder Wm. Budge, is President; Elders E. L. T. Harrison, Charles W. Penrose, Joseph Silver, Thomas Bullock, James Lavender and Joseph Stanford are traveling Elders; Lavender and Bullock are from the valley—the latter is getting on famously. Bernard Snow is laboring in Brighton with success. The Elders of the London Conference are first class men, and stick by the brethren appointed to preside over them like men of God and true friends. Father John Hyde is laboring diligently in the work, and is grieved at the course his son has taken.

"The brethren all say remember us to Stenhouse and all in the Mormon office. Success attend you in your new appointment; may the wisdom of heaven ever guide your pen and make you mighty in the defence of the much injured Mormons.

"Yours affectionately,

"J. D. Ross."

More About the Murder of Parley Pratt, the Mormon Elder, by McLean.

Statement of Mrs. McLean, the Abducted Woman—She Exonerates the Elder and Testifies Against her Husband—Her Elegy on Her Seducer.

From the Van Buren (Ark.) Intelligencer.

VAN BUREN, May 18, 1857.

MR. EDITOR—Having read the editorial in your paper headed "Tragical," and finding several important points in the account incorrect, I beg to be heard by this community and the world, being yet a living witness for both the living and the dead.

For the sake of the innocent and his brethren—for the sake of aged parents and all my kindred—for the sake of my children and myself, and for the sake of truth, I thank God that I yet live.

In the first place, the article alluded to says, that "Mrs. McLean was induced to embrace the Mormon faith by Mr. Pratt." This is false! for Mr. McLean knows that the first Mormon sermon I heard in California, himself and my brother, J. J. McComb, were present, and they knew it was at least two years before Mr. Pratt made his appearance in San Francisco, and they knew that from the time I heard the first sermon I never spoke except in defence of the Mormons and their faith, and they know that I sought diligently for my husband's consent to be baptized into the church of the Saints, and finally obtained it in writing, and was baptized before P. P. Pratt made his appearance. These are facts which the certificate in McLean's own writing and the daily papers in San Francisco, announcing Mr. Pratt's arrival, can be brought to prove that my baptism and confirmation in the church of the Saints was anterior to the arrival of P. P. Pratt in that State.

I will here state a fact which has never, to my knowledge, been written. I took my children from the school room (with the permission of the teacher,) and in an omnibus repaired to the place where there was water, and in the presence of several witnesses, they were (that is, the two boys) baptized by P. P. Pratt, for the remission of sins, and by the laying on of his hands they were confirmed members of the church "of Latter Day Saints." If any condemn this act, let them also condemn every woman who refuses to go to perdition with her children, just because her husband makes this choice.

Again, your article represents Mrs. McLean as eloping from San Francisco to Utah with Pratt, and after her elopement her parents wrote for the children to be sent to them. This is also false, and my father, J. S. McComb, if yet living, is a witness, with our neighbors in both places, that the children were sent from me in California to him in New Orleans, and that on a ship—

Where there was not one voice or face;
That they had ever heard or seen in other place.

In November, 1851, I embraced the Mormon faith, and in January, 1855, my children were, on account of my faith, sent from San Francisco to New Orleans, and this without my having the slightest intimation of it until they were far upon the sea. In the morning, as was our custom as soon as their father left, (generally about 9 o'clock,) the dear children clapped their hands and said, "Now, Ma, we can have a good time, Pa's gone; we can sing and pray as much as we wish!" And they did pray that morning as I had never known an infant to pray! They kissed me and said, "Good morning, Mother dear," about 10 o'clock, and started for school. At 3 o'clock I looked for their return; I raised the curtain, I opened the door to look if Albert and Annie were coming, but oh! my soul, they never came!

At 4 o'clock their father came to inform me that they were on their way to New Orleans. Said, "I put them on board the Sierra Nevada at ten o'clock this morning, and now they are where you and the cursed Mormons can never see them again!"

That night he locked all the doors, locked me in a room, took all the keys to his room and locked the door. Can any one conceive of that desolation! My cries disturbed him, and about two o'clock he unlocked the door of the room where I was.

In the morning I went from room to room, I ran in the street and called Fitzroy, Albert, Annie. But no child answered.

I heard tiny footsteps under the window, I ran and said, "My children!" But they were not mine. My brother, E. C. McComb, said I should go by the next steamer to my children, but McLean said he would have nothing to do with it.

A merchant in San Francisco told me he would give me twenty dollars, and he would insure that in his neighborhood of merchants I could raise in one hour all the means I would need to go to my children. After this McLean boasted that I was in his power, and he would see whether I could go or not. I told him the propositions that had been made me. He said he would have me in the insane asylum in twenty-four hours. This, however, he never attempted only in words.

Two weeks after the departure of the children he fitted me out and put me on board a steamer for New Orleans, via Nicaragua, giving the officers strict charge concerning me, to lock me up if I began to rave.

Two weeks after the arrival of the children at my father's, I appeared before them.

I remained there three months, oppressed on all sides, being closely guarded, lest I should walk, talk, pray or sleep with my own precious children.

Under these circumstances my health declined, and I felt that I could not long survive so great a conflict of feeling, particularly in that enervating climate.

In this desperate state of feeling I once succeeded in getting my lambs away, and kept them secreted four days, but failed to get them away from the city. My father then pledged himself to change his treatment to me; he said I should have a room and have my children with me, and they should go and come with me, provided I would promise not to take them away from the city without his consent. With this understanding I returned to my father's house. But my health grew worse and worse, and it appeared I could not survive a summer in New Orleans.

I then consulted my father about leaving; told him I wished to go to Salt Lake, and he said if I would not attempt to take the children he would assist me all he could.

In a few days I was on board a steamer (the Mayflower) for St. Louis, and from thence I went on board a small steamer (the Alma) on the Missouri river to Atchison, Kansas Territory, where I found the Mormon emigration.

I engaged to cook for a mess of ten persons to defray my expenses, and thus I journeyed across the plains to Salt Lake City.

I remained just one year, leaving on the anniversary of the day (11th September, 1855) I arrived.

While there I taught a school, in which I taught ten of P. P. Pratt's children, and boarded in his family seven months. The remaining four months I taught Governor Young's family school and boarded in his house.

On the 11th of last September I left in a company of missionaries, consisting of about twenty elders and twelve females. I travelled in a carriage with two elders and one lady, making four of us. I furnished my own provisions, and cooked for the other three, for the privilege of riding.

At St. Louis I borrowed $100 of church funds and proceeded to New Orleans. It was my intention when I left Salt Lake to go to my children, and get them if I could.

That I have done what I could, and all I could, I call heaven and earth to witness.

I got on board the steam cars with my children, at my father's on Saturday, at twelve o'clock, to go on business to New Orleans, a distance of five or six miles.

In front of the St. Charles I hired a carriage for five hours, expecting to leave on a steamer for Galveston, Texas, the next morning at eight o'clock, but, to my great discomfiture, there was no steamer to leave before Thursday. I stayed with my children that night, Sunday and Sunday night, at the United States Hotel, kept by Mrs. Smith.

On Monday morning, not deeming it safe to stay at a public house, I took an omnibus, leaving my children at the hotel. I rode till the omnibus stopped, far down in the Third municipality, inquired in a Dutch grocery for a furnished room, and the old lady pointed across the street. I went, and found a woman with plain sewing in her hand at the door. She was plain looking, so poorly dressed, and apparently so ignorant, that I thought she was not likely to have visitors often. She said her husband worked on a towboat, and would not be at home till Thursday night.

We stayed at this woman's house four days. She gave us her best bed, loaned me her cooking utensils, and gave me wood to cook with, and then helped to carry our little trunk to the omnibus; but she never asked us where we came from nor where we were going, which I think very remarkable for one of her sex.

At 8 o'clock on Thursday morning, 18th of December, 1856, we were on board the Atlantic, bound for Texas. I could not obtain a state room, although I went on Tuesday to the agent; they were all taken. The captain, however, was kind to us, and let us occupy his room, and sent us the best of everything.

At Galveston we took a little steamer, Capt. Pierce, commander, for Harrisburg, where we stayed all night at a hotel kept by Capt. Andrews, and next morning took the cars for Houston. Two miles from Houston we found a home at the house of Mr. Wm. Gambell, who is a man of no religion, lives well, has plenty of servants and no children. His wife was like a mother to us. The first three weeks I made a change of clothing, and then sought for something to do. Found employment in a dress-making establishment, Mrs. Stanbury's, where I worked five weeks, spending two days with my children, Sunday to rest, and Monday to wash and mend. On the 4th of March, I left Houston with Capt. Andrews, Mr. Stanfield and James Gammell (the latter being a Mormon elder) to journey to Ellis county where the Mormon emigration was fitting out for a trip across the plains.

Through a letter from Houston I was apprised that McLean was in pursuit of me; and to avoid trouble, and perhaps bloodshed in the company, I took passage with a man by the name of Clark, who is not a Mormon. He had a wife and three children, a poor wagon and three yoke of good oxen.

With these people I was journeying when McLean and party met us. The scenes that have been in progress from that day to this are before the public. It is well known that I have been arrested upon a false oath and dragged by civil and military officers before an excited populace and the court as a prisoner, only to be coolly told that I might retire, nothing being found against me.

In behalf of the dead I have to testify that whatever relation existed between us was of my own seeking. When he kept house with his wife, Elizabeth, in San Francisco, I often sought his society, and if any censure me let them censure me for the strongest impulses of my nature, which have ever prompted me to seek light and truth, despite the difficulties that might intervene between me and the object of my search.

This man was a fountain of light and intelligence at which thousands might drink, and yet the stream flowed clear, pure and free.

I am willing to acknowledge that I have often sought his door at the dawn of day, when his wife was sick, to take some meat, bread and fruit, upon which they might subsist until the following morning.

Do any blame him for being poor? Let them lay the blame upon him who required his disciples to go with the everlasting gospel to the nations without purse or scrip, or even two coats.

Neither do I deny that I much desired from time to time to have him entertained at our house, even as I gladly entertained my husband's brethren. We had unoccupied rooms and beds and a profusion of the good things of life, while he was poor and a stranger, and as unpopular as a certain Nazarine who once pilgrimized through the land of Judea and could not find a place to lay his head. Upon the same principle that I was deprived this privilege, Mary and Martha would have been punished for bathing the feet of their Lord and running to meet him when he returned from a mission.

I also confess that when a company of Saints were preparing to leave California with P. P. Pratt I greatly desired to be one of the number, and went so far as to ask my Father in Heaven to provide a way by which I might escape my oppression and go with the people of my choice. If this be not right, then there is a mistake in the ancient saying, "Come with me all ye that are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

I also confess that when I got to Salt Lake alone, and knew of no one that I had ever seen but Mr. Pratt and his wife Elizabeth, I sought for their house, and asked if they would let me stay a few days to rest, and look round and see what I could do for a living. They said stay just as long as you please, and it turned out as before stated. I also confess that it was a source of pleasure to me when I heard that he would be in the company in which I had engaged to come.

I do not deny that I washed his feet, combed his hair, and often walked that he might ride. Neither do I deny visiting with him a number of families in St. Louis, who thought it a greater honor to entertain him than they would to entertain any king or potentate living upon the earth.

I also confess that it pained me to see him in chains, and fain would I have bathed his wrist where the cursed iron chafed his skin.

But this was nothing to what I was yet to see. Have I not seen his heart's blood dripping from the wound of the deadly knife?

Six pistol balls could not avail,
To make his holy visage pale.
But the fierce and deadly knife
Pierced his heart and claimed his life.

Oh! Parley dear, we love you well,
Yes, more than mortal tongues can tell,
And we know you'll come again,
With us to live, with Christ to reign.

Oh, God of Israel, let the cry
Of Parley's blood come up on high,
And let his wounds before thee plead,
For wrath on him who did the deed.

I am free to declare, before angels and men, that Parley P. Pratt was innocent of the charges made against him.

If the deeds of men were registered on their faces, it would be known and read of all men that H. H. McLean drove me from him, and that he by his own acts blighted and consigned to eternal death all the delicate ties that existed between us, and that before Mormonism crossed our pathway.

That I would fain have been separated from him while yet living in New Orleans, I will name as living witnesses my father, J. S. McComb, and my brothers, E. C. and J. J. McComb, and Mr. John McDougal. These all know that I sought their counsel while living in New Orleans, to know whether I must continue to endure the degrading influence of a man who would continue to sip at the wine cup, and thereby unfit him for the society of his family.

That my statements are correct in reference to our separation in California, I will name as witnesses, Captain Thomas Grey and family, Mr. Samuel Webb and family, and my neighbors and friends in general in the city of San Francisco.

That Mr. McLean put me by violence into the street at night and locked the door against me, Captain Gray and Dr. Bush are witnesses; and I presume Mr. McLean himself would not deny that I then declared that I would no more be his wife, however many years I might be compelled to appear as such for the sake of my children.

I presume that Mr. McLean would lay it as a complaint against me that I never afterwards came to his bed.

I would appeal to every man and woman of refined sensibility to know whether a virtuous woman and faithful mother is so humble a thing that she should come again to the bosom of a man who had by violence thrust her from him and exposed her to insult and injury in the streets of a wicked city. Whoever takes the affirmative differs from the writer of this,

E. J. McCOMB, once E. J. McLEAN.

THE UTAH GOVERNORSHIP.

WASHINGTON, June 3.

Col. Cumming, who conditionally accepted the Governorship of Utah, arrived here this morning from St. Louis, and had a conference with the President. Col. Cumming has been Superintendent of Indian Affairs of Missouri, has long led a frontier life, and is a man of great energy and coolness. He was formerly connected with the army in Mexico.

Major McCulloch gives it as his opinion that there will be no fighting in Utah, but that it will be impossible to extirpate the Mormons.—N. Y. Daily Times.

Major McCulloch had a conference with the President to-day—but it was understood to be merely in reference to the best mode of proceedure in the affairs of Utah.—From an Occasional Correspondent.

A NEW GOVERNOR FOUND FOR UTAH—THE COURSE TO BE PURSUED TOWARDS THE SAINTS.

June 4.

The President has at last fixed upon a Governor for Utah, and one who has indicated his readiness to accept. His name I am not permitted to make known until to-morrow. A number of gentlemen have lately applied for the place. The policy to be pursued is for the Governor, after reaching Utah, to issue a proclamation that such persons residing in the Territory, male or female, as desire to return to the States, shall receive protection and necessary assistance from the Government. This will cause a stampede among the women, and at once blow the Mormon church to atoms or bring the Saints to terms.—N. Y. Herald.

June 4.

Colonel Cumming has not yet arrived here, nor had he been heard from yesterday, but the President thinks there is no doubt that he will accept the Governorship of Utah.—N. Y. Daily Times.

June 5.

The ex-member of Congress to whom the Governorship of Utah has been tendered is expected here to-morrow, and until he arrives and declares his acceptance the President desires no publication of his name. The application of Col. Cumming is not even under consideration, although the Governorship was at one time tendered him and declined. He is now willing to accept it; but it is too late.

Major Harris has returned to Covington, Ky., from Washington, having refused the Governorship of Utah.—[Same Day.

Col. Cumming, although resigning the Governorship of Utah when in Missouri, would probably have accepted it on arrival here, had not the President meantime selected another whose name will be officially concealed until it shall be known whether he will accept the appointment. This ascertained affirmatively, two new judges to Utah, and a marshal and superintendent of Indian affairs, will be appointed.

There is a report, which is currently believed, that ex-Governor Philip Frank Thomas, of Maryland, has been tendered the Governorship of Utah, and will accept.

[General Newspaper Despatch.

TROOPS FOR UTAH.

June 6.

Col. Charles Thomas, Assistant Quartermaster General, will, by direction of the Secretary of War, proceed to Fort Leavenworth to superintend the removal of the United States troops to the government reserve, within forty miles of Utah, where there is good pasturage. The Quartermaster's Department has been assidiously engaged on the subject for a week past.

June 6.

Col. Cumming, late of Utah, was offered the office of Governor of that Territory, three weeks ago, and promptly declined it. Meanwhile, it was offered to another person. Indeed, two or three persons have been consulted as to their willingness to accept the hazardous and thankless position. The pay is small—twenty-five hundred dollars a year—ridiculously small. But it has been suggested that the President will consider that the importance of the service, at the present crisis, will justify him in employing the contingent fund.

I do not think, from what I learn, that the President has yet pitched upon a proper man for the office of Governor of Utah, and it is to be hoped that all will decline, till he lights upon a suitable man. To find one he must go outside of the time-serving office-holders and seekers.—Cor. of the Daily Times.

THE UTAH GOVERNORSHIP.

June 7.

Hon. P. F. Thomas, of Maryland, to whom the Governorship of Utah has been tendered, did not arrive here yesterday as expected, although sent for; so the matter still hangs fire; and should Gov. Thomas not accept before Tuesday, Col. Cummings will receive the appointment. Mr. Buchanan now doubts if Mr. T. will accept, though his friends pledged him to do so before the appointment was tendered.

[New York Herald.

THE DIFFICULTY OF FINDING A GOVERNORSHIP FOR UTAH—CAUSE OF THE MORMON TROUBLES.

June 7.

The Governorship of Utah is still in doubt. It is believed that ex-Gov. Philip Frank Thomas, of Maryland, will be commissioned, but the President has not yet acted upon it. There seems to be great difficulty in the obtaining of a proper man to meet the exigencies of the case. The matter could be settled at once by investing General Harney with civil powers to act, and then, if persuasion did not answer, he could be as uncivil as he pleased. There is hardly a doubt but that a rupture must take place before "law and order" can be restored in Utah. As soon as the military forces shall arrive, it will be hard to keep the soldiers from creating jealousies with the Mormons, and the first good cause which the Mormons shall give in retaliation must lead to open hostilities.—[Special Despatch of the New York Daily Times.

APPOINTMENT OF A GOVERNOR FOR UTAH.

June 9.

Col. Cumming to-day received the appointment of Governor of Utah. The other appointments for the Territory have not been agreed on. Ex-Governor Thomas did not report for duty, as his friends had pledged he would.—Cor. of N. Y. Herald.

THE APPOINTMENTS FOR UTAH.

June 9.

The affairs of Utah occupied the attention of the Cabinet to-day. The appointments to the offices there were not completed. Several gentlemen to whom they have been tendered are to be heard from. The probability is that the appointments will be announced in the course of the week, and all the arrangements perfected. The administration, though anxious for speedy action, has been restrained by circumstances beyond its control.

The statement of Mr. Burr, Surveyor General of Utah, was that "one" thousand, and not "ten," as misprinted in the New York papers, would be sufficient to effectually overawe the Mormons.—General Newspaper Despatch.

June 10.

It is believed that Col. Cumming has agreed to undertake the Governorship of Utah. The difficulties in the way of procuring forage and stores in the Territory are so great that it is doubtful if the troops will winter there. If no serious difficulties occur, the mass of them will move onward to the Pacific before cold weather. At present no war is anticipated.—N. Y. Tribune.

June 10.

There are eight or ten applicants for Utah Judgeships.

No Governor nor other officers have yet been appointed for Utah.—Associated Press.

Judge Drummond of Utah.

THIS individual has recently brought himself quite conspicuously before the public by his letter resigning his office of Chief Justice in Utah Territory, and also by a letter written to the widow of Capt. Gunnison, whom he represents as having been murdered through Mormon influence. In these letters he lets off a good amount of virtuous indignation over the depraved and vicious course of the Mormons, and would leave the public to believe that his moral sensibilities have been greatly shocked by their polygamous and adulterous practices. But Judge Drummond himself is no better than a Mormon; and if his private history were written it would unfold a career of as cruel and inhuman treatment to a family, as could be found in the annals of infamous bandsmen. At the time he received his appointment of Chief Justice, he was a resident of this town. He left his wife and family here to go to Utah, and by the time he had reached the Missouri River, according to a correspondent in the N. Y. Tribune who appears to have been traveling on the same boat, "Judge Drummond was accompanied by his beautiful and accomplished lady." The press in this place well knew his perfidy, but out of regard to the feelings of his family remained silent. After Drummond's resignation, and return to the States he seemed to evince no desire to visit his family. When it was announced through the press that he was in Chicago, Mrs. Drummond proceeded thither to seek an interview with him; and although she stopped at the same hotel, and remained one night while he was there, he managed to screen himself from her sight, and the next morning stealthily got aboard of the train and came to this place, and took two of his children away with him. His wife remained a week in Chicago seeking in vain for her faithless husband, and then returned home only to have a more bitter pang added to her already broken heart to find that her children had been spirited away, she knew not where.

We see by our last advices that the Judge is announced at Washington, where, we have no doubt, he is figuring for some appointment. We commend him to the especial attention of those Democratic journals which were recently so zealous in their denunciation of the short-comings of a Boston clegyman.—Oquawka Plaindealer.

Toms River Branch, N. J.

ELDER THEODORE MCKEAN, who has presided over this Branch of the Church for some length of time, left with his family recently for the West. Elder Wm. C. Reamer has been appointed his successor in the presidency there. Elder McKean, we believe, faithfully discharged his duty to the Saints and the world, and leaves with the confidence and blessing of the authorities of the Church. We have confidence in Captain Reamer, and believe he will do well, and ask for him the best confidence of the Saints over whom he is placed to preside.

☞ We had placed copy enough in the hands of the printer this week to have made an extra sheet, and have therefore been compelled to make choice and lay aside much interesting correspondence, and likewise to confine ourself editorially to less space than we had intended, for the sake of publishing what we deem particularly of present interest. Extracts from the Deseret News have also been set aside till next week.

Notice to Subscribers.

WE frequently receive remittances for subscriptions to THE MORMON, without the sender giving the name of the place he desires the paper to be sent to. Sometimes the name of the Post Office or town is mentioned, but not the county, and as there are several towns in some States by the same name, unless the county is designated we are at a loss to know where to direct the papers ordered. We wish all communications to us to name distinctly the Post Office or town, county, and State or Territory, as then there will be no mistake.

Notice.

THE Saints who desire to send means to their friends in Europe, can have the same attended to, by forwarding any sum they wish in current money, to this office, enclosing one dollar or more, in proportion to the amount sent, to defray the expenses of procuring Bills of Exchange, making remittances, foreign postage, &c., describing particularly to whom, and where they wish to have it sent; at the same time not holding myself responsible in any manner whatever unless the money reach me.

All subscriptions, donations, &c., for the support of THE MORMON, or Conference Fund (except the donations and Conference Funds raised in the Philadelphia Conference, which will be forwarded as usual through President Cannon) must be sent hereafter to my address; as also Tithing; P. E. Fund, and donations for the Temple from those who wish to contribute the same, so each person may be duly credited, and the means forwarded to Zion, and have their names entered in "The Book of the Law of the Lord."

No Power of Attorney, or other legal instrument of writing, going to Europe or elsewhere, forwarded to us for the purpose of sending to Washington in order to obtain the attestation of the Department, and the British Consul's Certificate and seal to the same, will be attended to in future, unless the means to defray the expenses and foreign postage accompanies the Instrument, as there is considerable expense attending it as well as labor. We would like to oblige all, and are willing to give our services when we have opportunity; but we cannot advance means to defray such expenses.

All communications intended for THE MORMON should be addressed—Editor of THE MORMON, New York. Otherwise direct to my address, Box No. 3957, New York Post Office. W. I. APPLEBY.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Évangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systémes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

JOHN TAYLOR.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

Every arrangement for the conveyance of travellers has been made by the undersigned, Stage Proprietor, on the route between St. Joseph and Bluff City.

A line of stages leave both of the above places three times per week, passing through Savannah, Oregon, Linden, Tabor, St. Mary's, Glenwood, and all the intermediate post towns.

The route is furnished with new coaches, experienced and careful drivers, and attentive agents at the several stopping places; and he hopes by strict attention to business to secure a liberal share of public patronage. F. S. Frost.

We have tried the above route and find it good.—Ed. fe17 tf

Poetry.

The Saint's Prayer.

BY W. CLEGG.

How long O Lord shall Ephriam mourn,
And Jacob's sons grow pale?
How long the proud oppressor rule,
And virtue's heroes fail?
Shall Truth's brave martyrs bleed in vain?
Thy poor for ever bend?
Wilt thou not plead their righteous cause,
And prove their faithful friend?

Shall Joseph fall a sacrifice,
And Hyrum bleed in vain?
Shall mobs rejoice, and still be bold,
And gentile tyrants reign?
Ah no! thy Saints can trust thy care,
And wait thy sovereign will;
In every age thy people found
Thee true—they trust thee still.

They thank thee for a Prophet's voice,
And know thy power to save:
To guide through evil's dark array,
To victory o'er the grave;
They know ere long thy martyr'd host
Will in full triumphs rise,
And conquering Death and Hell shall meet
Their captain in the skies.

O may I greet that holy band,
And in their triumphs share,
And with them through Eternities
Thy power and love declare;
O Lord thy Spirit ever give
That I may never faint,
That through all scenes of Life or Death,
I still may be a Saint.

Minutes of the General Conference

Of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, Convened in the Bowery Adjoining the North End of the Tabernacle, Great Salt Lake City, and Commencing Monday, April 6, 1857, at 10 o'clock, A. M.

PREST. BRIGHAM YOUNG presiding.

On the stand: Prests. Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball and Daniel H. Wells;

Of the Twelve Apostles: Orson Hyde, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow and Franklin D. Richards;

Seventies: Joseph Young, Henry Herriman, Zera Pulsipher, Albert P. Rockwood, Benjamin L. Clapp and Levi W. Hancock;

High Priests: John Young, President;

Presiding Bishop: Edward Hunter;

Patriarchs: John Smith, John Young, Isaac Morley;

Presidency of the Stake: Daniel Spencer, David Fullmer and Thomas Rhoads;

Clerk of Conference: Leo Hawkins:

Reporters: Geo. D. Watt and John V. Long.

Called to order by Prest. Brigham Young.

The Clerk read the following hymn, which was sung by the choir:

A HYMN OF THANKFULNESS.

BY W. G. MILLS.

Mighty God of Zion, hear us,
Fervently our prayers we raise;
Shades of sin and death were near us.
And we walked in folly's ways;
But to spare us
Thou again hast shown us grace.

Day and night thy prophets seeking
Our eternal interest,
By Thy Holy Spirit speaking
Our degraded state express'd;
And awaking
We ourselves and sins detest.

Now we thank Thee, precious pardon
To the sinner Thou dost give;
And the heart that will not harden
In his sins, may turn and live;
Gracious Guardian,
Our deep gratitude receive.

Help us by Thy Holy Spirit
All our cov'nants to fulfill;
We will live and seek to merit
All the blessings of Thy will,
And inherit
Bliss with Thee on Zion's hill.

Prayer by Prest. Heber C. Kimball.

Singing by the choir.

Prest. B. Young mentioned the various items that would probably engage the attention of the Conference.

The Trustee in Trust's report and the report of the Treasurer of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company were read.

Choir sung, "How beautiful upon the mountains."

Benediction by Patriarch Isaac Morley.

2 P. M.

The following hymn was read by the Clerk and sung by the choir:

A HYMN FOR APRIL 6, 1857.

BY W. G. MILLS.

Swell the strain like heaven's thunder,
Swift as lightning let it dart;
Let it burst the clouds asunder
Till it reaches every heart,
That the "last hour" dispensation
This eventful day began;
That the door of full salvation
Now is opened unto man!

Lo, the standard of salvation
On the mountain tops is seen,
Where the good from every nation
Round our Prophets may convene;
Truth is pouring from the fountains
Of the Great Eternal source;
Like the streams from yonder mountains
Fertilizing in their course.

See the form of mercy bending
Like an angel from the skies!
See her lovely arms extending
That mankind may upward rise!
Hark! her voice the world inviting,
To the hill of Zion come:
Here are truths the soul delighting
In our happy mountain home.

While mankind in ranc'rous humor
All the ills of war increase,
And your hearts fail with the rumor,
Here you may abide in peace;
All the sons of men who labor
To exalt the human race;
He who will not slay his neighbor,
Must seek Zion's dwelling place.

Through the earth the message bearing
Zion's chosen priesthood roam,
And the sons of Israel hearing
Will in millions gather home;
That the laws of "Judah's Lion"
We may perfectly obey;
He shall reign supreme in Zion,
We on earth beneath his sway.

Prayer by Prest. Orson Hyde.

Singing by the choir.

Prest. D. H. Wells wished those indebted to the Trustee of the P. E. Fund, to liquidate that indebtedness; said we shall probably have to call for further assistance to complete the canal that the stone may be boated to the Temple. Expressed his feelings in relation to the work of God.

Prest. H. C. Kimball addressed the congregation upon the importance of building the Temple, the blessings to be derived therefrom, &c.; and advised the brethren to build store-houses, to store up grain against the famines that are decreed.

Prest. B. Young spoke on the principles of economy.

Missionaries' names were read.

Choir sung "Blessed be the Lord."

Adjourned till to-morrow at 9 A. M.

Benediction by Lorenzo Snow.

BOWERY, Tuesday Morning, April 7, 1857, 9 A. M.

Choir sung, "Bring forth the royal diadem."

Prayer by Patriarch John Young.

Singing by the choir.

Elder Joseph L. Heywood related some of the incidents of his experience in California, the East, &c.

Prest. B. Young presented the authorities of the Church as follows:

Brigham Young, President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Prophet, Seer and Revelator; Heber C. Kimball, First Counselor, Prophet, Seer and Revelator; Danl. H. Wells, Second Counselor, Prophet, Seer and Revelator;

Orson Hyde, President of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and Parley P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, George A. Smith, Amasa Lyman, Ezra T. Benson, Charles C. Rich, Lorenzo Snow, Erastus Snow, and Franklin D. Richards, members of said Quorum;

John Smith, (eldest son of Hyrum,) Presiding Patriarch;

John Young, President of the High Priests' Quorum;

Joseph Young, Henry Herriman, Zera Pulsipher, Albert P. Rockwood, Benjamin L. Clapp, Horace S. Eldredge and Levi W. Hancock, Presiding Presidents over all the Seventies;

John Nebeker, President of the Elders' Quorum;

Daniel Spencer, President of this Stake of Zion;

Heman Hyde, Eleazer Miller, Phineas Richards, Levi Jackman, Ira Eldredge, John Vance, Edwin D. Woolley, John Parry, Winslow Farr, William Snow, Daniel Carn, and Ira Ames, Members of the High Council; Edward Hunter, Presiding Bishop of the whole Church.

Lewis Wight, President of the Priests' Quorum;

McGee Harris, President of the Teachers' Quorum;

Alexander Herron, President of the Deacons' Quorum;

Brigham Young, Trustee in Trust for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints;

Daniel H. Wells, Superintendent of Public Works;

Truman O. Angel, Architect for the Church;

Brigham Young, President of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund to gather the poor; H. C. Kimball, D. H. Wells and Edward Hunter, his assistants and agents for said fund;

George A. Smith, Historian and General Church Recorder; W. Woodruff, his assistant;

Who were unanimously sustained.

Prest. B. Young referred to the civilization of the world, contrasting it with the condition of the Latter Day Saints.

Prest. D. H. Wells spoke of the design of the Express and Carrying Company, being more particularly to facilitate immigration by establishing temporary settlements, &c.

Prest. H. C. Kimball followed on the same subject.

Names of persons selected to go on missions were read.

Choir sung, "Awake, put on thy strength, O Zion."

Benediction by Prest. Joseph Young.

2 P. M.

Singing by the choir.

Prayer by Elder W. Woodruff.

Singing by the choir.

Prest. B. Young spoke of the Express and Carrying Company.

Congregation sung, "Now let us rejoice in the day of salvation."

Prest. Orson Hyde spoke of the folly of persons neglecting to improve their possessions.

Prest. Young made a few remarks.

A number of names of those selected to assist in the Express and Carrying Company were read.

Choir sung, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Adjourned till to-morrow at 9 A. M.

Benediction by Daniel Spencer.

WEDNESDAY, April 8, 9 A. M.

Singing by the Choir.

Prayer by Elder Benj. L. Clapp.

Singing by the Choir.

Prest. Orson Hyde spoke a short time.

Prest. B. Young adduced as an evidence of the truth of the work, the thankfulness with which Elders received chastisement.

Elder F. D. Richards alluded to the course he had pursued in relation to last year's immigration.

Elder W. Woodruff spoke on the right of the leader of this people to dictate in all things.

Elder Benj. L. Clapp and Prest. Daniel Spencer made a few remarks.

Prest. B. Young spoke of the benefit of chastisement, when rightly received and appreciated.

Bro. Samuel Barson sung, "Oh, Zion, dear Zion."

Bro. J. D. T. McAllister sung, "What I live for."

Prest. John Young referred to the saying of Jesus, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light;" testified that Joseph was the greatest prophet that ever lived, except the Son of God.

Elder Lorenzo Snow proved that the principle of union and submission to the will of God through our leaders, will give us all the power that is necessary for us to have.

Prest. H. C. Kimball spoke on the principle of union; notified the missionaries to be here on the 22d inst., with their handcarts, provisions and means ready for going directly to their fields of labor.

Stephen Markham was called to make a station on the Sweetwater. More missionaries names were read.

Choir sung, "Praise the Lord all ye nations."

Benediction by Prest. D. H. Wells.

2 P. M.

Singing by the choir.

Prayer by Reynolds Cahoon.

Singing by the choir.

Elder Joseph A. Young spoke on the principle of obedience.

Elder William H. Kimball exhorted those about to go on missions to rely solely upon the arm of God.

Prest. B. Young spoke concerning the evils we see in one another, &c., and in regard to persons leaving this Territory.

Prest. Joseph Young spoke of the importance of building the Temple, forwarding the Express and Carrying Company, &c.

Prest. Orson Hyde considered that those appointed for the various posts on the route were local preachers of the gospel.

Prest. B. Young wished the Saints to listen to the whisperings of the Spirit of God and be guided by them.

Prest. H. C. Kimball suggested the propriety of the Saints, when they come to Conference, bringing their offerings into the Store House of the Lord.

Prest. B. Young said, we want 100 more stone-cutters, and wished the Bishops to attend to it. Spoke for a short time on tithing. The names of more missionaries were read.

Choir sung "Come let us anew, our journey pursue."

Adjourned till to-morrow at 9 A. M.

Benediction by Bishop E. D. Woolley.

THURSDAY, April 8, 9 A. M.

Singing by the choir.

Prayer by Elder David Fullmer.

Singing by the choir.

Prest. B. Young said, we now submit the Conference into the hands of the Twelve, for them to dictate it.

Elder Lorenzo D. Young spoke of the goodness of God to His people.

Elder Parley P. Pratt, Jr., bore testimony to the truth of the work of God; expressed his implicit confidence in it and his determination to press onward.

Elder W. Woodruff spoke upon the principle of obedience and confidence in the authorities of the Church.

Elder Seymour B. Young testified to the truth of "Mormonism."

Elder Heber John Richards expressed his willingness to do whatever is required of him.

Prest. B. Young spoke encouragingly to the boys, and predicted their future greatness in the kingdom of God.

Elder John Y. Greene made a few remarks.

Elder Lorenzo Snow spoke upon the principle of consecration.

Elder Brigham Young, Jr., expressed himself ready for any duty required of him.

Elder Stephen Taylor bore testimony that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God.

Patriarch John Young prophesied that if the missionaries live their religion the spirit of their missions will rest upon them. Blessed them in the name of the Lord, and exhorted them and the High Priests to keep the gathering spirit.

Prest. B. Young proved that those boys who had just spoken were naturally "Mormons," not having had the errors of the world to shroud the light of truth in their minds.

Prest. O. Hyde exhorted parents to watch over their children, not only as their own but as the children of the kingdom of God. Elder Orson Pratt, Jr., adduced evidences in favor of the truth of this work.

Elder George Chase made a few remarks.

Elder Joseph W. Young spoke of the joy and happiness he had experienced while preaching the gospel.

Elder Geo. D. Grant spoke of rough and ready "Mormonism."

Judge Phelps preached several sermons in a few minutes, and told an anecdote.

More missionaries' names were read.

Prest. H. C. Kimball said, it is notioned that this Conference adjourn to the 6th day of October at 10 A. M., in this place.

Choir sung, "Oh my father, thou that dwellest."

Prest. B. Young said: I say to the people that all that has been propiesied by the Lord's servants during this Conference is verily true and shall come to pass, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ: Amen.

Benediction by Prest. Brigham Young.

LEO HAWKINS, Clerk of Conference.

General News from Utah.

From the Deseret News, April 22.

EXCURSION NORTH.

PURSUANT to previous arrangements, Gov. Young, accompanied by Presidents Kimball and Wells, and many others from this city and the settlements South, who availed themselves of the invitation to participate in the pleasure of a tour through the northern counties, and thence to the settlement, on Salmon river, in Oregon Territory, left the city on Friday last, expecting to be gone some four or five weeks.

The arduous duties that continually devolve upon him while at home, and, upon those associated with him in the management of the affairs of the church and of the Territory, induced him to seek a short release from the cares of business to refresh and invigorate his body; and knowing that the object desired could not be attained otherwise than to absent himself for a season from the scene of his labors, he resolved on making this tour, and invited those of the citizens that could leave their business without inconvenience, and would like a little pastime of this sort, to share with him in its enjoyment. How many went from the city we do not know, but some thirty or forty carriages, and many on horseback, all well provided with the necessary means of subsistence and defence, left in the course of the forenoon, and no doubt the company will be greatly increased from the cities and settlements north.

A respectable corps of scientific gentlemen have gone with the company, with the necessary instruments for taking observations in the mountains and other places through which they expect to pass, but if they acquire much knowledge of that kind, they will have to be very expert if they keep up with the company, unless His Excellency should travel with less speed than usual. We shall probably hear from the company before leaving the most northern settlements, after which nothing further may be expected until their return.

DEPARTURE OF THE MISSIONARIES.

Early on Thursday, April 23d, those that had been selected at the Conference for missions, that were to cross the plains on the way to their various fields of labor in the States, in the British North American Provinces, in Europe, Africa, and other parts of the world, commenced assembling on the Temple Block, preparatory to starting off together, according to previous arrangement, with their hand carts, the means of conveyance adopted, instead of horses, mules and carriages, as heretofore. Most of the carts well fitted up for the trip, with names and mottoes beautifully painted on some of them, to suit the taste and fancy of the owner, and which will no doubt greatly add to the pleasure that will be derived from rolling them up and down the mountains, and across the plains that intervene between this and the frontiers of Iowa and Missouri.

After assembling, they were briefly addressed by President O. Hyde, and by others of the Twelve, who exhorted them to faithfulness and dilligence, not only while crossing the plains, but in preaching the gospel to the people and nations to whom they were sent, that they might reap a rich reward, and return rejoicing when their several missions were ended, and that they might enjoy the blessings of peace and the consolations of the Holy Spirit continually.

All things being ready, at a quarter before 10 A. M., the company started off in regular order, with as much apparent cheerfulness and unconcern as though they were going to return in the evening, whereas many of them will be gone for years, and all will probably have to pass through trials, and endure hardships, of which the pulling of their hand carts across the plains will be among the least.

The company consisted of seventy-four men, with some twenty-five hand-carts, and was made up of individuals of nearly every imaginable occupation and pursuit of life. Farmers, mechanics, tradesmen, merchants and clerks—some Americans, some English, Scotch, Irish, Welsh, Danes, Swedes, Norwegians, Germans, and of other nations were to be seen in the company, which made it an unusually interesting sight. To see such a variety of men, some of them young, some in the prime, and some in the meridian of life, leave their avocations at a moment's notice and go forth in that way to proclaim the gospel of salvation to the nations that have long been wandering in darkness, bespeaks a devotion to the principles of eternal truth not often seen, and would open the eyes of the religious world to their true condition, if they were not so sound asleep that they cannot be awoke from their slumbers. It would cost any missionary society, either in the United States or in England, several hundred thousand dollars to send out as many missionaries as went in this company, and they are only a tithing of those that have gone and will be sent this year from Utah; and where could a man be found, excepting among the Latter Day Saints, that could, without purse or scrip, be induced to take his blankets and provisions on a hand-cart and haul it a thousand miles under like circumstances, before he could avail himself of any other means of conveyance? If any one knows let him speak out.

The company will probably make the trip to the Missouri river in about 40 days, where they will separate, and each pursue the remainder of his journey to the place of destination, as will best suit his convenience, with as little delay as circumstances will permit.

GENERAL ITEMS.

During the last eight or ten days the streets of the city have teemed with life and activity to an unusual extent. The military parade and election on the 20th; the arrival and departure of the men and teams belonging to the "Express and Carrying Company," that were on their way out, to make stations between Forts Bridger and Laramie, during Tuesday, the 21st, and the two following days; the departure of the missionaries and of Governor Young and his party, in addition to the common business movements and transactions of the citizens, made things appear lively and interesting to every beholder, showing conclusively that the Mormon car was still going ahead, and that the backing out of a few faint hearted, irresolute and corrupt persons had not impeded its progress in the least. The only different is, the car runs a little faster after being divested of some of the useless rubbish that was aboard, and its speed will be still further increased after a few more passengers quietly step off.

All is now peace and quietness, and no great stir is anticipated till the arrival and departure of the mails create the usual excitement among the people. The California mail is expected on or before the first day of May, and the Eastern between the first and tenth, the arrival of which will set nearly every one in motion, expecting to hear some interesting news from the States, or from some other part of the world; the presumption is, however, that nine out of ten will be disappointed.

The Eastern mail will leave punctually on the second, and the California on the fifth of May, and thereafter it is confidently believed that their arrival in contract time may be depended upon. If the expectations of the public are realized, there will certainly be a great change in postal facilities, which has long been looked for, and much needed in this Territory.

The weather continues cool and dry, and the amount of water that has fallen of late has been so little that with all the scientific knowledge and mathematical skill of the Superintendent of Meterological Observations, he has not been able to measure it. The ground is becoming exceedingly dry, and unless we have rain soon, of which there is but little prospect, there will not be much feed for stock on the ranges during the summer; but there is plenty of snow in the mountains to water the fields of the husbandman, if properly used and distributed; and with the blessings of the Almighty who giveth the increase, a plentiful harvest may be expected.

During the absence of the First Presidency, and many of the principal men of the city, a strict observance of the eleventh commandment by all, will insure perfect peace and tranquility, and everything will move along in its own proper channel as heretofore, without any material effort being made to keep things right side up.

Hints to the Brethren.

EXHORTATIONS IN MEETINGS FOR SOCIAL WORSHIP.

1. SPEAK so as be to easily understood by all present. To speak so indistinctly, or in so low a tone of voice as to be understood only by those near you, is almost as bad as to speak in an unknown tongue. But the opposite extreme of pitching the voice as if the brethren and sisters were all dull of hearing, is equally to be avoided.

2. Always be short. If you observe this rule, you can hardly fail of being heard with pleasure. If your remarks are brief, although they may be ever so uninteresting, they cannot be tiresome. When the brethren see you get up, if they do not anticipate anything very enlivening, they at least have the comfort of feeling that you will not weary them with a long-winded exhortation.

3. Always have a point, and speak to the point. A single idea clearly exhibited, and strongly enforced, is worth more than a half hour of rambling remarks.

4. Speak with earnestness. What comes from the heart will be likely to go to the heart.

5. Don't speak so often as not to allow others to occupy their due share of the time.

[New York Evangelist.

Hugh Miller's Last Work.

OUR American friends are fond of boasting that they "beat the Britishers," and they do beat us sometimes in things least expected. The first extract from Macaulay's History of England reached us from the other side of the Atlantic; and on Thursday, says the Inverness Courier, we received from the press at Boston, United States, a long extract from Hugh Miller's last work not yet published, and which none of our cotemporaries in Edinburgh seem yet to have seen. It appears that Mr. Miller's "Testimony of the Rocks" is now printing at Boston, and is to be illustrated by some one hundred highly finished engravings executed for the work in Paris. We have only room to say that Mr. Miller argues that the revelation of the creation, as given in Genesis, was addressed to the eye and not the ear of Moses. The account is a description dictated by inspiration in so many words. He supposes the Almighty caused a phantasmagoric picture of the Six Days to pass before the eyes of Moses, and that he describes the appearances. He thus saw each great day or Æon, under its most characteristic aspect. This theory is not new, but expounded with that political gorgeousness of description characteristic of the lamented author.—Scotch Paper.

Three Rules for Writing Composition.

1. REMEMBER, that you are to write what you think, and not think what to write; and if you do not know but little about the subject, you may begin by saying so, and going on telling what you do know—much or little.

2. Always hand your composition to the teacher in a neat copy, free as possible from erasures or mistakes, and without any errors, which have already been corrected in former copies of the composition.

3. Be sure to use capital letters in the right places, and only in the right; and to put in the proper punctuation marks, according to the sense. It looks badly to see a small "i" used for a large one; or a proper name, as "Mary," "George," commencing with a small letter.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 20, 1857.

The Oquawka Plaindealer on Drummond and the Mormons.

OUR attention has been recently called in a particular manner to the Oquawka Plaindealer, and from its columns we have more than once drawn sufficient to substantiate the statements published in this paper against that scapegrace Drummond. We have no acquaintance with the editor of the Plaindealer, never saw his paper till his charges against the ex-Associate Justice of Utah were published, and we dare say he never saw our charges against the same worthy till after his own were before the public. Thus both the Plaindealer and THE MORMON have been publishing at the same moment the same scandalous facts, the items of the "horse-trader's" history which stamp him one of the veriest scamps outside of Sing Sing or such benevolent State institutions. When first we extracted from the Plaindealer, we remarked that its editor had not published his revelations "to favor the Mormons, but from a sense of justice to the public." It would seem that some of those pious hypocrites who glut and satiate their bigotry on blood, and who walk in the beaten track of "the little villain"—the New York Daily Times—take the Plaindealer to task for spoiling their prospects of murdering the inhabitants of Utah. The Galesburg Democrat is one of that infamous gang that appears in a desperate hurry to trample upon the Democracy it professes by endorsing the demand for troops for Utah made by the unscrupulous defamer. The Plaindealer extracts the following from the Democrat:

"We were glad, therefore, to see Judge Drummond, after three years silence amid the enormities of Salt Lake, at length come out with his protest. And we regret to see doubts of the truth of his revelations started in many papers, east and west, in consequence of some revelations derogatory of himself, recently made through the Oquawka Plaindealer. Some journals are already falling into a sort of Jack-Mormon reaction, and talking about a probable exaggeration of the charges against the Mormons, and harping upon the impeachable character of those who make them. This course is wrong as well as unphilosophical, and we hope to see it abandoned."

We confess to some surprise on reading the above in the Galesburg Democrat. We cannot imagine why the Democrat should regret to see the revelations of Drummond doubted in consequence of revelations made through this paper, unless it means to insinuate that our revelations are not worthy of regard. All that we have said of Drummond is true, and well known to most every citizen in this town. He is a man whose word would not be regarded as of the slightest importance by those who know him here, not even if he should repeat it under oath, as our citizens have had some specimens of his hard swearing. We do not think that the truth of the report of the iniquities of the Mormons depends in any degree upon the evidence of Drummond. There is abundant testimony from persons every way entitled to respect that substantiates all that has been said in regard to the treason and villanies of the Mormons. We exposed the villany of Drummond because we thought it was due to the public that he should stand out in his true colors. We had reason to believe that he was laying in with Douglas and others of the same kidney to get the appointment of the Governorship of Utah himself, and we should have felt self-condemned, when we had a full knowledge of his infamy, if we had remained silent.

[Oquawka Plaindealer, June 12.

If the Plaindealer had a file of THE MORMON, or could consult one, he would discover that the "abundant testimony from persons every way entitled to respect" does not "substantiate all that has been said by Drummond in regard to the treason and villanies of the Mormons;" but, on the contrary, the "testimony from persons every way entitled to respect," gives the lie to the charges of that corrupt man and those who have leagued with them for the purpose of bringing trouble upon the Mormons. Scarcely two of them agree on the state of things in Utah and the disposition of the inhabitants of that Territory towards the General Government. Letters to the New York Tribune and Daily Times have been written in which an agreement exists between the writers in relation to the circumstances alluded to by them; but no intelligent person can read the communications referred to, without perceiving that they were written to order, and, more than probably, frequently by the same pen. That the opponents of Mormonism residing in Utah Territory lived on intimate terms, held solemn conclave, time and again, on what they would send to Eastern papers and to the Administration at Washington is as certain as the Tribune and Times published their infamous calumnies. Their own published letters are public refutations of their charges. They cried out about their letters being stopped and how it was almost impossible for the truth, if it told against the Mormons, to get back to the States, and yet day after day have long letters appeared in those and other papers, belching every imaginable calumny against the Governor and the men whom they charged with the power, and the employment of stopping their communications. Thousands and thousands, according to those writers, were sighing and crying to get away from the Territory and none could get a start, afraid to make preparations, for fear of being murdered and the next mail brings a batch of men and women from Great Salt Lake City, to Independence, the forerunners of thousands of others, they say, preparing to leave Utah. The Telegraphic messenger, announcing their first arrivals says:

"After leaving, the party were in great fear of being pursued and surprised by the Mormons, and to avoid being cut off, they kept up a constant watch day and night. They were not, however, followed."
—[Squatter Sovereign, May, 30.

They had, many of them, doubtless reason to be afraid and when they come out as openly as Drummond did and charge the Mormons with crime, we shall tell the cause of their fear and drag them before the public, as we have the "horse-trader," till all creation understands that they had motives for their slander. So long as men are only reported by anonymous correspondents, or through dispatches, to have said so and so we give them the advantage of any doubt that may arise or whether they did really say "so and so;" but when they come out, lay aside the mask and want open war, they can have it, if we deem them for the moment worth the trouble. We would fain finish up with Drummond as he is severely used up and no respectable person will now handle him; but when we see items such as the foregoing extracts, and what we are about to add, we cannot resist the temptation of giving them a place in our paper, that they may be a warning to others to stand by the truth, live above all wickedness so that in the day of trial and searching inquiry their good and not their evil deeds may be known of all men.

THE MORMONS LOCKED HORNS WITH DRUMMOND.

"It is said that 'when rogues fall out honest men get their due.' But one thing is quite certain—they are very sure to get a good knowledge of the character of the rogues. Judge Drummond's onslaught on the Mormons has provoked from them a retort, and one, Judge Appleby, a Mormon, who we believe was Clerk of the Supreme Court in Utah, has published a letter in THE MORMON, a paper published in New York City, in which he propounds a number of questions to Judge Drummond, and says when a truthful answer is given, all surprise will no doubt cease about his not being respected in Utah. The questions number twenty-three in all, which we publish below, omitting a number as not having general interest. The very plain inferences to be drawn from the questions we have no doubt are strictly true, as they correspond to what is already known of Drummond by citizens of this place, and also to his general character. It is now rendered quite certain that he resigned his Judgeship for the purpose of getting the appointment of Governor of Utah that he might return there vested with sufficient authority to revenge himself on the Mormons for the indignities offered his "Ada," the romantic lady whom Drummond first saw in a dream. The Mormons are bad enough in all conscience, but the infamy of Judge Drummond makes them appear respectable in comparison, and since the mask has been torn from him we trust that no respectable journal will hereafter countenance him so much as to publish any of his letters. Appleby publishes quite a lengthy letter, which of course defends the Mormons. In the questions he leaves the name of Drummond blank, but in an editorial in the same paper attention is called to the communication in which the name of Drummond is used quite freely. It will be seen that one Col. Hall has a desire to see Drummond. For our part we think it not much matter how soon he has that pleasure."—[Oquawka Plaindealer, June 12.

We omit the questions as they were so recently published in THE MORMON, and are satisfied now that the Editor of the Plaindealer and the citizens of Oquawka find they dovetail well with history.

Governorship of Utah.

VERY little this week to report. Ex-Gov. P. F. Thomas, to whom the Governorship was tendered, has arrived at Washington, but declines the office. Col. Cumming is again reported to be on hand.

How long, how long before common sense and "Manifest Destiny" will teach some men true wisdom?

The Utah Difficulty.

FOR some time back we have carefully read, clipped and put aside for future use, whatever has come under our notice from the leading papers of the nation against Utah and the Mormons. Among the heaps of rubbish we have occasionally seen something like an attempt at a fair representation of "The Utah Difficulty"—as editors are pleased to call that creation of their own imagination. We think that a column or two of THE MORMON may be well occupied with various extracts. As the awful wickedness of the Utonians is so well known and so certainly true we may be excused from republishing the charges of Drummond and his confreres and limit ourselves to the outside argument on the relations between the Mormons and the Government—the writers, of course, crediting more or less the statements of our enemies. The Boston Journal, May 25th, says—under the heading

THE UTAH RUMORS—

* * * * "Now it is evident there is some foundation for all these reports, while it is equally evident that many are unfounded and more exaggerated. But the real facts are important. If some of the statements are true, the prompt action of the general government is constitutionally demanded. [We are of the same opinion; but we have already shown the statements referred to, to be untrue.] If others are untrue, however much they may outrage reason and shook every sentiment of our nature, yet 'squatter sovereignty'—that refuge and glory of 'Latter Day Saints'—compels us not only to refrain from interference, but to seek the erection of the guilty community into all the privileges and sanctions of a sovereign State. We had better be careful, then, how we move. The moral sense of the nation aches for something to be done—cases of systematic law-breaking undoubtedly require it. But those things which distinctly call for governmental interference, should be ascertained and put beyond a doubt before the minds of the people, in order that we may see just how far the government ought to go, and where to stop. [A very sensible advice.]

"Has the government taken this precaution? If so, it is very evident that the results have not publicly transpired. In every respect, our information from Utah is discordant and contradictory. [Very much so.] The population of the Territory, for instance, is estimated all the way from forty-five thousand up to one hundred and twenty thousand, and even higher. The same discrepancies are seen on every material point—and they ought to be reconciled before definite action is determined upon. If a commission was necessary for gathering up the facts in dispute in Kansas, such a step would seem equally desirable in regard to Utah. [The first sensible step would be to ask the accused Governor—Are these things so?] In one view, there would appear to be a greater need of it, inasmuch as the division of opinion on the Kansas question led to a thorough sifting of the reports from that Territory, while our general abhorence for the doctrines and practices of the Mormons may lead us to swallow unhesitatingly the most unfounded rumors respecting them. [Very likely indeed.] The very treatment which a fair and able commission might receive in Utah, would go far towards showing the character of the people. But whatever course may be taken—even if there is none at all—we cannot forbear cautioning all against a too ready reception of these Utah reports. [It would almost seem that the writer knew something of Drummond's private life! We guess he did.]

"It is incumbent upon the government to appoint to the office of Governor of Utah, a fearless and determined man, and one who possesses great administrative ability. [Certainly, when he is required.] He should feel that he will be sustained by the administration, and should have a competent force at his command to enforce the authority of the government. [When force is required he should have it; but the Utonians don't dispute the authority of the government.] Further than this, the policy of the administration—if it designs to move cautiously and with a just regard for the unquestioned rights of the Mormons—must be shaped by the authentic facts which may be obtained. If the state of affairs is as bad as is represented, and the social evils of the Mormon system are beginning to awaken the attention even of the Mormons themselves, the delusion will be short lived. [Of course it would.] With a little judicious countenance from the government, the Mormon hierarchy may be overthrown by the Mormons themselves. [Leave it to them.] If the worst comes to worst the authority of the United States should be maintained at all hazards, and Utah kept in a territorial condition until she adopts civilized and Republican institutions."

[Utah "institutions" are already Republican—but she will be a long time "in a territorial condition" before she adopts the civilized institutions of the States—no "Five Point" institutions, no gambling hells there, and won't have them; if we must have them before we can enter the Union we mean to stay out, and every attempt made to civilize the Mormons and so prepare them for admission will be met with the resistance such civilization merits.]

The Mobile Daily Register, May 20th, publishes a lengthy article, under the heading—"What shall be Done with Utah?" from which we extract the following:

"Much trouble and confusion, we think, might be avoided, by examining carefully the subject matter and ascertaining the evil to be removed, before we begin to apply the remedy. Things in themselves very distinct, although not always dissimilar, are frequently confounded, and every step taken under such a misapprehension of the true condition of affairs, only involves them in a more hopeless entanglement. Mormonism wears two aspects, religious and political. It is our duty to distinguish between them, to seperate them if possible, to define their mutual boundaries, and while under the Constitution of the United States we are required to respect the one, we are equally bound in honesty and fair dealing to direct and control the other. With the religious features of Mormonism we cannot deal. There is no authority vested in Congress to determine points of orthodoxy, or to decide what is virtuous or what is vicious, abstractly considered; in fact we agree with Gen. Quitman, that as at present constituted, it would be hazardous to submit to that body any question of morals or taste. The fathers of the Republic were wise enough to allow all men the exercise of unconstrained liberty of conscience, and to throw around each and every citizen the protection of law in the enjoyment of his own religious notions. With the personal morality of individuals, therefore, the theory of this government forbids any interference, unless that liberty be so exercised as to interfere with the vested rights of others, for every man is bound so to exercise his own privileges as not to obstruct those of his fellow man. When this is done, no matter how great the enormity of the sin in our eyes, or how abhorrent to our ideas of propriety the conduct of others may be, they are not answerable to us, and we are not justified in intermeddling. And this is proper, for if it were otherwise, there would be no limitation to the power of a majority. Persecution the most revolting might ensue, for if the power to determine what is right and what is wrong (further than the protection of the rights of each from the other is concerned,) should be entrusted to Congress or any other branch of the Government, that department would be the sole judge, and there would be no retreat from the hardships of its decisions, however erroneous. With the sins of Mormonism, therefore, we are wisely forbidden to interfere; 'to their own Master (not Brigham) they must stand or fall.'

"But Mormonism in its political claims, is quite another thing. Whenever a body of men band together, and under the name of religion assume to exercise civil rights or to obstruct the exercise of those rights by others, then they become amenable to political responsibility, and must be dealt with as other trespassers. When their apostle and prophet declares that each elder of the Church is entitled to half-a-dozen wives or more, in proportion to his piety as ascertained by Mormon standards, and a sufficient number of silly women are found to supply the demand, we have no right to complain; but when he prescribes certain conditions of citizenship, and forbids any one to enter and occupy the Territory unless in compliance with those conditions, we answer that the Territory is the common property of all the States, and the citizens of each, without any such requisitions have the right to settle upon it, and any attempt to impede or eject them is a violation of law which is punishable; and if to establish this principle and secure this right common to all, it be necessary to sweep these usurpers from the land, why, their gross moral offences will only render the task less disagreeable."

[When the Mormons "band together and obstruct the exercise of civil rights," or when "their apostle and prophet" prescribes certain conditions of citizenship and forbids any one to enter and occupy the Territory unless in compliance with those conditions we say also that such conduct "is a violation of law which is punishable and ought to meet its deserts;" but we deny that the Mormons and "their apostle and prophet have so banded together or so prescribed conditions of citizenship of the Territory. It is a pure calumny."]

"But further—

"If, under the guise of religion, they outlaw all who do not adopt their customs and doctrines legalizing murder and robbery, the most bigoted advocate of the rights of conscience would scarcely regard them, exempt from the penalty justly attached to those offences."

[Who are the outlaws? What doctrine of the Mormons legalizes murder and robbery? Does the editor of the Register know any such person, is he acquainted with any such doctrines? Give us the names, cite the doctrines and we shall reply—meanwhile we say he is deceived.]

"But just here lies the monstrous hideousness of Mormonism. It not only claims the right to violate all the common laws of morality, decency and propriety, to appropriate to itself territory belonging to the citizens of all the States, and to disregard in its conduct towards those who dissent from its dogmas, the very "freedom" under which it is allowed to exist itself, but with a presumption almost impious, it usurps the power reposed in the President of the United States, to appoint a Governor and other officers over the territory, or so manages as to make the positions of his appointees utterly intolerable."

[This is slander? The Mormons are quite ready to compare their society with any christian society in the world and see where morality stands the highest. They think the polygamy of Abraham, the friend of God, preferable to monogamy and its appendages, filth, seduction, infanticide, suicide and murder. Mormonism never did "usurp the power reposed in the President of the United States to appoint a Governor and other officers over the Territory, or so manages as to make the positions of appointees utterly intolerable." Surely Mormonism is not to be blameed for the course of "Manifest Destiny." No Governor has been rejected, and all the officers of the Territory who behaved themselves and attended to their own affairs have been respected. Even Greeley is forced to admit that the appointees to Utah have generally been a worthless set. Had they found Mormonism congenial to their spirits it would have been a bad tale against it. Scoundrels may have dreaded a kicking out of the Territory and fled. So much the better for Mormonism. They feared it because they deserved it; but did not get it—which goes to prove the Mormons are long suffering, patient and slow to wrath.

The remainder of the article is mainly on the joys that spring up in the bosoms of our enemies when they learned that "Brigham Young had fled from Utah," and of the advantage to be taken by the departure of the Lion; but as the editor has before this learned that he, with many others, has been hoaxed we spare him the pain of reading his folly by reprinting it here with our comments.—ED. MORMON.]

The New York Daily News, of the 3d inst., publishes a lengthy communicated article on "What shall be done with the Mormons?" evidently from the pen of some one more given to reflection than some of the present hangers-on of that paper. The writer commences by saying that "of all the political problems which have arisen to vex the philosopher, none have prescribed such apparent difficulty as that which is now exciting the public mind in regard to the Mormons," makes some very sensible remarks, and comes directly to his subject which we quote:

"True wisdom deals not in theories. It has nothing to do with the soap bubbles with which men of science amuse themselves, and at which the honest vulgar gape. It looks upon slavery as a practical matter; viewing it as it is, not as it might be. It considers the rights of communities, the rights of persons, the rights of property as existing and inviolable rights. True wisdom regards vice as a deformity and punishes open outrage as a public offense, but does not therefore confound the jurisdictions of State and Church. Hence it frowns on the efforts of those who would interpose in the natural order of things and would seek, by public enactment, to regulate matters belonging solely to private morals. True wisdom fosters individual freedom and believes that in its healthy development is found the best safeguard to the community.

"As a general thing, this true wisdom has characterized the policy of our Government in its treatment of the questions that have arisen for its consideration. In this it has been true to the Constitution. The let-alone principle is the basis of our natural life and prosperity.

"In considering the Mormon question, let us put ourselves in contact with this time-honored spirit.

"We are to put aside as far as possible the veil of prejudice, and shut our ears to the clamor of the inconsiderate and the scoffings of the indifferent. We are to remember that Utah is now, as to her political rights, what the older States once were. She has her local institutions, as all had, and if she is addicted to practices which are incompatible with our notions of things, have not other States been guilty of quite as peculiar, if not as odious offenses? We cannot forget New England peculiarities, or those of other sections of the country. The fact is, none of us are spotless; who shall cast the first stone? But we cannot suppose polygamy is so prevalent among the Mormons as has been represented—the laws of economy forbid it.

"Polygamy, however, does exist as an institution. Did it assume a shape of tenfold its present enormity, we cannot, in justice to ourselves or them interfere with its local presence. The general laws of being, before recited, and every instinct of right, warn us against any interference. Utah having complied with the constitutional requirements, must be admitted as a State. She will then be equal with us; supreme within her own boundaries; subordinate only to a defined Federal allegiance.

"It is reported that the Mormons have rebelled against the exercise of legitimate federal authority. That the District Judge has been expelled by force and the archives of the Court burnt. That peaceful citizens of the United States passing through the Territory have been unlawfully hindered and oppressed. That their incendiaries are inciting the Indians to massacre the border settlers. If all this be true, there can be but one course to pursue—the upholding of federal law at all hazards. But it is well to inquire before taking any active measures how much truth there is in these rumors and reports. We remember the details of bloodshed and murder in Kansas, which for so many months filled the columns of the "Republican" press.

"Time has disclosed the insincerity of these reports. It is said that Judge Drummond had been guilty of undue interference in local interests, and that he provoked an assault by his own offensive attitude. The Mormon delegate in Congress repeatedly denied reports of outrage and insubordination. The telegraph a day or two since announced a new enormity, to-day it is denied, and peace and quiet are said to exist. In view of these conflicting reports what can we expect the Administration at Washington to do? We can expect it to investigate carefully, to act cautiously. If there be arrant treason, meet it with the halter; if there be only irritation, apply the gentle but firm hand and the soothing word. Threats will only madden; a peaceful assertion of federal authority, backed up, if necessary, with a thousand muskets, with an acknowledgment of local right, will insure a present peace and a future happiness. With Mormonism the Government have nothing to do; happily in this country, politics and religion have their peculiar spheres of action.—N. Y. Daily News, June 3.

THE LAST EXCITEMENT.

EDITORS must have something to write about, and it is absolutely necessary to get up some absorbing topic for discussion,—some object of denunciation—something to bewail or wax indignant over. Kansas having been bled to death, the Burdell murder used up, and the comet failing to create a general excitement, the New York press have turned their attention to Utah, and are now doing up Mormonism with a vengeance. The "horrible details" smell very fishy, and are altogether too much like "outrages in Kansas." Several "own correspondents" suddenly spring up in Salt Lake City, before any one had an idea that they had been especially despatched from New York; and these veracious scribblers, after gravely telling us that the Mormon authorities exercise a rigid surveillance over the postal department, read all letters, and suffer none to leave the territory that contain anything inimical to their interests, yet give us all the shocking details of polygamy, private schemes, &c., of Brigham Young, with the minuteness of a Washington correspondent who is on familiar terms with all the Cabinet. Things as they are in Utah are bad enough, without the aid of the distorted inventions of bogus correspondence. But the letters in the New York papers are manufactured to keep up the necessary supply of excitement and smut. We hear in the Times of women walking their rooms all night long, and tearing their hair, while their burning eyeballs refuse to shed a tear; and how the writers can become acquainted with these facts might puzzle one to imagine, unless they share the ladies' dormitories. Mormonism affords an exhaustless field for the Kansas scribes, as it furnishes food for indefinite quantities of prurient filth and the invention of obscenities which are sure to be eagerly devoured by a certain class of readers whether they are genuine or spurious. If New York does not become as bad as Utah it will not be the fault of the papers that furnish spiced stimulants for the gratification of lasciviousness and lechery.—[Brooklyn Daily Eagle, May 20th.

We terminate for the present our long quotations with an article from the Charleston Mercury, May 26.

"NEW VIEW OF MORMONISM.

"Much has been said within the last two months of the atrocity and barbarism of Mormon practices and institutions. Many papers have recommended the interference of the government and the uprooting of this foul excrescence from the surface of our body politic.

"The Mormons have, in fact, set up for themselves an imperium in imperio. They have gone further and to some extent defied the authority of the United States. It is said Mr. Buchanan and the Cabinet have determined to enforce the governmental authority, and to this extent we highly approve of interference. To the point of maintaining the authority of the United States we deem it not only expedient but necessary to proceed. This is practicable and easy of accomplishment, though possibly expensive. Even if resisted five or ten thousand men, under a resolute commander, could speedily overawe these people and enforce obedience to United States laws. In reality, there is no incompatibility between Mormonism and the United States authority. The latter is limited in its scope and does not reach the peculiarities of the Mormons. Let us for a moment examine them and see. They consist of two things, polygamy and a voluntary church government.

"Polygamy, as it is called amongst the Mormons, is only concubinage. No form of marriage is executed between the parties. Brigham Young, or one of the Elders, says to a woman that she is 'sealed' to such a man, and she goes and lives with him. Brigham calls all who are sealed to him wives, but they are only concubines. Now, is there any law of the United States making concubinage a crime? Some of the States make adultery a punishable offence in their courts. But there is no such law enacted by Congress for the Territories, nor made by Utah for the people which inhabit its territory. The concubinage of Mormonism may, therefore, continue in existence with the full authority of the United States in this Territory.

"As to the other peculiarity—the quasi government of their Church—all Churches take cognizance of the conduct of their members, and their submission to their behests is entirely voluntary. So, if the Mormons think proper to submit to the decrees of their Church, in matters of personal conduct, or even in matters of property, as did the primitive Christians, how can Government interfere? If the people will not bring suits into the courts of the United States, how can the courts adjudicate? It appears to us, therefore, that the peculiarity of Mormonism may co-exist with the full acknowledgment of the authority and laws of the United States.

"But if there was an incompatibility between them, the remedy is so easy, of making themselves a State, that we cannot doubt they will use it. They have upwards of one hundred thousand people in Utah, and proselytes are daily flocking into the Territory, both from Europe and this country, to swell their numbers. Now, what is to prevent them from applying at the next Congress for admission into the Union as a State? What will the advocates of squatter sovereignty say to the proposal? Can they reject it? Even on the principle laid down in the President's inaugural address, Utah must be admitted. The constitution of the United States prescribes but one condition to the admission of a Territory as a State—the constitution shall be republican; and by the laws of Congress, as well as the usages of the general government, any Territory having a sufficient number of inhabitants to send a member of Congress, shall be admitted into the Union. That number is now one hundred thousand, and the Mormons have this number, and more, in Utah Territory. Once a State, are not the contracts of marriage, like all other contracts, under the exclusive control of the State? Can the general government, or any other State, dictate what shall be the laws of marriage in a State, or prescribe or limit the authority of courts established within its limits by a State?

"For these reasons it appears to us that Mormonism can only be abolished by the progress of civilization and the morality of a true religion. The force of the United States, employed to establish United States authority, will not touch the peculiarities of Mormondom, and cannot overthrow its institutions. Force, employed to destroy the people or extirpate their doctrines, would be worthy only of the dark ages of persecution."

A Card to a Slanderer.

AMONG the number of the most rabid enemies of the Saints, is the "New York Daily Times." That venal sheet contains almost daily the most unmitigated falsehoods in relation to Gov. Young and the Mormons in Utah. Wednesday's issue of that paper contained a base editorial, breathing the most acrimonious spirit of mobbing and murder; and no doubt the writer of that article would rejoice and gloat over the news of hundreds and thousands of innocent men, women and children in Utah being murdered by a ruthless mob. It would be a sweet morsel to him. No doubt he would, on the receipt of such news, "send gifts" to "MEN" (?) of his own stripe.

As we said before, the spirit of mobbing and murder is prominently developed in the whole of that article; and no doubt the author would like to see it carried out. We would politely inform the "GENTLEMAN," whoever he may be, that he can have his desire for mobbing gratified without going to Utah—not by recommending it, but by trying it personally himself. If he will only call at our office in this city, No. 102 Nassau street, there are three or four Mormons there almost every day in the week; one of them has a wife, sons and daughters residing at Great Salt Lake, whom he loves, and we think they will compare favorably for virtue and intelligence with the family of the author of the base article refered to—provided he has any. We say, then, he can be gratified, and can try his hand, and blow off some of that mob-murderous spirit of his. But there is one thing we would respectfully recommend him to do before he engages in it, and that is to go to the Undertaker and pick out his case.

For, be it known, before heaven and all men, we have been robbed, mobbed, murdered and driven until we will submit to it no longer. We will either have our rights, as guaranteed to us by the Constitution of this once happy Republic, or we, as sons of Revolutionary and honored sires, will die in endeavoring to maintain and defend them. Far better for patriots to sleep in death, than wear the galling chains of oppression, deprived of liberty and our just rights.

Mormonism Spreading Out.

BY letters received from Prests. J. F. Cleary, of Boston, Mass., and John Druce, of Haverstraw, N. Y., we are informed that several persons have lately been baptized at the former place, and one or two at the latter; many are flocking out to hear the truth, and several more believing.

From President A. M. Cannon, of Philadelphia, we learn that a Branch of some twenty members has lately been organized, some four miles from the city, a part of whom have lately been baptized into the Church.

It gives us pleasure to learn of the advancement of the Kingdom of God, and the cause of truth, in spite of all the filthy spleen and falsehood circulated against us. People who are honest and unprejudiced will come out, hear, and investigate our doctrines for themselves, and that is all we ask.

General Walker.

THE Great Fillibuster arrived in our city on Tuesday evening, a few hours after the police battle. The weather was unpropitious for demonstrations and speechifying, the crowd, nevertheless, who had not dispersed from the City Hall joined the irregular procession, drew up in the Park and saw the "grey-eyed man," and from this unexpected circumstance he had a multitude to welcome him. His stay is to be short, he is to return to Nicaragua.

A Calumny Refuted.

From the N. Y. Tribune, June 11.

To the Editor of the N. Y. Tribune:

SIR—In the Tribune of June 6, I perceive the following passage in a letter, extracted from the Missouri Democrat:

> "A Mormon by the name of W. I. Appleby, Clerk of the Supreme Court, was the author of several letters, sent on to the States and published, which pretended to give a correct account of affairs in Utah, denying the many charges made against Young and his followers, and signed 'A Gentile.'"
>
> "His communications are not reliable, as he is one of the principal men in Salt Lake City devoted to the Mormon Church, and all his pretensions of being a Gentile were humbug."

As I am the person alluded to, I wish to reply to the gentleman, whoever he may be, who made the foregoing statement. I pronounce it an unmitigated and base falsehood, in relation to my writing any article referred to, or signing "A Gentile," &c.; and the author knew it was false at the time, and hence was afraid and ashamed to sign his name.

I left Utah last April one year ago, and arrived in the States the last of May following, and have been in the States all the while since, a good portion of that time in New York, and in Washington City. I have never, in all my life, wrote an article in relation to "affairs in Utah," Governor Young, or any one else, while residing in Utah, neither have I since my arrival in the States, except one to The Washington Star last June or July in reply to Col. Benton's remarks made in his political speech at St. Louis, wherein he attacked Gov. Young and the gallant Col. Steptoe. My name to that communication was signed "W. I. Appleby of Utah." Neither have I signed "A Gentile" to any article I have ever written. I write no article to which I am either ashamed or afraid to sign my name.

My character for truth and honesty is with those with whom I am best known, both in Burlington County, New Jersey (my native place,) also in Utah, and generally more or less in the States, and I am at the defiance of all the poor, miserable poltroons and falsifiers of Gov. Young and the Mormons to substantiate the first charge, in truth, derogatory to my character.

It is true I have been associated with the United States Courts in Utah ever since their first organization there, and I am pretty well posted up in relation to all the officials who have been sent there, and the course they pursued. Some have behaved like gentlemen and attended to their duties; others, the history of their doings would make a book, and the title should be "The History of the Judges, and other Officials of Utah." I am a true personal friend of Gov. Young; have known him for some fourteen years; been with him by day and by night, and I do know him to be a good, noble, and upright man; one that is not afraid of men or devils, but will contend for his rights; a protector of the weak and a terror to the evil doers.

It is also true, I am a Mormon; have been for nearly seventeen years, and I am not ashamed of it; neither do I care who knows it. I rejoice in the truth and light of their faith. We know it is invulnerable, and falsehood and vituperation, mobbing and driving, are all the arguments produced to refute it. No editor or priest dare meet Mormonism on its merits; and the reason why I am a Mormon is because they have more light, truth and intelligence in relation to the plan of Salvation and Bible truths than I can find among any other people, sect, or denomination; and I have searched deep and proved well.

The next time any of those maligners write in relation me, I wish them to give their names, so that I may know who they are. If they desire anything whatever, they can be accommodated by calling on me, almost any day in the week, at my office, No. 102 Nassau-street, New-York. I speak bold—Truth makes me so.

By giving the foregoing an insertion you will much oblige me.

W. I. APPLEBY of Utah.

New York, June 10, 1857.

[Justice to our opponents requires us to say that the Tribune published the foregoing and the Herald the same week published a similar refutation of the charge of annonymous communications.—ED.]

Dr. Jeter Clinton.

IT is but a short time since we announced to our readers the return of our fellow laborer Dr. Clinton to his home in Utah, and we are now pleased at being called upon to announce his return to the Eastern States. The Doctor labored successfully in the Philadelphia district on his last mission, returned to the Valley, received the approval of the First Presidency of the Church and is sent on again to take an active part in the Eastern Mission. He came to the States by the last mail from Great Salt Lake City, passed a few days in St. Louis and arrived here on Monday forenoon. We were asking news from the Territory, but were informed that he had learned all about Utah since he came to the States, and that we were much better posted than he was!! He thinks our city editors have wonderful correspondents—they have seen and heard mighty things in Utah that nobody else ever saw or heard.

Information Wanted.

MARGARET PILLINGS, of 182 Valley street, Lawrence, Middlesex Co., Mass., desires to hear from her parents, Michael and Agnes Pillings, or to learn of their whereabouts. Address as above.

General Summary.

WE have only room for a line and the most truthful summary is—

The world is going to hell as fast as possible.

More of the Assassination.

WE have already published a plain statement of the assassination of President P. P. Pratt; but as the following letter contains some details we give it likewise to the public:

FLINT, CHEROKEE NATION, ARKANSAS, May 17, 1857.

EDITOR MORMON—Dear Brother: We take up our pen to inform you of the ill-fate of our much beloved brother, Parley P. Pratt, who fell by the hands of his blood-thirsty enemies on the 13th inst. in Crawford Co., Arkansas. The history of this awful tragedy is briefly as follows: President Pratt while in St. Louis made an appointment, by letter, to meet Mrs. McLean at Fort Gibson, Cherokee Nation, informing her that her pursuers were on the alert. This letter of appointment, it appears, by some means or other, fell into McLean's hands, and he arrived at Fort Gibson by the time, or very soon after, that Bro. P. reached this Nation. McLean succeeded in having Bro. P. arrested by the military, under a charge of larceny, on the 8th inst. Elder Geo. Higginson was in company with him, and was sworn in as a witness upon the part of the United States. Both were placed under strong guard, and by a military escort conveyed in chains to the Supreme Court, Van Buren, Arkansas. The case being promptly investigated, and there being no evidence upon which a bill of indictment could be found, he was liberated on the 13th inst. Bro. P. being without arms and without friends to protect him, and knowing that McLean was thirsting for his blood, and that he had the aid of a mass of the corrupt, money-bought citizens of Van Buren, endeavored to make his escape on horseback unmolested; but every road and pass-way being under strict watch, he did not succeed in getting far till his path was discovered. McLean and a half dozen other armed fiends pursued him, and Bro. P. being totally unarmed, they succeeded in killing him without being hurt. Two of the party in advance intercepted his road and brought him to a halt, while McLean and the others came up in the rear. McLean discharged a six-shooter at him, but the balls took no effect—some passed through his clothes, others lodged in his saddle. The parties now being in immediate contact, McLean stabbed him (both being on horseback) with a heavy bowie-knife twice under the left arm; Bro. P. dropped from his horse; McLean dismounted and probed the fatal wounds still deeper;—he then got a Deranger from one of his aids, and as Bro. P. lay dying upon his back, shot him in the upper part of the breast; dropping his pistol by the side of the victim, the assassin then mounted his horse and fled. This occurred within a few steps of the residence of a farmer by the name of Win. Two gentlemen being at the house at the time, saw the whole affair, and have made oath to what they witnessed before a coroner's jury. Bro. P. survived the work of this assassin two hours and a half, and was enabled to tell those who came to his assistance who he was; that he had been murdered by a fiend for doing his duty; and gave full instructions as to what course should be pursued in interring his body, and the disposition of the means and property connected with his person. His instructions were fully attended to by Elder Higginson and Mrs. McLean, who reached the place of his assassination the same evening.—Those who saw his last moments, state that Bro. P. died without a murmur or a groan, and apparently without a pain, perfectly resigned to the will of Heaven. Bro. Pratt told Elder Higginson the next morning after his arrest, that his enemies would kill him, and requested Elder H. to go through with this Spring's emigration to Utah, and carry the news of his death to the Church and his family. This Elder H. will do, the Lord helping. After perpetrating this heaven-daring deed, McLean returned to Van Buren and made it known. After remaining in town several hours, and walking the streets with impunity, he was escorted by a number of citizens of Van Buren to the boat, and took his leave of the place. Verily, we had long thought that the blood-thirsty mobocrats of Missouri and Illinois were without a parallel in the world; but we now yield the palm to the church-going citizens of Van Buren, for they have proven to the world that they are a den of murderers and assassins.

Praying for your welfare and success, and the redemption of the righteous, and the destruction of the wicked from the earth, and the universal triumph of the principles of righteousness, we subscribe ourselves,

Yours, in the Covenant,
GEO. HIGGINSON.
GEO. CROUCH.

These writers justly condemn the deed, and as justly censure the civil authorities of Van Buren for allowing the murderer to parade their streets unchallenged; we shall, however, reserve our comments on their conduct till we learn their final proceedings on the case. We have just seen a gentleman who has had a long conversation with Mrs. McLean, and learned from her lips much of an interesting character which took place immediately preceding and subsequent to the murder, which will doubtless be laid before the public in due time and by the proper person. Our eastern papers published accounts of the tragedy from Van Buren and Fort Smith papers, which, through being published together, might lead some to imagine that the whole of the people were rejoicing in the atrocious crime. We deem it, therefore, no more than just to the people of Van Buren to state that the rejoicing was principally on the part of McLean's party, whose spirit was reflected through the Fort Smith Herald, the organ of the twin pets, Wheeler and Sparks—a rich compound of ignorance and blackguardism. Whatever may have been the feelings of the editor of the Van Buren Intelligencer towards the Mormons, he merits respect for having published the letter of Mrs. McLean. We understand that a number of ladies in Van Buren were very respectful in their attentions to the unfortunate mother who had lost her children and her all, and who aided her considerably with presents. Some gentlemen very courteously furnished her with means to repair to New Orleans. We have not learned that any disrespect was shown to either Mr. Pratt or Mrs. McLean by the respectable inhabitants of Van Buren, and have heard that the officers of justice had apprehended the two fiends who took part in the murder with the assassin McLean. We should be obliged by receiving items of information from Van Buren, the name of the legal gentleman who befriended the accused, those who witnessed the murder, and those who took part in it. We would take pleasure in publishing any official document, if such exist, which would exonerate the authorities there from any appearance of connivance with the murderer before or after the deed.

We conclude from what we have learned, that against the judge and officers of the law President Pratt had nothing to say.

Crescent City Oracle.

THIS lively little paper, established only a few months ago, is out in a bigger dress already—it keeps pace with the growth of that young city, which, according to the Oracle, is destined to be a mighty grand place. Mr. L. O. Littlefield who has heretofore been editor and proprietor has vacated the editorial chair and made his retiring bow to the sanctum, "yielding to our voluntary inclination of entering into other pursuits." Mr. J. E. Johnson, of Council Bluffs Bugle, hoists his penant—Editor and Proprietor. Hoping that the "other pursuits" of Mr. L. will not force his pen to the shelf, and wishing prosperity to his successor, we introduce to our readers an article of interest at the present moment.

MURDER OF HON. A. W. BABBITT.

We notice in the letter of resignation, of Hon. W. W. Drummond to Attorney General Black, that he there, among other very grave charges, asserts that the Hon. A. W. Babbitt was murdered by white men disguised as Indians, by order of the authorities of Utah. In justice to the parties thus maligned, we will state that we have taken much pains to gather all the information possible calculated to throw light upon the death of our relative, Mr. Babbitt, and the particulars connected with the same; and we have not a shadow of a doubt but that Indians of the Cheyenne nation murdered him for revenge and plunder, and for the satisfaction of his friends who have not heard the full particulars, we will recount them briefly.

As Secretary of Utah, the late and lamented Col. Babbitt purchased the Stationary and other necessaries for Legislative purposes, &c., and at a proper season started it from Florence across the plains with ox teams under the charge of a Mr. Nickols. Late in August, with only one attendant and in an open carriage. Mr. B. left Florence for Utah. Upon arriving at Fort Kearney, he there found some of his stock, his wagons, and a portion of the goods, and one man wounded from his train, being all that remained, four of the number having been killed, three on the spot, and one (Mrs. Wilson) the next day after capture.

Mr. Babbitt hastened to purchase more cattle, and, gathering up the remains of his freight, started the train again forward, and wrote us two several letters, stating that he would start forward himself with two attendants the day following. These are, probably, the last he ever wrote.

Mr. Babbitt left the fort as had been arranged, and was never again seen by white men. All the emigration were ahead. He intended to reach Fort Leavenworth in three days and was making good his time. Some weeks later an Indian came in to a French trader's station with a gold watch which bore the initials of Mr. B's name, and soon another came with a massive ring, which was also marked as a seal ring.

The Indians then being charged with the murder acknowledged they had done it. News was sent to the Fort and Major Wharton immediately sent out a detachment in search, which found Mr. Babbitt's carriage, trunk and many vauable papers; but nothing of the unfortunate victim but a few bones.

The Indians then confessed, that, having been insulted and abused by the parties in charge of the mail, and then were killed by the soldiers, a company of twelve had fallen upon Mr Babbitt's ox train as being the first they had met, to avenge the wrong. That they had seen Mr. Babbitt arrive at the Fort and knew him, (he having crossed the plains nearly 20 times,) and that he was a big man, and, by killing him, they might be likely to get plunder and revenge at the same time. They had gone on ahead and lay in wait; when he passed they followed him at a distance until he had stopped, the second day in the afternoon. Then they rode down upon him, yelling and screaming. Mr. B. shouted at them and motioned them to stop and pointed his pistol at them; but they passed on and he fired at them. Frank Rowland (a young man accompanying him) stood with his arms by his side until shot down; the other man ran away in some willows. The Colonel fought like a tiger, fired all his arms, then clubbed his rifle and fought the whole twelve savages, disputing every inch as he slowly backed up to his carriage for protection behind. He had seriously wounded several, when one, more cowardly than the others, jumped up into the wagon, and, with a tomahawk, killed a brave and noble man.

Major Wharton still has possession of the ring which he obtained of the Indians, and some other valuables and relics, found on the spot of the murder.

Mr. ———, a French trader, has a fine gold watch which belonged to Mr. B., which he purchased of the Indians, together with some articles of minor value.

All that is now known of the murder of the late Mr. Babbitt, is obtained through the Indians themselves, who acknowledge they committed the murder.

It seems to be a very malicious charge the ex-Judge is thus making against the people of Utah, without anything to justify him in doing so.

The widow of the late Mr. Babbitt is now on her return from Utah to this place. Upon her arrival, we shall, at the earliest moment, announce the receipt of anything further connected with his murder.

Judge Drummond and the Mormons.

A CORRECTION.

IN a recent communication from Judge Drummond published in the Tribune, that gentleman made the following statement as an illustration of the state of things in Utah:

"Within the past year, an old man named Davenport, who, I think, emigrated here from Iowa, made preparations to leave the Territory. Just as he got ready to start, he was called upon with a heavy bill of taxes not then due, but for the next two years in advance. This he was, of course, obliged to pay, for otherwise he would have been sued, and all his property taken from him. He finally succeeded in starting, but had made but a day's journey when his teams were stolen from him, and he was forced to return."

Mr. Davenport, the gentleman here referred to, now a resident of Nebraska, responds to this statement as follows:

Now, sir, as my name is connected with the above false statements, I wish you, as an honest man, to correct them by publishing this.

The facts are these: No such bill of taxes was ever presented to me before I left Salt Lake City, nor since. Neither were my teams stolen, as the correspondent states. While I was residing in Salt Lake Valley, I took a large number of sheep of President Kimball on shares, which I kept two or three years. When the Assessor and Collector came round the last season that I kept them, I told him that if I kept the sheep, I would pay the taxes, and that I would pay taxes on my own, which I did. The day I started, the constable presented me a bill of taxes on those sheep which belonged to President Kimball. I paid it. I afterward saw him, and he, like a gentleman, refunded me the money, and we parted on the most friendly terms.

JAMES DAVENPORE,
ALMIRA DAVENPORT.

[After publishing so much against the Mormons from the pen of that low, mean, scurrilous defamer Drummond, the editor of the Tribune need not have been so very niggardly with space, and clipped Mr. Davenport's letter and the charge to which he replies. Had the Tribune published the preceding item about the difficulty of leaving Utah for the States, it would have been two lies refuted instead of one—as his paper of the same day contained the account of great numbers being en route for California and the States.—ED.]

Fourth of July.

WE have received a very courteous invitation from the Saints in Connecticut to visit them on the Fourth of July, and to join them in celebrating the day of American Independence. President Appleby will deliver an oration, Prest. Cannon will read the Declaration of Independence, Dr. Clinton, Judge Dulin, Elder Stenhouse, and other brethren will take part in the day's proceedings. The Saints of other places who can find it convenient to meet the Connecticut Saints at Norwalk, on the morning of the Fourth will be heartily welcomed by the brethren there.

For information of the hour of departure from this city, expenses &c., apply early to Elder Dulin at this office during the week or at the Saints' Hall on Sunday.

War in New York.

GOTHAM is this week all excitement, the Municipal and State authorities have got in collision, the rival police forces have come to blows, sculls have been cracked, blood has flowed freely, and the military are under arms. On Monday, one of Governor King's appointees endeavored to take possession of his office—Street Commissioner; the Mayor's men refused to acknowledge his authority, and bundled him out of the building. On Tuesday he returned, and was in like manner ejected from the office. He got a warrant against the Mayor; but his Worship would not recognize the authority of the Metropolitan officer who served it on him, and both had to leave. The Recorder, determined not to be baffled, sent fifty of the Metropolitan or new force to bring the Mayor before him; but on their arrival at the City Hall, the Municipal or old force opposed their entrance, and then began a battle with clubs, which terminated on the flight of the Metropolitans, who had to deplore a considerable number terribly, and some few dangerously, wounded. The 7th Regiment, marching down Broadway on its way to the steamboat for Boston, whither they went to assist at the celebration of the Battle of Bunker Hill, were ordered to take up a position before the City Hall. The Mayor was afterwards arrested through the Sheriff, whose authority he recognized, but was immediately liberated by writ of habeas corpus.

The matter at this writing is before the Courts, and is the all-absorbing subject of interest in New York city.

Personal.

PRESIDENT APPLEBY left last Saturday for Philadelphia, preached twice on Sunday to the Saints there, and returned on Monday evening. His health is now excellent and improving daily in his visitations. He leaves on Saturday for Connecticut to visit the Saints and preach according to appointment at Northfield and another place near Westport.

Dr. Clinton is still here, is a little indisposed, and resting himself before entering on his mission.

Prest. Cannon arrived here on Thursday forenoon, purposes accompanying Prest. Appleby to Connecticut, and returning to Philadelphia before the arrival of the ship "Tuscarora" to attend on the emigration.

Correspondence of Elder Martineau.

PAROWAN, IRON CO., U. T., March 21, 1857.

EDITOR MORMON.—Sir:—I improve the present moment to give you a few items pertaining to this portion of far-off Utah. The past winter, though severe for this country, has been one of peace and prosperity to the Saints, and the principles of righteousness are becoming more deeply rooted in the hearts of the people than ever before. The Saints are more arduously striving than ever to live up to the principles of our holy religion: while those who have been in the habit of doing evil, and will not repent, are leaving us as fast as possible. We hear something occasionally of the blustering of would-be-wise editors and politicians of other portions of the republic; but we know that the Lord rules, and that the destinies of all nations and people are in His hands; consequently we look upon the raging elements of political strife with a calm and untroubled eye, and anticipate the arrival of that day when all parties and nations shall be willing to acknowledge that God rules their destinies, and shall be willing to be governed by His servants upon the earth.

The question of our admission as a State, upon an equal footing with others, seems to cause considerable discussion, and many anxious forebodings in the minds of some, lest our abominable licentiousness and corruption spread over the whole United States, and Mormonism be the ruling "ism" of the age. The question arises in their minds, how shall this evil be cured? How shall this question of polygamy be settled? As some have said, these are questions that bother our most astute statesmen, with whom they are not so much questions of right, and even-handed justice, as of policy and expediency. "How shall we get around this question with the least difficulty?" So long as politicians look upon the question in this light, and strive to dodge or avoid it, instead of coming up like men and investigating its merits calmly and reasonably, and deciding upon them according to the principles of even-handed justice, it will always be one of difficulty, but if an opposite course be pursued, it is one of easy solution. We claim no more than is conceded to other States—the right of an equal representation in Congress, the right to enjoy an internal State government like others, and those natural and unalienable rights recognized in the Declaration of Independence as the heritage of every citizen:—"life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." I will quote further:—"to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that, whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness." These are the foundation principles upon which is reared the glorious fabric of our Union—the home of the oppressed of every nation, and so long as they continue to be recognized as true by the people of the United States, so long will every inhabitant thereof be protected in his rights; but when government ceases to secure these rights to an individual or a community, it is an evidence that it has departed from those glorious principles which have so long been the pride of Americans and the terror of European despotism.

Mormonism is increasing with a rapidity never before witnessed since the Prophet Joseph organized the Church in 1830, and yet it is only in its infancy. It contains elements of prosperity and greatness which will make it thrive and increase in spite of all opposition, indeed opposition is one of its great causes of success. The divine law of polygamy binds our hearts and interests together with a chain which death itself cannot sever, not only because all feel united in keeping the commandments of God, but when opposition is arrayed against that law, those who have obeyed it know that they are in for it, and there is no backing out. But "backing out" is no part of Mormonism. The Prophets and Apostles of God have far greater power and influence than ever before, and that it may ever increase is the earnest desire of Your brother, &c.,

JAMES H. MARTINEAU.

More of Utah Drummond.

THE last number of the Oquawka Plaindealer publishes another chapter in the history of this beautiful specimen of Black Democratic office-holders. It is known that Drummond carried with him to Utah a woman whom he represented to be his wife—leaving his lawful partner, the mother of his children, at Oquawka. Mrs. Drummond wrote to her husband, and in return received a delicate epistle from this woman, which is published in the Plaindealer, telling her that she must not write to her husband again.

We are no advocate of Lynch law; but if any human being ever deserved the application of a stout hickory, and a suit of tar and feathers, it is this same ex-Judge of Utah.—[Quincy Whig.

Notice to Subscribers

WE frequently receive remittances for subscriptions to THE MORMON, without the sender giving the name of the place he desires the paper to be sent to. Sometimes the name of the Post Office or town is mentioned, but not the county, and as there are several towns in some States by the same name, unless the county is designated we are at a loss to know where to direct the papers ordered. We wish all communications to us to name distinctly the Post Office or town, county, and State or Territory, as then there will be no mistake.

Notice.

THE Saints who desire to send means to their friends in Europe, can have the same attended to, by forwarding any sum they wish in current money, to this office, enclosing one dollar or more, in proportion to the amount sent, to defray the expenses of procuring Bills of Exchange, making remittances, foreign postage, &c., describing particularly to whom, and where they wish to have it sent; at the same time not holding myself responsible in any manner whatever unless the money reach me.

All subscriptions, donations, &c., for the support of THE MORMON, or Conference Fund (except the donations and Conference Funds raised in the Philadelphia Conference, which will be forwarded as usual through President Cannon) must be sent hereafter to my address; as also Tithing; P. E. Fund, and donations for the Temple from those who wish to contribute the same, so each person may be duly credited, and the means forwarded to Zion, and have their names entered in "The Book of the Law of the Lord."

No Power of Attorney, or other legal instrument of writing, going to Europe or elsewhere, forwarded to us for the purpose of sending to Washington in order to obtain the attestation of the Department, and the British Consul's Certificate and seal to the same, will be attended to in future, unless the means to defray the expenses and foreign postage accompanies the Instrument, as there is considerable expense attending it as well as labor. We would like to oblige all, and are willing to give our services when we have opportunity; but we cannot advance means to defray such expenses.

All communications intended for THE MORMON should be addressed—Editor of THE MORMON, New York. Otherwise direct to my address, Box No. 3957, New York Post Office. W. I. APPLEBY.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are he kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be j udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the came now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là. Dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés!" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lascivété, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Letter Notice.

WE are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

IT IS BETTER TO REPRESENT OURSELVES, THAN TO BE REPRESENTED BY OTHERS.

VOL. III.—NO. 19. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 27, 1857. PRICE FIVE CENTS.

Poetry.

One By One.

BY CHARLES DICKENS.

One by one the sands are flowing,
One by one the moments fall;
Some are coming, some are going,
Do not strive to grasp them all.

One by one thy duties wait thee,
Let thy whole strength be to each,
Let no future dreams elate thee,
Learn thou first what these can teach.

Hours are golden links, God's token,
Reaching heaven; but one by one
Take them, lest the chain be broken,
Ere the pilgrimage be done.

Discourse

By President Lorenzo Snow, Tabernacle, Sunday Afternoon, March 1, 1857.

I AM not much in the habit of taking texts, especially of late years, and more especially since the commencement of the reformation. However this afternoon I think I will take a text, as a subject for the few remarks that I may make on this occasion, and that one was presented to me this morning when in conversation with Bro. Kimball, and that text is embraced in one word, which is Union.

I expect that a great deal might be said on this subject, and probably a great deal has been said, but more may yet be said, and that which intimately concerns us at the present time. If we would rightly understand things as they are, a more interesting subject could not be introduced at the present time, and it embraces a great deal more than what we should be enabled to say in one hour, or in one day. Unless that we go into the practice of paying more attention and more regard to the interests of others, we shall not get along as a people near so well as perhaps many of us have been anticipating.

In the Gentile world where the gospel first reached us, our manner of training, our habits and our education all went to influence our minds to look after self, and never to let our contemplations or meditations go beyond that which pertained to ourselves. In making any exertion that would in any way tend to benefit ourselves, to exalt ourselves, and assist us in amassing riches, or in gathering information that would conform or aid in the bringing about this object we considered we were doing first rate, for that was the object of life with us.

We then depended upon ourselves almost entirely, and thought that we should have means around us gathered for the purpose of securing ourselves from the evils that we found we were continually exposed to, in regard to poverty and in regard to the lack of friends. We were all looking within ourselves, we regarded our own dear selves in all our meditations, and directed all our exertions for our own individual benefit. This is what our parents taught us to a great extent, and it mattered, with us, but very little how or what course we pursued if we could gain those things we desired, if we could secure to ourselves those things which were necessary for our own comfort, and for our own individual temporal convenience.

This is the education of the world, and this is the way they are taught, this is one reason we have so much difficulty in acting upon the principles of union. Then it should not seem so very strange that the same feelings that were in the minds of the people around us, that were instilled into us by traditions, should linger around us at the present time, and become a blind or a barrier against receiving those blessings and privileges that we might otherwise receive, and be injurious to us when we receive the gospel and endeavor to become Saints of God.

I can discover that these things have extended, and spread themselves in the feelings and hearts of the Saints pretty extensively, and they act very powerfully in hindering the Saints from obtaining the blessings and privileges which it is their right to receive. Until these feelings are removed we shall be liable to be baffled in regard to the blessings that are promised to the people of God.

We talk considerably in regard to the principle of loving our neighbors as well as we love ourselves; we talk about it and we sometimes think about it, but how much do we really enter into the spirit of these things, and see that the difficulty lies within ourselves. We must understand that we have got to act upon certain principles by which we can bind ourselves together as a people, to bind our feelings together that we may become one, and this never can be accomplished unless certain things are done, and things that require an exertion on our part. How would you go to work to bind yourselves together? How would a man go to work to unite himself with his neighbor? If two men were associated together who had never been acquainted, how would they go to work to secure each other's friendship, attachment and affection one towards another? Why something would have to be done, and that not by one party only, but would have to be done by one as well as by the other. It would not answer for one to do the business alone; it would not do for one to answer those feelings and do the work himself, but in order to become as one in their sentiments and affection—the action of both would be requisite.

Now it is so ordered and so arranged that we are dependent in a great measure one upon another. For instance, take us as a people, we are dependent upon a Being that is above us to secure our peace, our happiness, glory and exaltation; we are individually dependent upon the exertions of an individual who is above ourselves.

For instance, we are all dependent upon Jesus Christ, upon his coming into the world to open the way whereby we might secure peace, happiness, and exaltation. And had he not made these exertions, we never could have been secured in these blessings and privileges which are guaranteed unto us in the gospel, through the mediation of Jesus Christ, for he made the necessary exertions.

In order to accomplish the gathering of Israel out of Egyptian bondage, there had to be something done to liberate them from their thraldom, and this something had to be done by a higher power, by an individual that had more wisdom, more intelligence, more understanding, and more power and means within his hands for the purpose of securing those blessings which they needed. They never could have got out from their difficulties nor from their bondage unless this power had been exerted by one who had more intelligence, more knowledge, more information in relation to the means of their deliverance.

It is just so in a thousand other cases; there has to be a power exercised for the benefit of the people, there has to be exertions made, and they never can receive the blessings and privileges that are for them unless those exertions were made by an individual possessing more knowledge, more wisdom, and greater power than themselves.

Jesus on a certain occasion, speaking to Peter, said to him, "Simon Peter lovest thou me?" he answered that he did. Well then, replied Jesus, "feed my sheep." Jesus interrogated him again, saying, "Simon Peter, lovest thou me?" Peter answered, "I do Lord." Jesus said unto him, "feed my lambs." In this case we perceive there was an exertion to be made for the benefit of those that had not that power and information, but this alone is not sufficient.

Had Moses, for instance, having done all that he did, had he delivered Israel from Egyptian bondage, and having done all that he could and all that mortal man could do for their redemption, having done all in his power, and been willing to lay down his life and to sacrifice every thing that he had to accomplish that work, would he have secured the people to himself, and have brought about that union which was so necessary without any exertion on their part? No, most assuredly it would not have been accomplished, for there had to be a return, an exertion on their part, in order to secure that union and that love, and to secure that fellowship between them and him, which it was necessary should exist; and so it is in reference to Jesus Christ, though he has sacrificed himself and laid the plan for the redemption of the people, yet unless the people labor to obtain that union between him and them, their salvation never will be accomplished. Thus we see that something has to be done by either party in order to secure each other's friendship and to bind us together as a community.

Now let an individual possess information and intelligence, and let that individual be one who holds the holy priesthood, a man who has been in the church for years and years; let him be one that is filled with knowledge and understanding, and let him go to work and look about him, or in other words let him consider there are others around him that are less favored than himself, and that they are not all so strong, nor so forward in the blessings and graces of the gospel as he is. Let him reflect that those around him desire the intelligence and blessings that God has given him through his greater experience in the things of the kingdom: then begin to impart that information to those around him, and to communicate his strength to those that are weak, and shadow forth his light to those who are in darkness; then, so far as regards himself, he is doing that which is necessary for him to do to secure their good feelings and affections to himself.

But let him take the opposite course, and think of improving his own dear self, and that there is only himself to be saved, that all he has to accomplish is to secure life and salvation for himself, and only think of his own sins, to reform himself and to take care of himself. A man who takes this course is going upon a principle that will always keep him bound up and contracted in his feelings and contracted in his views, and will never accomplish the thing that is desired.

As for instance you let an individual keep his ideas and knowledge to himself, in going on to acquire any information in relation to any particular branch of study or business, will he ever accomplish the thing that is required?

A great many pursue this course in reference to their mechanical skill, but this is not the right way.

In pursuing any kind of study a man has to continue to work, and after going through one course he has to go through again, and keep to work in order to make himself master of them, and he never will master them near so well as by communicating his information while engaged in gaining it. Let him go to work and gather up his friends and endeavor to give them the same knowledge that he has received, and he then begins to find himself being enlightened upon those things which he never would have known unless by pursuing that course of teaching and imparting the information he is in possession of unto others. Any one that has been a school teacher will understand me well upon this point.

So you perceive that he who indulges in this narrow contracted kind of feeling, instead of benefiting himself in keeping the knowledge he possesses within himself, he is the loser in considering that by keeping all he has received to himself he would be exalted in spirit, in knowledge and intelligence.

Let a man remember that there are others that are in darkness and that have not advanced so far in knowledge, wisdom and intelligence, and let him impart that knowledge, intelligence and power unto his friends and brethren, inasmuch as he is further advanced than they are, and by so doing he will soon discover that his mind will expand, and that light and knowledge which he had gained would increase and multiply more rapidly.

I have heard Bro. Kimball state that when he was very much downhearted he would find somebody worse than himself and endeavor to comfort him up, and by so doing he would comfort himself, and increase in spirit and life. It is upon this principle that I am speaking.

If you want to secure the friendship and affections of your friends go to work and comfort them with that light which you have received, remembering those blessings came down from God, and that by doing this you are only doing what every man should do.

Those of you who have got the priesthood, go and make friends among the individuals by whom you are surrounded; or select one and try to start his feelings, his faith, his circumstances and his mind and try to enlighten them and if they are sinners, endeavor to save them from their sins, and bring them from their bondage in which they are placed to participate in the light and liberty which you participate in, for in this way you can do good through the information which the Lord has imparted to you. In this way you will discover that their minds will be drawn out towards you, and their affections will be gained and centered upon you.

In order that this thing may be accomplished and in order that those blessings which are necessary may be secured, and that the feelings and faith that we want as a people may be secured to us, we have to go to work individually and more anxiously, more ambitiously than we have done before to bind each other's feelings together.

Now for instance, take a shepherd who has charge of a large flock of sheep: he goes into his field and his flock hastens to gather around him, and follow after him. How is this accomplished? The shepherd has gone from day to day and from time to time with plenty of salt, and they discover that he has it with him every time he makes his appearance, and that he has those things that are necessary to supply their wants. They learn by experience that he has looked after their welfare, and they appreciate his kindness; it is a good deal so among men.

If you will allow me to carry out the figure, tho' perhaps it may not apply quite so well as some other, but it is the one now upon my mind. You let the President of your settlement, or the Bishop, or President Brigham Young for instance—continue to administer incessantly among this people, and let them do all that individuals will call upon them to do; they will be worn down, and as brother Kimball was speaking, unless there is something done by the people as a return for that which is done by those men there never will be a perfect people, but will be very far off from perfection. And it is still more so in regard to the cultivation of that feeling which is necessary for us to have one for another.

In regard to the shepherd's flock of sheep what do they do in reference to making a return for the good that is done to them? Is it sufficient for them to return one tenth part of their wool, which would be a very great source of benefit providing they only give that? If one of them could speak and say we will give you one tenth part of our wool for the purpose of manifesting unto you our gratitude, would not that be a very good and proper acknowledgement?

But they do more than this, they do as Bro. Kimball was speaking, they put everything into the reservoir, they return their entire fleece. This secures a very good feeling in the shepherd or in the bosom of the farmer towards the sheep that he had been administering to, and they find themselves, after the next year comes round, in possession of a great abundance.

Well, I was thinking of these things as Bro. Kimball was speaking this morning. If the people had confidence in the things which are taught, and they would let their minds expand, and throw in their substance for the establishment of Zion and the extension of the kingdom of God, they would learn that it is the very principle upon which they would receive stores of those things which they are after.

But there is a fearfulness in the minds of the people, they are afraid to trust their substance in the hands of the Lord, but if we expect acts of kindness and affection; if we understand our true position and want to secure the affections of the Almighty and all good men so that they will be bound to us we have got to do something that will secure to us those affections, and other manifestations of that kindness which we have previously participated in.

If individuals would look upon this principle as they should look upon it, view it in its proper light they would take much more pains than they do, for they would see the necessity of binding the feelings of their brethren together, they would see and understand the importance of this more than they do at the present time, and they would enter into the spirit of it. We might carry this principle into families, and illustrate upon it quite largely.

For instance, if you ever secure a union in any family in Zion, if you ever secure that heavenly union which is necessary to exist there you have got to bind that family together in one, and there has got to be the Spirit of the Lord in the head of that family and he should possess that light and that intelligence which if carried out in the daily life and conduct of those individuals, will prove the salvation of that family, for he holds their salvation in his hands.

He goes to work and associates his feelings and affections with theirs, as far as lies in his power, and endeavors to secure all those things that are necessary for their comfort and welfare, and they on the other part have got to turn round and manifest the same feeling, the same kindness and the same disposition, and to the utmost of their ability manifest feelings of gratitude for the blessings which they receive.

This is necessary that there may be a oneness of feeling, or oneness of sentiment and a corresponding affection, that they being one may be bound together in this way. Now it is just the same in regard to ourselves as neighbors, as Saints of God, as individuals that hold the Priesthood, and that have traveled in the light of truth and got the power of God upon them, and who know what Salvation is.

The things of God have been revealed to this people that they may go to work and obtain more faith and more confidence in God than any other people upon the face of the whole earth. We have to eat, drink, and clothe ourselves, as well as other people, but in gaining these things we should regard sacredly each other's rights. When two individuals are bound together, as they eventually must be if they ever stand in the presence of God, rather than to take a course to injure each other's feelings, when they are united as they should be, and as they will be, they would sooner have a limb severed from their body, they would sooner suffer anything that could be executed upon them than to disturb or hurt each other's feelings. There would be the same love that existed between David and Jonathan. Before David would do anything to disturb the feelings of Jonathan he would have suffered a hundred-fold of trouble to come upon himself. I think we sometimes pass by those things which are of such great importance. I often think of the little anecdote that is recorded in the Bible about the sons of the Prophets. On a certain occasion when the sons of the Prophets were cutting timber, it appears that the axe fell off the handle into the water, and it seemed there was a great disturbance in the feelings of the young Prophets. Why, says one, "master, the axe was borrowed," and it seems there was quite an anxiety about the axe on account of its being borrowed property. I have thought that had the circumstance transpired in these days the expression would have been on this wise, "O it is no matter, master, the axe was borrowed." But in those days they had feelings in regard to their neighbors, and in consequence of this the power of God could be manifested for the purpose of raising the axe from the bottom of the water. Thus we see they had feelings of interest for the welfare of their neighbors, and friends as well for themselves.

Now an individual in order to secure the highest and greatest blessings to himself, in order to secure the approbation of the Almighty, and in order to continually improve in the things pertaining to righteousness he must do all things to the best advantage. Let him go to work and be willing to sacrifice for the benefit of his friends. If he wants to build himself up, the best principle he can do it upon is to build up his friends. This is the same principle I wish to refer your minds to in relation to the master who wished to make himself perfect in those sciences which he had partially studied, and he did it by communicating to his scholars that information which he had obtained, and he did it again and again, and by teaching them he improved himself.

Your brethren who are going forward in any undertaking, and who want to get rich, and who want to make large farms, to get many wives and to extend your household and your popularity, you make up your minds to make your wives comfortable, to feed and clothe your children and do those things that are required of you, but while you are engaged in this let your minds be expanded to comprehend and look after the interest of your friends who are around you, and where it is in your power to secure benefits to your friends do so, and in so doing you will find that those things which you need will come into your hands quicker than if you labor entirely to secure them to yourselves independent of regarding the interests of your friends. I know this is a good and important principle.

Now if a man has been blest of the Lord, and has got information from the eternal world, has been endowed with much grace and knowledge from on high, and is one to whom the Lord has imparted many great and glorious blessings, when he comes in contract with his friends who are around him, and who have not had this advantage and this experience, if they in their arrangements should run across his track let him exercise those godly feelings which will tend to secure their confidence and good will. And just so far as he exercises them above that of his fellows he exhibits the education that he has received in the principles of righteousness, and just in proportion as a person does this to those who are ignorant around him, just in that proportion will he secure the good feelings of those individuals; it cannot do otherwise. Peradventure in a future day when through the mercy of the Lord that darkness is taken away, and they receive the knowledge that you have, they will discover that you have acted upon the principles of mercy and salvation, and in consequence of that you secure their good feelings, their faith, their prayers and their confidence; this is upon natural principles. You will find that wherever you exhibit a feeling of brotherly love you secure that brotherly friendship and kindness which is so desirable. I can refer you to your own experience in this; I can think of a thousand instances of the kind. I can think of thousands of instances where brother Brigham and brother Heber imparted to me certain knowledge and blessings under certain circumstances then surrounding me; I remember them, they are fresh in my memory, and those acts have secured a feeling in my bosom that never could have been there had not those acts of kindness created it. You take the same course and so far as you have exercised yourself in the priesthood, and secured the blessings and knowledge of your priesthood, you just may work for your friends upon the same principle, and if you consider the circumstances by which they are surrounded and act so far as may be consistent with your calling, and if they have got the spirit that is wrong and that you perceive would lead to apostacy go to work and see what they want, and see what portion of information you can impart to them. If they want those things that are good and you see that through their misfortune and weakness they have got into darkness, try to get that spirit from them, and you will discover when they have overcome the evils of their nature, and secured their salvation, you will find that you have bound their feelings to you in such a way they never will be severed, and when you need a manifestation of friendship you will always find a friend in time of need. Now this can be done, but not without some self-sacrifice. We have just got to feel, brethren, that there are other people besides ourselves; we have got to look into the hearts and feelings of others, and become more godly than we are now.

We should be bound together and act like David and Jonathan as the heart of one, and sooner let our arm be severed from our bodies than injure each other. What a mighty people we would be if we were in this condition, and we have got to go into it, however little feelings of friendship we may have in exercise at the present time. I can just tell you that the day will come when we must become united in this way if we ever see the presence of God. We shall have to learn to love our neighbors as we love ourselves. We must go into this, however far we are from it at the present time, yet no matter, we must learn these principles and establish them in our bosoms. Now this I can see clearly, and that is the reason why I talk about these matters in the style in which I do, for I wish to plant them in the minds of the Saints, and to have these things among their every day feelings. I see that some of the Saints are laying a foundation to destroy the confidence of their brethren. If a person will allow himself to fall into temptation of this kind because others do, and to transgress the law of right, to come in contact with things that pertain to the rights of his brethren, and trample upon the interest of his brethren, he may see the day that he will repent in sorrow and not have forgiveness as soon as he would like.

Now let a person trample upon the interests of Bro. Brigham, while he is endeavoring to do him good, would he not find that his confidence in God is departing? A man that would do this would just as soon trample upon the rights of the Lord, for he is doing this, and the man that will trample upon the rights of his brethren, no matter who they are, he will trample upon the rights of any man, if he can do it and get along without being particularly punished. If in our movements and dealings with each other we are seriously tempted in these matters, we have got to know that it is our business to learn to secure the peace and happiness of those who are around us, and never take a course to trample upon the feelings and rights of our neighbors. Let a man go and trample upon the rights of a brother and how long would it take him to destroy that feeling of confidence that had heretofore existed between them? And when once destroyed how long will it take to establish that feeling which once existed between them? It will take a great while. This is what we have to place our eye upon; I feel it so; in all our thinking, in all our movements and in our secret meditations we want to let our minds reflect upon the interests of all around; and to consider that they have rights and privileges as well as ourselves; we ought to have this firmly established in our minds.

Now you take a man who is continually looking after the interests of the people around him, and let him feel to bless anything and all things that belongs to his brethren, and he will in this way establish happiness in himself and around him. Let a man take the opposite course and instead of blessing and laboring for the benefit of others, find fault and pull down, will he make the same improvement? Assuredly he will not.

I think the people are very good and that they feel first rate towards Bro. Brigham and the general authorities of the Church, they feel to bless them all the time. At the same time they do not feel in the way I think they might feel; but they feel like blessing and actually do have a first rate good feeling, especially when filled with the good spirit as they have been of late. They have not been accustomed to make any sacrifice of a temporal

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 27, 1857.

A Friendly Word With Life Illustrated.

A few weeks since we published on the front page of our paper an article from Life Illustrated, entitled—"The Mormons, Who and What They Are, and What They Propose." A subsequent number of that paper contains a second article on "The Mormons," to which our attention has been directed. Of the first, we said that it was "a very fair article;" but of the second we regret that we cannot say even that much. The publishers seem dreadfully afraid that our short favorable notice of them, as publishers, "enterprising men" and "reformers in their line," would lead any one to suppose that something like an entente cordiale existed between them and us. If we published entire the first article, because it was not "tainted with hell fire and brimstone"—as articles generally are about Mormonism—the exclusion from our columns of the second notice will readily lead to the inference that we cannot pay it the same high compliment.

Our favorable notice of Messrs. Fowler and Wells has been entirely perverted. Our language was, we think, sufficiently simple and clear to indicate our appreciation, as we then thought, of their honesty, as petits historians and the direction where, we believe, they had dilligently labored with some advantage to themselves and others. We were charitably disposed to regard their "inaccuracies" in the first article on "The Mormons," &c., as "not intended;" but that we had a too exalted opinion of their honor is quite possible, and, judging from the second scratch of their pen, we think it quite probable. In acknowledging, however, the probability of our error, we willingly confess that, in spite of all the fighting which the wickedness, malignity and misrepresentation of our enemies require us to engage in, by way of self-defence, we are ever disposed to attribute to men good motives, where we suppose that we can discover any indications of fairness, more frequently than a subsequent relationship and closer acquaintance has confirmed; but, with it all, we prefer to change our good opinion of a person, as in the present instance, than hastily conclude that all men are continually wicked. In justice to the gentlemen we will give them credit for correcting the salient and only error we pointed out to them in their first article; but it would have afforded us much pleasure could we have said that the correction was freely made.

"The Mormon is not far from the truth when it asserts that the 'Prophet,' Joseph Smith, and his brother, Hyrum, were 'assassinated in prison,' and we accept its correction of the intimation in our first article that these men were 'taken from jail and executed.'"

What necessity is there for saying "not far from the truth!" It would have reflected more honor on the repentant to have confessed freely the error than to bring it out with such a statement. They were assassinated, and every intelligent person who knows anything of the bloody deed, knows that it was a premeditated assassination. We are ashamed to think that men, with the claims to public confidence, of the stamp of Fowler and Wells, would so far allow the present excitement to prostitute their pen and lead them to seek to shuffle, and dodge away from the facts of history and call the cold blooded murder of such men, unconvicted of any crime, "simply the effect of a popular outbreak," "to be deplored," but "by no means a singular occurrence." To drag a line of truth from some journalists is apparently as painful an operation and causes them as much twitching, twisting and expectorating as if they were subjected to the operations of dentistry.

The writer in Life Illustrated says:

"It is substantially true that the Smiths were murdered after their voluntary surrender, and that the deed was done by a mob of lawless men, but the Mormon is quite wrong in denouncing Gov. Ford as the instigator of that act."

Whatever our opinions may be of the part played by Gov. Ford in that dire tragedy, one thing is certain that we did not say that he was "the instigator of that act." Of his course we have a deep-rooted opinion; but as we have not expressed it and the writer in Life Illustrated only charges us with saying and not thinking the quotation of our words are sufficient to show that his purpose was misrepresentation. In the article in THE MORMON referred to, we said:

"They were assassinated in prison, though Tom Ford, the Governor, had pledged his honor and that of the State of Illinois, that their persons would be secure from injury or insult: a promise made to the martyrs and to their friends, after the Officers of the troops had pledged themselves to the Governor to defend the lives of these worthy men."

In his proclamation from Quincy, Ill., two days after the assassination, Gov. Ford says:

"I desire to make a brief but true statement of the recent disgraceful affair at Carthage, in regard to the Smiths, so far as circumstances have come to my knowledge. The Smiths, Joseph and Hyrum, have been assassinated in gaol, by whom it is not known, but will be ascertained. I pledged myself for their safety; and upon the assurance of that pledge, they surrendered as prisoners. The Mormons surrendered the public arms in their possession; and the Nauvoo Legion submitted to the command of Captain Singleton, of Brown county, deputed for that purpose by me. All these things were required to satisfy the old citizens of Hancock that the Mormons were peaceably disposed, and to allay jealousy and excitement in their minds. It appears, however, that the compliance of the Mormons with every requisition made upon them, failed of that purpose. The pledge of security to the Smiths was not given upon my individual responsibility. Before I gave it, I obtained a pledge of honor by a unanimous vote from the officers and men under my command, to sustain me in performing it. If the assassination of the Smiths was committed by any portion of these, they have added treachery to murder, and have done all they could to disgrace the State and sully the public honor."

The foregoing extract from Gov. Ford's own pen certainly sustains what we said on the subject. Our neighbor must get into the habit of being correct.—Take it back.

As Life Illustrated has already made an important correction about the assassination in Carthage jail, we beg to submit for reconsideration the paragraph of the second article wherein it is stated that:

"Joseph Smith fired at the first man, one Willis, who entered the room in which he was confined, and broke his wrist."

It is a pity to see so many efforts at misrepresentation. The idea conveyed by the paragraph alluded to, is, that Joseph was the first to fire and was afterwards shot "in attempting to escape by the window." Now the writer must have known better, or, if he did not know better, he ought not to have written on the subject, for only ignorance or wickedness would lead him to pen such a statement. The mob or "the militia force of two hundred men" sent a shower of balls through the door, and killed Hyrum Smith before Joseph drew upon them the only pistol they had in prison. He fired on the crowd of blood-hounds coming up the stairs after they had fired and slain his brother, and not as Life Illustrated states for its own purpose of misrepresentation.

In is stated in the article to which we reply that we had paid "a high compliment to the fairness and impartiality of this paper;" but that is another misrepresentation for an obvious purpose. Our allusions were to Messrs. Fowlers and Wells "as writers on general instruction." We are considerably acquainted with their published works; but only very slightly with the newspaper that bears their name, and we are not fully satisfied that the offensive article before us is from the pen of either—if in this we are also mistaken we will plead guilty again to our weakness and destroy the last vestage of our good opinion of them. The writer, whoever he may be, seems to feel bad at being corrected by us, and, between wounded pride and apprehension of it being considered he "intended to cast a favorable light upon the Mormon business," he jumps right into the midst of the present popular charges against His Excellency Governor Young and the Mormons in Utah with such hearty good will that he certainly now clears his reputation of "even the appearance" of anything like favor for the Mormons, if any one ever suspected him of that awful crime.

We have so often replied to the present charges about rebellion against the goverment, making arrangements with the Indians, stirring them up to acts of violence against the Gentiles, that we let them pass without further notice. It is, however, new to us that President Young "knows no fear of God or man." Men he fears not, and asks no favors from them, certainly; but if one man upon the earth fears the God of Abraham more than another, that man is Brigham Young. His whole life, his word and his actions, show that he not only fears God but trusts in Him. Nothing but the fear of the Most High, his unceasing desire to serve Him in the hope of a glorious resurrection with the Just, would keep him in the rugged, thorny path in which he walks.

The writer says that "the aim of the Mormons is universal rule, and to this tend all their energies, and they will be content to wait a century, if once sure of their way." They are sure of their way and will wait as long as the Lord wishes them; but come it will—the Lord has decreed that righteousness will yet cover the earth as the waters cover the mighty deep.

Visit to Connecticut.

PURSUANT to previous appointment, in company with Prest. A. M. Cannon, of the Philadelphia Conference, we left here on Saturday afternoon last, to hold a preaching meeting near Northfield, in Connecticut. We arrived there on Sabbath afternoon following. A fine congregation, consisting of ladies and gentlemen, were present, and gave us their undivided attention for some two hours that we addressed them. Our subject was on the "Apostacy of the Church" and the Restoration of the Gospel by the Administration of a Holy Angel, according to Rev. xiv. 6, 7. All appeared well pleased with what they had heard, and behaved themselves as if they knew in what becoming manners, good breeding, and treatment to strangers, consisted, not merely nominal, but in reality; for their behavior showed conclusively that they were meritoriously worthy the name of ladies and gentlemen,

They wish to hear both sides—for and against us—and then decide for themselves. This is all we ask of anyone, and not condemn us unheard. We believe there are some honest souls in that neighborhood, unfettered by priestcraft—or false tradition—who are not afraid of calumny or the finger of scorn when convinced of the truth, and independence enough to embrace it.

We sincerely hope they will investigate, comprehend, and understand the principles of salvation as revealed from Heaven in these days, obey the same, and be prepared to have a part in the First Resurrection and an inheritance in the celestial kingdom of our God.

A meeting was published to be held at the same place on Sabbath, July 5, at 2 P. M.

In the evening Prest. Cannon preached near Westport. Good attention was given to his discourse by those present; but some outside behaved as though they had been "drove up" instead of their being "brought up," which no doubt they were. Good breeding, and becoming manners are, like truth, in these degenerate times, scarce to find; and wherever they do exist, they command our respect and admiration.

On Monday morning we returned to New York. Prest. Cannon left Westport for New Haven on business, and will return to New York, and thence to Philadelphia during the present week.

Fourth of July.

THROUGH a pressure of other matter the following communication was crowded out of our last issue:

WESTPORT, CONN., June 17, '57.

PREST. APPLEBY—Dear Brother: In behalf of the Westport and Norwalk Branch we tender you, and through you, an invitation to all the Saints under your presidency to meet us at Norwalk on the 4th of July, to celebrate the anniversary of American Independence.

All those who anticipate coming should take the New Haven train, which leaves New York at 7 o'clock, A.M., from the corner of 27th street and 4th ave. The cars will leave Norwalk at 5 1-2 in the afternoon, so that all who wish to return the same day can do so. The Saints east of the Westport and Norwalk Branch will make their arrangements to meet the Saints at Norwalk about the same time as those who arrive west. At the arrival of the Saints, we intend taking a sloop at South Norwalk, and proceed to an island in the bay known as the Nauvoo Island, which was so christened a number of years ago by the Gentiles on account of the Saints holding their festivals there.

We intend to furnish the brethren and sisters who may honor us with their company with a regular "Yankee clam bake."

An oration will be delivered by Prest. W. I. Appleby, also addresses by Elders Angus M. Cannon, T. B. H. Stenhouse, Dr. Clinton, Prest. Wm. H. Miles, and others. The Declaration of Independence will be read by Prest. Cannon. The band and choir will be conducted by Elder C. R. Savage.

President, E. R. YOUNG.
Secretary, JOSEPH BOUTON.

Arrivals.

ELDER PETER HARROCKS arrived in this city on the 14th inst. from Great Salt Lake City, which he left on the 1st of May. He is on a mission to England, but will stay here till the arrival of the other missionaries appointed to that country. Elder H. is in excellent health and buoyant spirits, is doing considerable fireside preaching among his relatives, who have not, fortunately for his comfort and convenience, sipped at the venomous cup of bigotry and persecution that is so freely handed round at the present moment.

Elder Christian Hyer arrived here on Saturday from the West. He was appointed a mission at Great Salt Lake City in the fall of '55, to labor among the Scandinavians in the States. He has labored extensively in Illinois and Wisconsin among his countrymen, and preached when and where he had opportunity, and has had considerable up-hill work. He is now, by the appointment of President Erastus Snow, en route for Philadelphia, to await the arrival of the ship Tuscarora, as she brings a considerable number of Scandinavian Saints. His letter of appointment states: "He is appointed to labor among the Danish Saints in the United States, and is fully authorized to regulate and set in order the Branches, as he may be led by the Holy Ghost."

We are glad to see Elder Hyer in our midst, and believe that he will be a blessing to his countrymen, if they give diligent heed to his counsels and reduce them to practice. While in the eastern States, he will labor under the direction of President Appleby, and wherever he may be, will doubtless throw in his moiety of labor for the well-being of the cause in general.

Arrival at St. Louis of the Missionaries from Utah.

BY letter from Elder Henry Lunt, dated St. Louis, June 16th, we learn of the safe arrival of our brethren at that place. He says:

"Yesterday some twenty-five missionaries arrived from Utah on missions to the States and to various parts of the world. They crossed the plains with hand-carts, look hearty, cheerful, happy, and have brought a good portion of the spirit of Zion with them."

Should our paper with the notice of the Fourth of July fixing in Connecticut meet the eye of those destined for this part of the world, or those passing here we hope they will arrive in time for the "clam bake."

The New York Police Squabble.

GOTHAM has got over the rough of the police squabble. The City-Hall is restored to its usual quiet, and the "M. P's" are lounging about the streets and squares in their proverbial laziness. The remainder of the "revolution," "insurrection," "miserable fizzle," or whatever a partisan may choose to christen it, has got to be accomplished by the gentlemen of the law. Mayor Wood is likely to slip out of the charge against him for resisting Coroner Perry's warrant of apprehension. His Honor did'nt know what the Coroner wanted, and some dozen are ready to make affidavit that he kept his mission secret; and, therefore, His Honor's refusal to see Coroner Perry—as that gentleman understood himself to be at that moment—was only intended for Mr. Perry!

The constitutionality of the "Metropolitan District Police bill" that has caused all this confusion, hubbub, and broken heads is before the Court of Appeals at Albany. Both parties have been heard, and both are sanguine of a successful verdict. The Black Republicans seem to have the largest dose of faith. The decision of the Court is expected during the present week.

Senator Douglas on Utah.

THE Hon. Stephen A. Douglas, Senator from Illinois, has been on a visit to Springfield, the capitol of the State, and "at the request of the grand jury in attendance upon the United States Court," has delivered an address, or as he expresses it, "he was requested to discuss" the three absorbing topics of the day—

"The present condition and prospects of Kansas.

The principles affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Dred Scott case.

The condition of things in Utah and the appropriate remedies for existing evils."

A proper notice of his statements and argument on Utah must be reserved for next week, as the evidently prepared report of his speech has only reached us after sufficient copy for the present issue of our paper was in the hands of the typos. There is, besides, nothing in it that will spoil by keeping it eight days in the dark, indeed, had it always remained there the world might have wagged on as before without experiencing any very great inconvenience, or been subjected to the horrors of a famine for knowledge. The Senator has, however, spoken and the sounds have been re-echoed East, West, North and South; his elaborate and very eloquent speech has been extensively commented upon and still is before the public; we think, however, that a word in THE MORMON next week will be soon enough.

Clear the Track.

THE editor of the New Orleans Commercial Bulletin has had the honor of a visit from McLean the murderer, and gives the following gratuitous advice—gratuitous, we presume, as the editor is not likely to have drawn on a Mormon purse for his trouble, and being "hail fellow well met" with McLean, whom he calls a "gentleman," we guess he gives his advice "free, gratis and for nothing." Here it is:

"We advise Mormon spies here, as elsewhere, to give Mr. McLean as wide a berth as possible. His company to them will prove extremely disagreeable, to say the least of it."

We don't doubt that the murderer wants "as wide a berth as possible"—perhaps some power has recalled to his remembrance the law of the Almighty:—"Whosoever shedeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed." "A wide berth" will doubtless be very desirable, as the contrary might "prove extremely disagreeable, to say the least of it," to both the cursed of the Almighty and the avenger. Reflection on this may improve the peace of mind of the murderer, it is, at least, given with the same kindly feeling for his interest as that in which the Bulletin gives his to the Mormons.

A Cure for Polygamy.

THE Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune announces that the government has hit upon the effectual cure for Polygamy. He says:

Washington, June 24.

"It is semi-officially announced that certain Mormons will be hanged for treason, but not punished for polygamy."

String them up! At least try it. Make your gibbets; but don't forget the little story of Haman and Mordecai.

Mrs McLean.

THIS unfortunate lady is, we are informed, pursued by her enemies—of her own household—who are seeking to imprison her on the plea of insanity. The St. Louis Sunday Herald, June 16th, gives an account of their chase after her in that city, and her escape on to the plains. It is very desirable to get up a plea of insanity—she can tell a thing or two—McLean should pursue her over the plains—he will get "a wide berth" there, or a narrow one, just which he likes.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

GEN. WM. WALKER and the Nicaraguan braves have been moving about the city during the last eight days in a sort of half-public, half-private style, closely attended by reporters who jot down where they sat for photographs, where they took a sandwich, a glass of wine, or a cigar, and where they spent their evenings—with Wallack or Laura Keene—and what they said when called on for "a speech" between acts. The gist of Walker's addresses has been thanks for American sympathy and back again to Nicaragua. He plays very successfully the Napoleonic—say little.

Commissioner Reed has had a "complimentary dinner" from the citizens of Philadelphia previous to his departure for China. His response to the complimentary toast, which was "drank with great enthusiasm," was very nicely put together, and as intended it should be, pleased marvelously the Philadelphians who heard it—we are a big lot of folks.

Governor Walker of Kansas got out his message some weeks ago, and to this has added "a speech" at Topeka. He was sore on the Free State "let-alone" policy, sustained the administration who sent him, and avowed, over and over again, his determination to see fair play at the ballot box, and that he should contend for the Constitution, shortly to be framed by the Convention of delegates, being submitted to the vote of the people.

Two days after the Territoral Governor's speech, Charles Robinson, the "Free State Governor," sent in his message to the Free State Legislature of Bleeding Kansas, assembled at that same Topeka, reiterating past grievances and expressing the determination to stand for their rights, and die in their defence if need be. He handles roughly Gov. Walker's message, and has caused a regular glorification among the "nigger worshippers."

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

PRUSSIA and Neuchatel have about terminated their differences. If the feeling of the Swiss people may be judged from the sentiments of the Chief who put down the insurrection at Neuchatel, they would have preferred a brush with the Prussians to a diplomatic arrangement, of the nature of which they have been kept in the dark.

Spain is making extensive preparations for war with Mexico. The Mexican Minister, who got to the Spanish Capitol a short time since, and who anticipated a friendly solution of the difficulties, seems now to think he has a hopeless task. President Comonfort and his government are making their best preparations for opposing the troops of their royale antagoniste. France and England are reported to be considerably interested in this prospective squabble.

No fresh news from China. Yeh is reported embarrassed for cash to carry on hostilities against the "English barbarians."

"The Jewish Disabilities Bill" is again before the British Parliament, and has been read a second time before the Commons.

The very extensive premises of the great carriers, Pickford & Co., situated at the Great Northern Railway Station, London, have been destroyed by fire and caused an immense loss of property.

Douglas Jerrold, the great novelist and, latterly, the editor of "Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper," died in London on the 8th inst., after a painful illness of ten days duration. He has written many works which have ranked him among the first British dramatists. His sympathies were ever strong with the "third class" of British society, from which he sprung—and their position, woes and oppression were faithfully reflected in his writings, both as a novelist and editor. His son, Blanchard Jerrold, succeeds him in the editorial chair.

The scenery of the Theatre des Acquedotti, at Florence, took fire on the 7th instant, which caused a great panic among the audience, and, in their attempt to escape, two hundred persons were killed and wounded.

A telegraphic despatch received at Bombay from Meerut states that there had been open mutiny in some portion of the East India army now in Persia. Evidences of conspiracy for a general rising of the whole army are said to have been discovered.

A strong breeze is likely to spring up between Turkey and Belgium. The former has requested the government of the latter to recall their minister, and they refuse.

☞ The columns of THE MORMON are open to the correspondence and articles of the Elders; but, while we believe in according full liberty to all, we hold ourselves irresponsible for the particular sentiments of any.

Correspondence from Indiana.

CANNELTON, Ia., June 20, 1857.

PREST. W. I. APPLEBY—Dear Bro.: It has been some time since I wrote a piece for the "MORMON," though I promised brother George J. Taylor that I would do so often. The fact is I have been too busy, until lately, assisting in the emigration at St. Louis, to attend to anything else. After the departures of Presidents J. Taylor, E. Snow, J. H. Hart, and over a hundred others from that city, on the 11th inst., I was appointed to visit this place to regulate the affairs of the branch here, preach the gospel in the adjoining towns wherever I can find an opening, visit Cincinnati and the surrounding branches, and also my former field of labor in Arkansas. On my arrival here the Saints received me with joy and gratitude, for they had long been wishing for some one to come that they might renew their covenants and receive more of the spirit of God. They have been without a shepherd, as it were, for some time past, and grievous wolves have entered into the fold from time to time, not sparing even the tender lambs of the flock. Some have been led astray by lying and seducing spirits, but I believe that by faithful labor and the assistance of the Holy Ghost that the most of these can be reclaimed and brought back into the fold.

The minds of this community are greatly prejudiced against us as a people, and it requires a great amount of faith and perseverance on the part of a servant of God to induce them to even listen to one argument. Many, very many of them, will reject the gospel without once hearing it. Instead of receiving a servant of God and heeding his warning voice they had much rather give him a coat of tar and feathers and ride him out of the country on a rail, or imbue their hands in his blood. Well, I am not astonished at this, for it is the spirit that prevails everywhere. I would have been much surprised to have found Cannelton an exception to the general rule. Since my return from the mountains I have noticed carefully the state of society wherever I have traveled, and it is evident to my mind that iniquity of every kind is on the increase. This, I think, is acknowledged by every observer who has any regard for the truth. What does this prove? Why, it proves that "Christianity" so called, is an imposition, that instead of enlightening and elevating mankind in the scale of being, it is demoralizing him, and sinking him lower and lower in vice and iniquity. There is not a town in all this nation that lacks churches or "religious" societies or ministers, and it is a fact pregnant with meaning that wherever these abound most, there the most crime is committed; the more ministers a community has the more prostitutes can be found in it; the more churches, the more brothel houses; the more Bibles, the more trashy, love-sick and licentious novels. These are facts, and yet how little heeded are they. When I allow my mind to run out on this subject and meditate on the degenerate condition of my races I mourn before the Lord, and feel to unite my petition with that of the souls of the martyrs under the throne of God asking for vengeance on a guilty world. Not but what I love my fellow beings, for that I prove by my acts, but that I hate iniquity.

I will ask a question. Suppose that the principles and doctrines taught by the Savior had been carried out from the time of his death until the present, what would now be the state of society? Would there be as many sects and parties as there now are, or as many whoredoms and murders committed? No, verily! Such words as Catholic, Methodist, Democrat, Whig, would not be known to our vocabulary. The people would be one; one Church with Jesus Christ at its head would embrace all the inhabitants of the earth, political differences, party strifes and the vices of this "enlightened" age would be unknown. Well, this is the state of society that Mormonism contemplates bringing about, and who dare say that it will not accomplish it? Has it not in the last twenty-seven years accomplised more good than "Christianity" has for the last eighteen hundred years? Yes, and for this simple reason—it is ancient Christianity restored again to earth. Mormonism is the principles and doctrines taught by the Savior and his apostles—it is truth, virtue and intelligence, and as such it must prevail, it will prevail. Priestcraft, kingcraft, murder, whoredom and every species of wickedness must flee before it until the earth is redeemed, the people purified and all things restored to their primeval beauty and perfection. When I contemplate the wonder working of this grand scheme I am filled with praise and thanksgiving that I have been permitted to livo in this dispensation, and that my mind has been enlightened by the spirit of truth. In the bonds of unity, I am your affectionate brother,

JOSIAH M. COOMBS.

Correspondence of Elder Charles Williams.

PHILADELPHIA, June 18, 1857.

ELDER T. B. H. STENHOUSE—Dear Brother: Believing that you are ever pleased to learn of the progress of the Redeemer's work, I have thought that a few lines about our doings in my vicinity might be acceptable.

It is now some ten months since I was appointed by President Angus M. Cannon to go to a place called Meida, to open up the way, that the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ might be taught to the people dwelling in that vicinity. I travelled a few miles by the cars and on foot, the thermometer at the time standing at 106 degrees, and after a walk of about twenty miles, I succeeded in finding a few Saints. Some of them had grown so cold in the faith that it was a hard matter to tell whether they ever had enjoyed the spirit of Mormonism or not. After a little persevering labor the old spark began to shine again, and has got brighter and brighter, until it has become a star, or, to set aside figures, they are now a branch of twenty members in the Philadelphia Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Seven of the above members are new converts to the faith, the reward of my labors during my ministry in that section of country. My labor is limited to only one day in the week, and that day Sunday, as my weekly labors are required for the support of myself and family. On Sunday, the 7th inst., I was accompanied by President Cannon to the place where we hold our meetings, and had a first-rate time of it. President Cannon addressed the Saints, and spoke concerning the gifts and blessings of the Gospel to be obtained by being obedient unto its laws and ordinances; and, on the other hand, he pointed out to them the miseries and condemnation that awaited the transgressor. After the remarks made by President Cannon, the Saints rose and bore testimony to the truth of the work in which they were engaged, and manifested a spirit and determination to do the will of God to the best of their ability, as it may be made known unto them through His servants, in spite of the lies that are issued by the Press through the instrumentality of such Utah correspondents as Judge Drummond, and others. In the evening the Saints assembled together, when President Cannon proceeded to organize them into a branch of the Church, to be called the Providence Branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints of the Philadelphia Conference. Bro. William Panter was ordained an Elder, and was placed to preside over the Providence Branch, with Elder James Turnbull as secretary. Bros. Panter and Turnbull are good men, and with the co-operation of their brethren in the Priesthood the work will flourish, which, I pray God, may be so until His Gospel covers the earth as the waters cover the mighty deep. President Cannon returned the following day to the city, and, as usual, was right into business connected with the Church and the Kingdom of God.

I would draw my letter to a close, but there is an item yet that is worth noticing; it is concerning the ship Westmoreland, with the Scandinavian Saints, which arrived at our port on Sunday, the 31st of May. I had the pleasure of going on board and beholding some of my brethren and sisters in the Covenant of Christ. They were a clean and healthy set of people, and just the right sort for Utah; they seemed to me to be the most submissive and as humble a lot of Saints as ever crossed the great Atlantic; their countenances were beaming with joy, and their hearts rejoiced with gladness to think that the everlasting gospel had been restored to earth again, and that it had been sent unto their land and they had been made the happy recipients of the same. I became acquainted with two of the brethren by the names of Lilienquest and Christiansen, who could speak English pretty well, and they gave me a short account of their voyage, which was quite satisfactory. The passengers, one and all, spoke in the highest praise of Elder Mathias Cowley, the president of the ship's company, and likewise of his counsellors, Elders Lunt and Lilienquest; they said that they were good men, and just the right persons to preside over them during their journey across the sea. It does me good to hear the Saints speak well of my brethren. The Saints left our city on Tuesday, June 2, by way of Baltimore, Wheeling, and Iowa City. The arrangements per railroad were made by President Cannon, and everything went off first-rate. I need not praise or eulogize him, but in a few short sentences may say that he is esteemed and loved by all who know him. About 5 P.M. on the above day the cars proceeded on their way, amid the shouts of some three or four hundred people. I think if ever the spirits of his Satanic Majesty entered any human bodies, the majority of those that were present had legions, for the inducements they held out to try and lure the Saints from proceeding further on their journey would take me too long to tell; suffice it to say, through the good spirit of God and the admirable management and influence that Presidents Cannon and Cowley had over them, through their interpreters, the wicked did not succeed in any case, which made the devils rage. President Cannon and myself rode with them to Chester, and then left them to pursue their journey West. They were well pleased with the prospects of their journey, in which may God prosper them, is the desire and prayer of your brother in the Covenant of Christ.

CHARLES WILLIAMS.

[We have before, through President Cannon, heard of the missionary labors of Elder Williams and other faithful brethren under his charge, whose weekly labors have forced them, more or less, into the background, and take pleasure in giving such a communication as the above a place in our columns. We are ever pleased to hear from the Elders, and think our brethren, who labor during the week for the necessary means of support for their families, and who devote their day of rest to preaching the gospel, men deserving of the prayers and best wishes of all who love the Kingdom.—Ed.]

Governorship of Utah.

THE UTAH REBELLION—WHY M'CULLOCH DECLINED—MATRIMONIAL ARGUMENT.

WASHINGTON, June 17, 1857.

AGAIN the Governorship of Utah goes begging, ex-Governor Thomas, of Maryland having resigned it. Rumor assigns appointment now to three or four other parties,—but Mr. Cumming seems to be most likely to obtain it at this time. If offered to him now it is understood that he will accept. Since the President has decided definitely to send troops to Salt Lake to establish the supremacy of the law, there seems to be less anticipation of serious difficulty in effecting that object, which certainly ought to make it easier to find a suitable man to fill the office of Governor. The tone of such prominent Mormons as are within reach, is materially modified within the last week or two. They scout the idea of any collision, put on the air of men aggrieved by suspicion, and declare that the troops will find they have nothing whatever to do when they reach their destination.

HOW YOUNG WILL YIELD.

This is significant of returning senses or of a crafty foresight of the futility of any attempt to maintain open rebellion against Federal authority. The presence of an armed force sufficient to protect the officers of the law in the execution of its forms, at least, will put an end to overt acts of rebellion. That it will establish justice in that Territory there is little hope;—and hence arises the most serious difficulty which the Administration finds in dealing with the Mormon question. Nothing can be clearer than that Brigham Young, while yielding to legal forms, will take care, by suborning jurors as in the past, to use those forms themselves to work his will; while the ready obedience of his secret band of Danite assassins will find safe means of punishing and effectually suppressing any attempts to evade his commands.

SUBSTANTIAL REASONS FOR DECLINING OFFICE.

Major Ben McCulloch, who was here for several days, was again strenuously urged by the President to undertake the Governorship. The Major, among other reasons for declining, suggested that he would inevitably suffer in public estimation if he should undertake to fulfil the duties of that position, for the reason that the people would expect him to string up Brigham Young at once, and thrash his adherents soundly—gentle pastimes for indulgence in which he was well satisfied the Mormons would give him no pretext when they found him backed by troops. If a peaceful policy was to be pursued—as he believed it must be necessarily—the Major thought it better that some man of whom the public have a less ferocious idea, and consequently less ferocious expectations, should be the instrument of its initiation and developement at Salt Lake. The President was unwilling to let him off on this plea,—and then the Major fired his reserve,—informing the bachelor Executive that he couldn't go because he was intending to get married soon—a duty, the discharge of which he had neglected for forty years or more until his day of grace had nearly expired. This argument brought Mr. Buchanan down. He at once acknowledged its invincibility, and bowed his acquiescence.—[New York Daily Times.

June 18.

It is said that Col. Richardson, of Illinois, has declined the Governorship of Utah.

June 19.

A telegraphic despatch has been received from Emory D. Potter, accepting one of the Utah judgeships. He is an ex-member of Congress from Ohio. The other judgeship has been offered to Mr. Eckels, of Indiana, who will probably accept. It is uncertain whether Judge Stiles, who is now here, will return to the Territory. A well-founded report assigns the Marshalship of Utah to Thomas H. Dunn, of Mississippi. Col. Cumming will again be tendered the Governorship and his acceptance is considered certain.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE CAMPAIGN IN UTAH.

June 22.

Gen. Scott is here, having been sent for by the President to arrange matters with reference to the movements of troops for Utah. Their final orders are now being prepared. They are to act while in the Territory as a posse cometatus. The United States laws are to be enforced and strictly carried out, and the troops are not to interfere in any manner with the Mormons or their religion. It is the intention of the President that the Governor, Judges, Marshal, &c., shall all proceed to Utah together, doubtless with the United States troops.

[Daily Times, June 22.

THE APPOINTMENTS FOR UTAH COMPLETED—POSITION OF THE MORMONS—THE ONLY REMEDY FOR THE ABUSES OF MORMONISM.

June 22.

The Government has probably completed the appointments for Utah, both Executive and Judicial, and the instructions for the Governor are no doubt ready. The spirit of these is simply what has been declared by Mr. Buchanan, to wit: that the laws of the United States must be obeyed in the Territory. The body of troops who, if need be, are to aid in the enforcement of the laws, are already detailed for this service, but will not reach the Territory before the 1st of September.

The Mormons, generally, as we are advised, deride the idea of the exertion of military force against them. They have among them shrewd lawyers and diplomatists, who will contrive to keep all Mormondom within the pale of constitutional law. Over the consciences of the Mormons the Federal authorities can exercise no control, and their morals cannot be improved by force of arms. It is probable that they will be careful to commit no overt act of treason, but their juries will be so constructed that a due and impartial administration of justice will be impracticable.

A remedy for the abuses of Mormonism will be found only in the repeal of the act establishing the Territory, and this we have no moral right to do, unless it shall be justified by their persistence in such a treasonable course as shall render the Territory unfit to come into the Federal Union. Before such an act will be resorted to by Congress they will take care to inform themselves, from disinterested and impartial sources, of the actual state of facts which will justify it. Perhaps they will send a Commission to Utah, as they did to Kansas, to inquire into the past and present condition of the Mormon community.

Meanwhile, the Mormons, receiving daily accessions to their ranks from foreign countries, are spreading through the central regions of the continent, and instead of one community at Salt Lake, will, before long, have many organized and thriving communities. It is a new fanaticism, and commends itself to the licentiousness of the times. The Gentiles themselves, including some of the Federal officers were disposed, it is said, to fall in with it, but in an irregular manner. It is to be hoped that the new appointees, and also the officers of the troops who may be sent out there, will set a better moral example to the Mormons than has been done in some cases heretofore.—[Daily Times.

UTAH APPOINTMENTS.—Washington, June 23.—Governor Cumming will take his family with him to Utah, intending to make that Territory his permanent home. Col. Jack Hayes, of Texas celebrity, now Surveyor General of California, will probably be transferred to Utah in a similar capacity.

Brigham Young has never recognized the United States surveys, but claims possession of all the soil in Utah. Not one of the inhabitants there holds lands derived by government title, and hence even Salt Lake City is open to pre-emption. This is one of the perplexities with which the federal courts in the Territory will have to deal, together with establishing or confirming titles to lands, which may be derived in pursuance of United States laws. It is expected that the troops and civil officers will leave for Utah in the middle of July or on the 1st of August.

From the St. Louis Sunday Herald, June 10.

A Plea for the Slandered.

MR. EDITOR—I wonder if the writer, who abuses the privilege he has of writing editorials for the Republican, ever read the New Testament? If he never did, I commend to his prayerful attention Christ's sermon on the Mount. He will there find its divine author saying, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely." After he has read that passage, I advise him carefully to consider whether, if men who are falsely spoken evil of are blessed, the men who falsely speak evil of them are not cursed.

The Republican rushes eagerly forward to help swell the torrent of prejudice against the Mormons. In doing so it shows neither calmness nor candor. It adopts the first statement against the Saints it sees, and the more violent that statement, the better the editor seems to like it. Now, Messrs. Editors, I am certain that these statements will not be borne out by experience, when the civil officers and troops are sent out to Utah. I say, let these officers and troops go. They will find nothing in that Territory which will give them any just cause of exercising the slightest belligerent propensity any of them may feel. The Mormons are not traitors—nor defiers of the law, and will give no ground for proceeding against them as such.

The only thing chargeable on the Mormons, which the outside world consider an offence, is polygamy. But consider that under this patriarchal institution lived holy men of God, who were pronounced in God's own word to be after God's own heart. They not only lived under it—they partook of it—and they did so without once experiencing the slightest sign of reproof from the Governor of the Universe. Polygamy in practice never was and never can be, in any nation, a diffused institution. Where it is permitted, only a few of the leading spirits—the natural governors—the "men born to command"—will practice it. And looking to the importance of a posterity sound in mind and body, it is well that it is confined to them. At the same, to the extent it is practiced, it lessens the evils of propagation from inferior stocks—since from choice and custom it happens that the large proportion of the inferior men remain unmarried. But polygamy, whether right or wrong morally considered, is not an offence against the laws of the United States in Utah, or the laws of the Territory of Utah. To call, therefore, as the Republican has done, for suppression by force, is about as absurd, legally viewed, as it was for it to call for a confiscation of the Mormon church property, and its distribution among some imaginary widows and orphans.

The simple truth is, the Mormons are, like every religious sect which ever existed, mis-represented. They are worse abused than most of those sects, but they are not worse abused than have been the Puritans of England, the Covenanters of Scotland, the Huguenots of France, or the Albigenses of Piedmont. Only two weeks ago, a daily paper of St. Louis compared the Mormons to the Albigenses, showing signs that it would relish the idea of a modern De Montfort to lead on a crusade against the refugees in the Salt Lake Valley, like that which harrassed the dwellers in the Vandois Valleys. Does the writer for the Republican think the comparison a good one; and also sigh for the same repast? No doubt those who were steeped to the lips in prejudice against the simple mountaineers of Piedmont shouted hosannas when they saw De Montfort return with his garments dyed in the blood of unoffending zealots, against whom fanaticism had sent out her ministers of persecution. Perhaps, if General Harney (which I do not think possible) can be converted into a De Montfort, his return under similar circumstances from the sack and carnage of the Salt Lake Saints might draw down like plaudits. If slander has full swing, and prejudices are cultivated so as to attain their most giant growth and develop their most fatal malignity, I see no reason why the nineteenth century should not be made enthusiastic by such a victory over the modern Albigenses. Men, who suppose the age of persecution for conscience sake past, may find themselves mistaken. Shall our people who have little capacity and less inclination to penetrate beneath the surface, think that the return of such scenes impossible? They forget, or rather probably never knew, that men were never even in the worst of times persecuted expressly because they were true, and pure and good. If they are good Protestants, they take up the pitiable story of the crusade against the Albigenses and exclaim: "Gracious God! how is it that such horrors were permitted? how is it that an innocent and unoffending people could have been so foully persecuted? Thank God, the times are no longer as they were; now it would be impossible to repeat these horrors." All the while these horror-struck and indignation-excited exclaimants are deluding themselves with the idea that the multitude in De Montfort's days saw the Albigenses just as the modern protestant reader does. They do not comprehend—and probably take no pains to comprehend—that the people in that day had their minds filled with abuse of the Albigenses, who were represented as guilty of every crime denounced in the decalogue, and some crimes not denounced there simply because they were impossible. The people bounded on a crusade not against good men and true christians, (which all protestant authorities maintain the Albigenses were to as great an extent as any of their cotemporaries) but against idolaters, despisers of the Saviour, polygamists, and men guilty of crimes against nature. In so doing, the people of that day felt they were doing God service. In those days there was no press to fabricate misrepresentations, as there is now. With the added power for evil (as well as good) of this modern engine, a crusade is preached up against the Mormons—not because the Mormons are good men, but because of all sorts of crimes and vices that are imputed to them. Men who denounce with horror and indignation the crusade against the Albigenses are almost delighted with the crusade against the Mormons. Men who wonder at the enormous delusion which possessed so much of christendom in De Montfort's days, should see to it that they themselves are not equally infatuated creatures in the days of Harney. But this perhaps is too much to expect.

Christ describes certain "scribes, pharisees and hypocrites," who used to say, "If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets." But what said Christ of such? "Ye are the children of them which killed the prophets. Fill ye up, then, the measure of your fathers." "Wherefore I send unto you prophets and wise men, and scribes; and some of them ye shall kill and crucify, and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city." If all such as the writer for the Republican would not share in the "woe" denounced by Christ on the persecutors of his day, let him not try to kindle anew the fires of persecution in our day.

The Southern Mail.

WASHINGTON, June 19. 1857.

THE New Orleans mail of the 13th inst., has been received.

The Havana correspondence of the 9th in the New Orleans papers is confirmatory of the intention of Spain to invade Mexico. Orders have been given to prepare three months' rations for ten thousand men. The Navy Yard and Arsenal are busily occupied in packing material, and volunteers are enrolling.

Burning of the Old Dominion Steam Flour Mills.

PETERSBURGH, Va., June 19, 1857.

THE Old Dominion Steam Flour Mills in this place, owned by S. P. Paul, Esq., were entirely destroyed by fire last night. Loss. $50,000, which is partly insured. The fire was the work of an incendiary.

Execution of Murderers.

ST. LOUIS, Sune 20, 1857.

JOHN LAPOINT, for the murder of Robert Wheaton, Israel Shoultz, for shooting John Inham, and Jacob Woeslin, for killing his wife, were executed in the jail yard in this city yesterday, and at Edwardsville, Illinois, Geo. W. Sharp and John Johnson were hung for the murder of Barth.

Miscellaneous.

GREAT STORM IN MINNESOTA.—Red Wing, M. T., June 15, 1857. Our town was visited by a tremendous storm on Friday morning. To say that the windows of heaven were opened, would feebly express the inundation of the country. The whole establishment was turned inside out. The flouring mill on Spring Creek, owned by Messrs. Stearns & Hobart, is entirely gone—the walls washed away, and $10,000 carried off in a flood of rain water. A barn on the bank, near the mill, floated down the stream with a valuable horse. On the flats just above, a dwelling-house, belonging to a Swede, was carried away bodily. Nothing has been heard from any of the occupants since, and it is supposed that they are all drowned. Bell Creek has risen fifteen feet, and all the bridges on that and Hay Creek have gone down the Mississippi. What is the end of these disasters no one is yet able to say. Property has been destroyed in this vicinity to the extent of many thousands of dollars, and the storm must have extended over a great range of country.

In addition to the above, we take the following from St. Paul Times of the 15:—

"The storm on Sunday night and yesterday morning did terrible execution—undermining houses, making huge chasms in the roads, and washing the face of nature in a very summary manner. We rose in the morning at the usual hour, made our toilet, and took a stroll down to 'get a bite' to eat; what was our agreeable astonishment to find the chair in which we sat at supper submerged, and the water standing two-and-a-half feet deep under our breakfast table. Under the circumstances we thought we wouldn't indulge."

DESTRUCTIVE AND FATAL TORNADO IN SOUTHERN ILLINOIS.—We learn from a friend who arrived in this city this morning, direct from Egypt, that on Saturday afternoon a terrible tornado swept over a portion of Christian County, carrying death and destruction in its course. Our informant was at the village of Pena, in that county during the "blow," and describes its effects there as terrific. It was accompanied by hail and rain. Buildings were swept from their foundations and some of them carried into the air; others torn into atoms. A number of new stores that had just been completed were scattered into fragments; the Presbyterian church, a large frame building, was moved some six feet from its foundation; the Illinois Central freight depot was unroofed; a train of freight cars was blown from the track; and worse than all, five persons—a woman and four children—were killed by being struck by falling timbers, or carried into the air and thrown upon the ground. Several other persons were more or less injured, some of whom may die from the effects of their injuries. We have no information as to the extent of the damage done in other places by the tornado, but farmers and others in various parts of that and adjoining counties must be heavy sufferers.

THE GREAT EASTERN.—All persons interested in the British North American provinces will be glad to learn that the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada have announced in their circular for the ensuing month that arrangements have been entered into with the proprietors of the Great Eastern, so that this mammoth steamship of 22,000 tons burden, and 2,700 horse power, will make her first voyage to Portland, State of Maine, in connection with the thorugh booking system instituted by this company for the conveyance of passengers to Canada and the Western States.

A SON OF HENRY CLAY GUILTY OF HOMICIDE.—In a quarrel between John Clay, a son of the departed statesman, and a horse trader named Edgar, in Lexington, Ky., the former shot the latter twice with a pistol. One ball entered his mouth and passed out behind the ear; another ball lodged in his back. Edgar is reported mortally wounded. Clay immediately left Lexington, and has not been heard from since. The parties have not been on amicable terms for sometime.

A REVEREND NEGRO SENTENCED TO THE PENITENRIARY.—Our readers will remember the arrest of the Rev. Elijah Anderson, the colored preacher from Madison, Ind., some time last winter. He was examined in our Police Court at the time, on the charge of running off slaves, and remanded to Trimble County. His trial had just closed in the Bedford Circuit Court, and upon conviction of the charge, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for eight years.

DECLINE IN RELIGION.—The Boston Courier has an article called out by the Religious Anniversaries at that city, which takes a very desponding view of "Religion" in New England. Rationalism and infidelity, it argues, are taking the place of real, genuine, old-fashioned Christianity, with startling rapidity. The preliminary discourse of these Anniversaries was delivered by the famed Mr. Kalloch, at Tremont Temple.—[Freeman's Journal.

A CATHOLIC CHURCH BLOWN UP.—At Coldwater, Mich., on Sunday morning, 14th inst., about 2 o'clock, some scoundrel placed two or three kegs of powder under the Catholic meeting-house and fired it, blowing the building in a mass of ruins. The explosion was terrific, and the citizens throughout the village were very generally awakened by it. The concussion was felt to a great distance.

From San Francisco Golden Era.

"Advice" Gratis.

A LAWYER residing in Ithaca, New York, and enjoying an extensive practice, is desirous of emigrating to this city. He thinks the climate would suit him, and knows his wife would be delighted with it, for she says so. His only hesitation in starting at once arises from the provident fear that sufficient patronage might not be secured to maintain himself and family. To be better enabled to decide, he addresses a letter to this office, through the recommendation of a friend, and concludes it thus:

I have been in the profession since 1830, have a large library, and would like to be assured of business enough for a fair living. You can doubtless inform me—

1st. Whether the business is flourishing or otherwise, and whether the profession is overstocked.

2d. What board is at first-class hotels or boarding-houses.

3d. What would be the rent of a dwelling house and office.

4th. Any information generally that would be appropriate.

Your attention to this will oblige,

Very truly, yours, &c.

BENJ. G. FERRIS.

We will inform Mr. Ferris, that we handed his note to a facetious Lycurgus, who, like himself, was once the owner of a "good library," but is now a porter in Front street, and in three days received the following in return, covering very satisfactorily, in our estimation, all the points of inquiry:

INQUIRY FIRST—Thanks to the three thousand lawyers in San Francisco, "the business is flourishing." Some twenty-five of the profession manage all the legitimate legal business in the city, while the remaining twenty-nine hundred and seventy-five live by treating strangers to "fighting whiskey," superintending their conveyance from the gutter to the station house, and defending them before the Police Court the next morning, for two dollars and a half. One such case per month is considered a "flourishing" practice, although some of the more energetic have been known to secure as high as two in a week.

SECOND.—Board for a family of five or six at a first-class hotel may be had for three or four hundred dollars per month. This information can be of little importance, however, to a lawyer. Such of the profession as do not take their chances at the lunch tables, or "ranch" themselves, invariably "board round," like a country schoolmaster, and are kicked out at the end of the week upon refusing to settle. This is practiced for the double purpose of living without cost, and prosecuting landlords for assault and battery in booting them out of the house.

THIRD.—This question need not be answered. If a lawyer cannot swindle a landlord out of a year's office rent, when once in possession of the tenement, he is ignorant of the first principles of his profession, and cannot do otherwise than fail in San Francisco.

FOURTH.—The only items of "general information" to be imparted are, that the idea of a lawyer paying board or office rent is an absurdity; that instead of a library, he must provide himself with an armory of Bowie-knives, pistols and slungshots; that the safest way for a lawyer to proceed in San Francisco, who expects a "fair living," is to commence practice with seventeen thousand dollars in cash, and leave the country as soon as he reaches the bottom dollar.

[The Ben. Ferris who wants a job in California is the "old woman in breeches" whom ex-President Pierce sent out to Utah in '52 as Secretary of that Territory; but forgetting the business he was sent to perform, or rather itching after more dollars than he drew from Uncle Sam, he hit on the idea of seeing his name in print, sent out his "Blue Stocking" to gather up the gossip of the Territory, which his ricketty imagination worked into paragraphs and chapters, with all the garbage he could gather from apostate dungheaps, till his labors assumed bulk enough for a book, and which the Secretary published on his return to the States. Blue Stocking, satisfied that she did the greater part of the labor, and had none of the glory, never would rest till the second book came out, with her name, which accounts for the "large library." Now that they are quits, and equally glorified, they are ready for another campaign, and are in want of extensive practice. Of the Golden State, "he thinks the climate would suit him, and knows his wife would be delighted with it, for she says so"—no doubt of it. We advise Blue Stocking to go it, take her old woman along; the pair, if nothing better turn up, can turn washerwomen—that's what nature designed them for.—Ed.

Notice to Subscribers.

WE frequently receive remittances for subscriptions to THE MORMON, without the sender giving the name of the place he desires the paper to be sent to. Sometimes the name of the Post Office or town is mentioned, but not the county, and as there are several towns in some States by the same name, unless the county is designated we are at a loss to know where to direct the papers ordered. We wish all communications to us to name distinctly the Post Office or town, county, and State or Territory, as then there will be no mistake.

character, and I think they do not feel in this way as they might if they had more understanding. They feel to bless all around them and their feelings of kindness are first rate. Now this is a very good thing, but a person that can take all his temporal substance that is valuable, comfortable, happyfying and nice, and take of that substance for the purpose of benefiting another, that is the way I should think a man could show that he is establishing those principles in himself. If we feel that it is our duty to go to work more ambitiously than what we have done to secure confidence, we will proceed if it is in our power to yield temporal blessings and favors to secure the friendship of those around us. In this way and in no other can we be bound together and manifest that we have a kind and brotherly feeling. We must exhibit this feeling by our works and instead of shaking a person by the hand and saying God bless you my good fellow, and the next day pay no regard to what we have previously said but trample upon his best feelings and sever them from us.

I feel that if we secure to ourselves the blessings and privileges of this reformation we must also try to secure something for the interests of those who are around us, for there is a self sacrifice to be made for the interests of those with whom we are associated. We see this in the Savior, and in Bro. Joseph, and we see it in our President. Jesus, Bro. Joseph, and Bro. Brigham have always been willing to sacrifice all they possess for the good of the people; that is what gives Bro. Brigham power with God and power with the people, it is the self-sacrificing feeling that he is all the time exhibiting. It is so with others just in proportion as they are willing to sacrifice for others, so they get God in them, and the blessings of the eternal worlds are upon them, and they are the ones who will secure not only the rights of this world but will secure the blessings of eternity. Just in proportion as you women, you wives, sacrifice one for another, just in that proportion you will advance in the things of God. Now if you want to get Heaven within you and to get into Heaven you want to pursue that course that angels do who are in Heaven. If you want to know how you are to increase, I will tell you, it is by getting godliness within you.

Let angels be here, do you suppose that they would enjoy themselves here? They would until they felt disposed to leave. Well just so individuals can enjoy heaven around them in all places. We have got to go to work and do this; we must go to work and establish Heaven upon this earth, notwithstanding the evils that are around us, the devils that are around us, and notwithstanding the wickedness that exists, still we have got to go to work and establish Heaven upon this earth.

A person never can enjoy Heaven until he learns how to get it, and to act upon its principles. Now you take some individuals, and you refer back to the circumstances that surrounded them twenty years ago, when they were living in log huts, when they had a certain amount of joy, of peace, of happiness, at that time though things were uncomfortable. Now they may have secured comfortable circumstances and temporal means that would administer to their temporal wants and necessities, but if they have not secured friends, the good feelings of their brethren, they are unhappy, and more so than they were twenty years ago.

I do not feel to occupy more of the time to-day, but may the Lord bless you brethren and sisters, and may you think of these things and may we love each other, and live so to exalt ourselves as far as the Lord shall give us wisdom and ability and secure confidence with each other, which may the Lord grant for Christ's sake:—AMEN.

Notice.

THE Saints who desire to send means to their friends in Europe, can have the same attended to, by forwarding any sum they wish in current money, to this office, enclosing one dollar or more, in proportion to the amount sent, to defray the expenses of procuring Bills of Exchange, making remittances, foreign postage, &c., describing particularly to whom, and where they wish to have it sent; at the same time not holding myself responsible in any manner whatever unless the money reach me.

All subscriptions, donations, &c., for the support of THE MORMON, or Conference Fund (except the donations and Conference Funds raised in the Philadelphia Conference, which will be forwarded as usual through President Cannon) must be sent hereafter to my address; as also Tithing; P. E. Fund, and donations for the Temple from those who wish to contribute the same, so each person may be duly credited, and the means forwarded to Zion, and have their names entered in "The Book of the Law of the Lord."

No Power of Attorney, or other legal instrument of writing, going to Europe or elsewhere, forwarded to us for the purpose of sending to Washington in order to obtain the attestation of the Department, and the British Consul's Certificate and seal to the same, will be attended to in future, unless the means to defray the expenses and foreign postage accompanies the Instrument, as there is considerable expense attending it as well as labor. We would like to oblige all, and are willing to give our services when we have opportunity; but we cannot advance means to defray such expenses.

All communications intended for THE MORMON should be addressed—Editor of THE MORMON, New York. Otherwise direct to my address, BOX No. 3957, New York Post Office. W. I. APPLEBY.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

The Girl With the Calico Dress.

SELECTED.

A fig for your upper-ten girls,
With their velvets and satins and laces,
Their diamonds and rubies and pearls,
And their milliner figures and faces;
They may shine at a party or ball,
Emblazoned with half they possess,
But give me in place of them all,
The girl with the calico dress.

She is plump as a patridge, and fair
As the rose in its earliest bloom;
Her teeth will with ivory compare,
And her breath with the clover perfume.
Her step is as free and as light
As the fawn's whom the hunters hard press,
And her eye is as soft and as bright,
My girl with the calico dress.

Your dandies and foplings may sneer
At her simple and modest attire,
But the charm she permits to appear
Would set a whole iceberg on fire!
She can dance, but she never allows
The hugging, the squeeze and caress;
She is saving all these for her spouse,
My girl with the calico dress.

She is cheerful, warm-hearted and true,
And kind to her father and mother;
She studies how much she can do
For her sweet little sisters and brother,
If you want a companion for life,
To comfort, enliven, and bless,
She is just the right sort for a wife,
My girl with the calico dress.

Mormonism—Its Character and Origin.

Mormonism in its religious aspect, like that which is called Spiritualism and several other forms of religious misbelief, more or less prevalent, is, probably, the representative of an unsatisfied spiritual want. It is the protest of the human soul against the deadness of the Church. Man is constitutionally a religious being. His spiritual necessities are as imperative as his temporal; and his highest and purest earthly happiness consists in a lively spiritual condition. Such a condition he perpetually endeavors to enjoy; and failing to find the power to produce it in any existing dispensation or establishment, he is ready to fly to every new one that proposes to excite the state of feeling which he desires. Christ came to supply a spiritual want in the world; and the false Messiahs that preceded the true, owed their success in collecting vast hordes of disciples to the same necessity. An era of deadness in the Christian Church is always one of new inventions in religion; and precisely as the materialism of the age enters into the Church, suppressing its life, formalizing its devotion, will men go in search of other devices, in the hope thereby to minister to the ever-craving appetite of their spiritual natures. The fanaticism of the Mormons, therefore, has little or nothing in it of hypocrisy. There never was a people more entirely in earnest. Sorry as is their form of doctrine, it must be confessed, that they adhere to it with a constancy and implicitness of faith, that it would be well for other churches to imitate; and not even the Christians in the days of Nero, or of Julian, suffered for their belief with a more cheerful devotion. It is true that they are intolerant, sometimes lawless and bloody, and not a little prone to persecute unbelievers, when in their power; but we must not forget that these vices have been of all ages, sects and nations. For centuries Protestant and Catholic tortured and killed each other; and even the sainted John Rogers, of the Westminster Catechism, was a burner of others before he was himself brought to the stake.

In its social aspect, Mormonism may be the representative of the prevalent vice of the age—licentiousness. Its own claim is that it is a protestant against that vice. It assumes to be the antagonist of indiscriminate prostitution, by the absorption of the surplus of marriageable females with which, it must be confessed, the community abounds. It lays down the proposition that it is every woman's right as well as duty to have a husband, and that, as the world is full of men who will not assume the marital obligation, justice to the female sex permits, to such of the males as are willing to aid in the furtherance of the right, the privilege to increase the number of their wives until the inequality is overcome. That Mormonism owes much of its practical polygamy to the fact that there are in society many more marriageable women than there are men desirous to marry is, it seems to us, unquestionable. There are very few females of races descended from Teutonic stock who would take up with the half, the fourth or the eighth of a husband, so long as there remained a reasonable prospect of getting a whole one. The thing is not natural; nor is there force enough in any form of religious fanaticism to induce many women in this respect to do a thing so contrary to their natural sense and inclination. The sex is prone to look upon these matters in a light exceedingly practical; and nothing but an intense hatred of a life of solitude would induce an American woman to enter into a state where her domestic dominion would be liable to be questioned by or divided with another. To present to women hopeless of the possession of a husband entire, a legal and authorized condition which, though inferior to monogamy, is vastly superior to prostitution, is an offer of which it is not surprising thousands are ready to avail themselves. While, therefore, it is not to be doubted that passion more than principle was the occasion of the establishment of polygamy among the Mormons, it will not do to deny that the institution, now that it is established, has points of view in which it appears less criminal than it is sometimes described.

In that which is called "the spiritual wife system," which appears to be a practice devised by the leaders for the gratification of their own passions at the expense of their inferiors, there is doubtless much of tyranny and crime. Such a mixture of lust and fanaticism as this exhibits, to many seems so unnatural that they are unwilling to believe that one or the other is not spurious; and hence the prevalent opinion that the Mormons are merely a body of licentious hypocrites, who have gone to the wilderness in order to be unobstructed in their vicious indulgencies. Where the basis of a creed is an infallible revelation it is no evidence of the hypocrisy of those within that, to those without, the practice seems incompatible with faith, true or false. As religionists, whatever may be the testimony of their acts, the Mormons are doubtless sincere. Nor is this the first time that animal passion and religious zeal have been intermixed and associated under religious forms. Over half the world and in all antiquity such was in a greater or less degree the case. Why it is so is a mystery that He only who made humanity what it is can explain.

Those who begin by stigmatizing the Mormons as a body of incorrigible adulterers, and, as such, demanding their extermination, travel too fast. There is a difference between Adultery and Polygamy that is to be borne in mind. Calling the latter by the worst name, and there is still a very respectable precedent for moderation, "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone." To punish, if admissible, was so by Him who himself was pure; and he refrained! The more we learn of very bad people the less we find them to differ from ourselves; and upon a close inquiry into the character of the Mormons we shall probably find that they are human in all their acts and propensities, have their loves and their hates, their tastes and their distastes, their friendships and their enormities, their virtues, feelings, vices and crimes, very much like other people. If we assume ourselves to be without sin, they are doubtless very bad, indeed, and we should commence with a course of boulders as soon as possible; but if we reflect that we, too, may sometimes have erred, we shall be tempted, while we condemn their offenses, to consider their temptation.

Whether Mormonism in its social aspect is the representative of, or a protest against offenses that pervade the body of American society, it may not be unprofitable to inquire what those offenses are, and to what is their existence to be attributed. Female profligacy will prevail where marriage is discouraged. The hordes of prostitutes that infest the cities, are the symbols of unsolemnized marriages. There is a discouragement of marriage and it is producing its effect. "More than four-sevenths of the marriages in Massachusetts," says the editor of the Newburyport Herald, "are among the foreign born," and this is in a State where foreigners do not abound. "Why is it?" he inquires and answers:

"For the most simple of reasons—the foreign born can afford to get married, and the native born cannot; and this must be, so long as our extravagant modes of life continue. In social life there never was a people tending to deeper and more destructive social corruption—and that is most evident from the records of all the courts, and the columns of all the newspapers—than Americans. Our fathers used to tell of the profligacy of Paris; their children tell of the mysteries of New York—a city not far beyond any in Europe. And making proper allowance for size, how far is New York ahead of our other cities and towns? * * *

We have come to a point where young men hesitate and grow old before they can decide whether they can marry, and afterwards keep clear of bankruptcy and crime. What is the consequence? There are more persons living a single life—are there more leading a virtuous life? It is time for mothers to know that the extravagance they encourage is destructive of the virtue of their children; that all the foolish expenditures making to rush their daughters to matrimony are, instead of answering that end, tending to destroy the institution of marriage altogether."

This is all very true, but it does not reach the root of the matter; for in laying the foundation for the usages and customs of society, the man, whether he be aware of it or not, is the Lord of the Creation. If the woman is bad she is so by imitation—because the man is bad before her, and she is subjected to influences unfortunate to her continuance in the path of duty. The foundation of the evil is in the materialism of the age—the intense pursuit of wealth as an end—the exaltation of money as the supreme good of the Universe—in short, the worship of the golden idol, Mammon. The husband, absorbed in his schemes for making money, loses his taste for domestic enjoyments, and varies his hours of application to business with snatched pleasures as intense as are his labors. He attempts to compensate his wife for the loss of his society by supplying her with the means of liberal expenditure. The wife, finding home dreary without a husband, seeks relief abroad, cultivates a love of dress, courts the admiration of others, to supply the place of the affection due from her husband, and grows rapidly heartless, if not wicked. The girls imitate the mother; and the more society becomes corrupt, the more show and glitter and expense is lavished to embellish the surface. Men who are worth the having become afraid to marry, but passions will not sleep, and there is vicious indulgence upon both sides. Under an external show of decency and elegance, society reeks in all the varieties of social crime, and practical Mormonism, attended by deceit and domestic treachery, prevails to an extent to render a complete exposure unadvisable even if it were possible.

This materialism and its effects are abhorrent to the spiritual nature of man. He does not find in them that happiness which his immortal part desires. Hence he is perpetually protesting against the errors of the actual, and even in the midst of his sins, casting around for a gospel that shall be sufficient for his relief. It may be that from here comes Mormonism, blackened with all the vices of its time, and yet protesting against their practice; and while it cannot shake off, endeavoring to restrain and legalize their indulgence in such a manner as to render it compatible with a condition of active spirituality. It may be all error; but may it not also embody the cry of the human soul for something better?—[The Daily Cincinnati Commercial.

Influence of Example.

In a certain village in Switzerland, some years ago, there were heavy complaints among all who possessed trees that no fruit was safe; that the children plundered it perpetually before it came to maturity, and not only that, but that the green sapling had no security against them. Another serious complaint was the barbarity of the children towards all living creatures in their power. The clergyman, teacher and elder, often laid their heads together, to find some remedy for this inhuman spirit, by which every child in the place was more or less affected. They could not conceive why such a spirit should prevail so specially in this village; but they could find neither cause nor remedy, all exhortations, all punishments were in vain. The clergyman of the village was changed; and the new minister was a great friend to schools. His first walk was to the school house. The vice of the scholars had been made known to him and the failure of all preventive measures hitherto applied. But determining within himself to watch the whole course of proceeding in school, he soon perceived that the teacher had a habit, and had acquired a singular dexterity in it, of knocking down and killing flies with his cane, to the end of which he had fastened a piece of leather. The windows were all on one side, and being exposed to the morning sun of summer, they were continually full of flies. The teacher's path lay along them, in front of his scholars; and while talking to the latter, he struck down the flies as they showed themselves at the window. This manœuvre amused the children infinitely more than his instruction did, and they followed his example. They were incessantly on the watch for flies that buzzed through the room, caught them in their hands, and showed as great dexterity in this kind of chase as their teacher did in his. But their amusement did not end here; they had learned to play with their captives, treat them with detestable cruelty, and seemed to find a wicked delight in observing the shivering of their victims. On observing these curious and far from pleasing peculiarities of the school, the intelligent and humane clergyman easily accounted for the spirit of destructiveness among the children; and his first step was to induce the teacher to take his leather from the end of his cane; and next, to turn the desk so that the boys sat with their backs to the windows, and the teacher's path lay on the other side of the room. Then the minister went frequently into the school, and examined so severely, that both teacher and pupils had more to do than to give their attention to the flies. As this was not yet entirely satisfactory in its result, the minister took advantage of the hot summer weather to have instructions given only in the afternoon, when the school room was not so full of flies, and thus he gradually banished the insects from the thoughts of teacher and children. But he knew that it was of little avail solely to pull the weed out of the young mind. He obtained an unoccupied piece of land fit for planting, and not far from the school laid out a school garden.

This pleased the teacher, and the children willingly took part in the task, for they had soon learned to like their minister, who came and worked among them. The garden was surrounded by a hedge planted with trees and shrubs, and each child had a tree or shrub given him to take care of. A nursery was soon laid out, and provision made for plenty of larger gardens and orchards in the village. And behold! the spirit of destructiveness among the children soon passed away; and every man's fruit and garden became safe, the youth even begged their parents that trees might be planted in the fields for them to take care of. The new spirit was communicated from children to parents, till it spread throughout the entire village; every family had its pretty little garden; an emulation in cultivating flowers sprang into existence; idle and bad habits disappeared; and gradually the whole place was a scene of moral as well as of physical beauty.

This incident, the truth of which can be vouched for, has been communicated to us by a lady of rank who happens to have lately become acquainted with the circumstances, and has thought that their publicity may be advantageous. We have no doubt of the fact, that the practice of amateur gardening is never associated with evil, but is always a token of advanced tastes and correct habits. We would further say, let every school, so far as it can conveniently be done, have its garden, not only for purposes of amusement, but as an important engine of education.

[Chambers' Journal.

National Debt of Great Britain.

According to the table published in the Glasgow Journal of Thursday last, there are 269,736 national creditors or fund holders, of whom about 90,000 draw dividends under £5, 40,000 under £10, and about 90,000 under £50. About 49,500 draw dividends varying from £50 to £2,000 per annum. The number drawing dividends above £2,000 is only 210.

Now, take the maximum in each case, and say the first 90,000 draw £5 each, and we have £450,000; 40,000 £10 each, £400,000; 90,000 £50 each, £4,500,000; and 49,500 on the average of £1,000 each, £4,950,000; and we have £10,300,000 as the proportion of the £27,000,000 sterling of the yearly interest of the National Debt drawn by 269,500 out of the 269,736 creditors. The remaining balance of £17,000,000 or thereabout, must of course be drawn by the remaining 230 or 236 creditors, whose share of the debt cannot, on the average, be less than £2,000,000 each, and their dividends on the average less than from £70,000 to £75,000 each per annum.

Now, here is a fact not generally known, namely, the fact of 230 individuals—a mere handful of the creditors, and an infinitessimal fraction of the nation—absorbing no less than £17,000,000* sterling of the annual wealth produced by the labor and industry of the country! Who are these leviathan capitalists? What are their names? Where do they dwell? Lord Overstone, we know, is reputed to be worth ten millions. He, undoubtedly, is one. The same may be said, probably, of Rothschild and the Barings. But who are the others? We know our sovereign lady, the Queen, her ministers, the lords spiritual and temporal, the commons, our judges, our generals—but who are millionaires? Who are the men who constitute the money-power—a power greater than the Queen, Lords, and Commons, for it cannot only raise or lower prices, forestal markets, and derange commerce, but influence legislators, upset ministers, and overturn thrones and dynasties.

We talk of the power of the aristocracy, but we suspect the plutocracy is a power that greatly outweighs them. It is unquestionable if it be consonant with wise and enlightened policy to allow such prodigious wealth to be concentrated in the persons of so small a number in the State. The Jewish economy was opposed to the accumulation of riches in so inordinate a degree, and decreed the cancelment of all debts, private and public every fifty years. No country in any period of the world's history ever exhibited anything approaching to such an ownership of debt, or command over the industrial and productive powers of a people, in the hands of so small a number. Prior to the revolution in 1688 and the advent of our national debt and funding system, introduced by Dutch William, England had nothing of the kind. She had no money-mongering class living on the products of the industry of their fellow-men by indirect taxes, interest, dividends, annuities and other factitious devices of the sort.

Various reflections spring up in the mind as to the mighty good these men might accomplish. No doubt they supply nations with the sinews of war, and the means of making railways, &c.; but in this case they still look for their per "shentage." The transactions are commercial, not philanthropic. They look to the accumulation of their hordes, whereas, were they inspired with Christian feeling and benevolence, they could immediately set to work and give food to the 50,000 starving men now parading the streets of London; they could relieve every parish in England, Scotland and Ireland, of poor rates; they could endow Alms Houses; they could build and endow schools and colleges; they could reclaim waste lands, and establish self-supporting colonies at home and abroad; they could gracefully submit to pay double or triple income tax, and not feel it to be overburdened themselves while relieving their fellow-payers of the tax; they could do a thousand things were they not Shylocks in spirit, and were not gold the only object of their worship.

As in the pre-Adamite stages of the world it was peopled with mammoths and behemoths, may we not infer that in the future development of society—when sociology will be better understood—the social world will exhibit no such anomaly as a money power in the State greater than the State itself; no icthyosauri or other monstrous creatures like these debt owners, swallowing up their fellow-men—in short, that the genius Fundholder will then be extinct, or, if found, found only as petrifactions or fossil remains—testifying as to the comparatively limited progress of humanity in bygone ages, and that in the nineteenth century, society, with all its boasted civilization, was but a short way removed, from barbarism, and justice and benevolence but little recognized in the actual government of the world.

The British Post Office.

From the annual report of the British Postmaster General it appears that the whole number of post offices in the United Kingdom is 10,866, of which 845 are head offices. Pillar letter boxes have been introduced into the principal cities, and have given much satisfaction. In 1856 the number of letters delivered in England was 338,000,000; in Ireland 42,000,000; in Scotland 48,000,000; total 478,000,000. The proportion of letters to the population was—in England 20 to every person; in Ireland 7; in Scotland 16. The increase over 1855 in the number of letters was upwards of 22,000,000, and as compared with the year previous to the introduction of the penny postage (1839,) 402,000,000. Of the whole number of letters, nearly a quarter are delivered in London or the suburban districts, and counting those also which are dispatched, nearly half the letters pass through the London office.

There has been an increase since 1855 of more than 200,000 letters in the correspondence between the United Kingdom and France, and of 125,000 in the correspondence with the United States. The number of newspapers of all kinds which passed through the post office last year was 71,000,000. The number of letters returned to the writers, owing to failure in the attempts to deliver them, was about 2,400,000, or about one in 200 of the whole number of letters posted. Owing to the same cause, about 550,000 newspapers also were undelivered; being one in 129 of the whole number. More than half the mail transportation is yet performed by coaches and mail carts.

Bathing.

Once a week is often enough for a decent white man to wash himself all over; and whether in summer or winter that ought to be done with soap, warm water, and a hog's hair brush, in a room showing at least seventy degrees fahrenheit.

Baths should be taken early in the morning, for it is then that the system possesses the power of reaction in the highest degree. Any kind of bath is dangerous soon after a meal, or soon after fatiguing exercise. No man or woman should take a bath at the close of the day, unless by the advice of the family physician. Many a man, in attempting to cheat his doctor out of a fee, has cheated himself out of his life; aye, it is done every day.

The best, safest, cheapest, and most universal accessible mode of keeping the surface of the body clean, besides the once a week washing with soap, warm water, and hog's hair brush, is as follows:

Soon as you get out of bed in the morning, wash your face, hands, neck and breast; then in the same basin of water put your feet at once for about a minute, rubbing them briskly all the time; then, with the towel, which has been dampened by wiping the face, feet, &c., wipe the whole body well, fast and hard, mouth shut, breast projecting. Let the whole thing be done in five minutes.

At night, when you go to bed, and whenever you get out of bed during the night, or when you find yourself wakeful or restless, spend from two to five minutes in rubbing your whole body with your hands, as far as you can reach in every direction. This has a tendency to preserve that softness and mobility of skin which is essential to health, and which too frequent washings will always destroy.

That precautions are necessary, in connection with the bath-room, is impressively signified in the death of an American lady of refinement and position, lately, after taking a bath soon after dinner; of Surgeon Hume, while alone, in a warm bath; of an eminent New Yorker, under similar circumstances, all within a year.—[Hall's Journal of Health.

A Schoolmaster "Boarding Round."

Extract from the journal of a schoolmaster, published in a Vermont paper:

Monday—Went to board at Mr. B——'s. Had a baked goose for dinner. Suppose from its size, and thickness of the skin, with other venerable appearances, to have been one of the first settlers in Vermont. Made a slight impression on the patriarch's breast.

Supper—Cold goose and potatoes. Family consisting of the husband, gude-wife, daughter Pegg, four boys, Pompey the dog, and a brace of cats. Fire built in the square room 9 o'clock and a pile of wood lay by the fireplace. Saw Peggy scratch her fingers and couldn't take the hint. Felt squemish about the stomach, and talked about going to bed. Peggy looked sullen, and put out the fire in the square room. Went to bed and dreamed of having eaten a stone wall.

Tuesday—Cold gander for breakfast, swamp tea, and some nut-cakes, the latter some consolation.

Dinner—The legs, &c., of the gander, done up warm, one nearly done up.

Supper—The other leg, &c., cold. Went to bed as Peggy was carrying in the fire to the square room. Dreamed I was a mud-turtle and got on my back and could not get back again.

Wednesday—Cold gander for breakfast. Complained of sickness and could eat nothing.

Dinner—Wings, &c., of the gander, warmed up. Did my best to destroy them for fear they should be left to supper; did not succeed. Dreaded supper all the afternoon.

Supper—Hot johnny-cakes. Felt relieved. Thought I had got clear of the gander and went to bed for a good night's rest. Disappointed—very cold night and couldn't keep warm in bed; got up and stopped the broken window with my coat and vest—no use—froze the tip of my nose before morning.

Tuesday—Cold gander again. Felt very much discouraged not to see the gander half gone. Went visiting for dinner and supper; slept abroad and had pleasant dreams.

Friday—Breakfast abroad. Dinner at Mr. B's. Cold gander and hot potatoes—the latter very good; ate these and went to school somewhat contented.

Supper—Cold gander again and no potatoes—bread heavy and dry. Had the headache and could not eat. Peggy much concerned; had a fire built in the square room, and thought she and I had better sit there out of the noise. Went to bed early. Peggy thought too much sleep bad for the headache.

Saturday—Breakfast, cold gander, and hot Indian johnny-cake; did very well; glad to come off so.

Dinner—Cold gander again. Didn't keep school this afternoon. Weighed and found that I had lost six pounds the last week! Grew alarmed. Had a talk with Mr. B., and concluded I had boarded out his share.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1857.

The New York Daily Times.

A Second Solomon—"Zobedia" Eclipsed.

IN last Monday's Times, in an article headed "The Mormons—Their Branch in New York," the following paragraph occurs:

"Happening in at this place (Brooks's Assembly Rooms, Broome street) yesterday afternoon, we propose to give our readers some account of what we saw and heard. We found assembled about two hundred persons, of which about half were women. It required but a single glance to show that the audience was by no means an intelligent one. Indeed there were but few faces in the room indicating possession by their wearers of even an average degree of intelligence. Nor were there many American physiognomics present. As well as we could judge, nine-tenths of the audience were English, and of the poor and ignorant lower classes found in the coal and manufacturing districts of Great Britain—precisely the sort of people among whom religious superstition and fanaticism would be expected to thrive luxuriantly."

What a pity it is to be poor, and have to earn your "daily bread" by the sweat of your brow, instead of "shaving notes," or retailing nonsense. Yes, Mr. Times, the congregation to which you refer was the honest, upright, meek, and humble poor of the earth, (of whom such, the Savior said, should "inherit the earth and see God"—read the sermon on the Mount, Mr. Times,) that toil and earn their daily sustenance by the honest labor of their own hands. No curses of mourning widows, or wailing of helpless orphans are ascending to the throne of Heaven for vengeance upon their heads, for wronging them of their just dues. No false tradition there—not instructed in the profound erudition of the higher classes, where pride and pomposity reigns. No, Mr. "Times," they have heard the truth, believed it, and embraced it, and knew for themselves that they were beloved of the Lord and received of His Holy Spirit. Although they had never studied Greek, Latin, Chaldeaic, or Hottentot, yet they can go it pugnis et calcibus, when necessary.

As simple and foolish as this congregation appeared to look to this Solomon, we will bet him a wager, and deposit the money in Bank, that there was not a man or woman in that congregation, (although we have some five hundred in New York belonging to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints,) but what would have confounded him on the principles of Salvation and Bible truths, and made him beat a retreat in five minutes, with all his august wisdom and profound erudition!

What a pity it was that Jesus, the Saviour of the World, was so poor that he had not a place to lay his head—even born in a stable, and laid in a manger; that his earthly father, Joseph, working at the carpenter's trade, was unable to give him a "classical education." O! Jesus, thou precious Lamb and Saviour of the World, why did you not study Greek, Latin, Chaldeaic, Persian, &c.? Why did you not know better than to chose such poor, ignorant and unlearned men as Peter, James, and John, &c., for your Apostles? and, further still, to "teach all nations," not from the "Coal and Manufacturing Districts, but fishermen from the shores of Galilee; neither versed in the "learned ignorance of that generation. Just so with all your followers; they were of that sort of people among whom "religious superstition and fanaticism would be expected to thrive luxuriantly," and truly it did thrive. O, the learned ignorance of this would-be-wise generation; surely the Words of Holy Writ are fulfilled. "The wisdom of the world is foolishness with God," and "He chooseth the weak things of the world to confound the wisdom of the wise." But the writer in the Times would endeavor to have one infer he was, and could exclaim as one of old, Veni, Vidi, Vici. O, Marabila Dictu!

Now, we lay but small claim to erudition, we know but little about "dead languages," and care less; we like living things, and let the dead ones repose. We are not from the Manufacturing Districts of Great Britain, neither were we "drove up" in the Purlieus of New York; but the son of a Patriot—a Jerseyman—neither have we much regard for "fanaticism or superstition." But we hold ourself ready, at any time, and at any respectable place, to meet this writer in the "Times," or any gentleman he can produce, before a congregation, not from the "Manufacturing Districts of Great Britain," but of the refined, intelligent inhabitants of New York City, to discuss the merits of Mormonism, either Biblical, Historical, Socially, Morally, Religiously, Philosophically, or otherwise, if he dare. If he is afraid to meet Mormonism on its merits, we do hope he will keep in his kennel hereafter, and not yelp or whine any more about the Mormons.

A Jersey Mormon

THE Mount Holly Union says, Wm. I. Appleby, who formerly lived at Recklesstown, in Burlington county, is, at the present time, the President of the Mormon church in New York, and also one of the editors of the Mormon paper in that city. Mr. Appleby connected himself with the Mormons about seventeen years ago. He removed to Utah soon after the Saints took possession of the land, and was appointed Clerk of the Supreme Court, which office he held until transferred to the position he now occupies in New York. While living in Recklesstown, he was engaged in the tailoring business, and was also a Justice of the Peace—and he was quite a favorite with those who embarked in the matrimonial trade.—Patterson, N. J., Democrat, June 24th.

Pretty fair, Mr. Union! The old adage is almost exemplified in the foregoing: That is—"If you want to know anything of yourself, ask some one else." But as we perceive the "Union" is not "posted" in relation to us, we will give him some further information, and then he can try again.

It is true we formerly resided at Recklesstown, Burlington County, N. J., and that we have been associated with the Mormons some seventeen years; also, that we were a Justice of the Peace. But, Mr. Union, why stop there, and shear us of our "titles," and leave us to droop like a "wilted mullen." Who knows but if we are only known, that we may yet be Governor of Kansas, President of Nicaragua, or perhaps, President of the United States.—Things more improbable than these happen sometimes, especially in the time of Comets. After we post you, Mr. Union, will you give us another lift? Well, you omitted to state that we were one of the "Associate Justices of the County of Burlington, for ten years. First under an appointment of a Whig Governor and Legislature, and secondly under a Democratic Administration; also, Clerk of the Township of Chesterfield for some six years—and Preceptor of the Recklesstown Seminary for three years.

We removed to Utah in 1849. While there we have not only been Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, since the first organization, up to the time we left, April, 1856, but Clerk of the First Judicial District Court also. Been a member of the Legislature, County Judge, Attorney and Counsellor at Law, and Solicitor in Chancery, Regent of the University of Deseret, Territorial Treasurer, and chief clerk in the Trustee's and Tithing Departments of the Church, &c., &c.

We are, at the present time, not "President of the Mormon Church in New York," but President of the Mormon Church in the Eastern and Middle States; also, one of the Editors of the "Mormon Paper" at New York, Mr. Taylor, the former Editor, having gone to Utah.

But in all the capacities or offices we have filled we never knew, until the "Union" informed us, that we were a tailor, (although a respectable calling,) or "engaged in the tailoring business" at Recklesstown or any other place.

In relation to our being "quite a favorite with those who embarked in the matrimonial trade," we have no doubt of it! It is on account of our "good looks;" and you must know, Mr. "Union," that it is customary in New Jersey for the officiating officer to "salute the bride." Hence the reason, we suppose, of our being a "favorite," and our extensive patronage in "tieing the silken knots for lovely swains."

Now, Mr. "Union," do you not think there is some chance yet for us, in relation to the Governorship, &c., to which we have referred? However, we feel much obliged for the friendly notice given of us. The article is as nigh correct as we can expect to find one in these degenerate times. Go ahead, Mr. "Union." We are "A Jersey Mormon;" and, you might have added, "A Jersey Blue." All right, Mr. "Union," forward us your biography, and we will notice it.

Progress of Mormonism in Connecticut.

WE have had for some two years, a flourishing Branch of the Church, organized in Connecticut, called the "Westport and Norwalk Branch" under the Presidency of Elder E. R. Young, of Westport, and Elder J. A. Bouton, his counsellor. Two first-rate men, and servants of God.

Under the Presidency of Bro. Young, the Church has flourished; several persons have of late been added to the Church there by baptism, and the Saints appear in a good condition—living their religion, and enjoying the spirit of God, as a general thing.

In accordance with the counsel contained in our Proclamation to the Saints, June 6, Prest. E. R. Young, has sent out the Elders under his charge, to hold meetings, and preach the gospel wherever a place was open for the same, in the adjacent villages and towns.

Under this arrangement Prest. Young, has meetings held regularly, every other Sabbath, (some places every Sabbath) at South Norwalk, Northfield, Darien, Oxridge, and Stanford, and will shortly commence holding preaching meetings in the Universalist Meeting House, in Westport. Good attendance, and attention, are given at all these places. People are flocking out to hear our doctrines, and many are investigating for themselves. The tirade of abuse and falsehoods emanating from that "pure, holy, and immaculate" ex-Judge Drummond, and others of the same stripe, that any honorable press, (as the Oquawka Plain Dealer remarks) ought to be ashamed to publish, and circulated so freely against us, for political, and other base purposes, have been the means of scores, and hundreds coming out to hear our Elders preach: who scarce ever heard tell of Mormonism, and never would have investigated, or went to hear them preach, had it not been for the "Hue and cry" against us.

Feeling an inclination to leave the city for a few days, last week, and go into the country, in order to inhale the pure and bracing breezes, to which the city of New York is a stranger, we had the pleasure last Sabbath of attending a meeting near South Norwalk in a beautiful grove on the lands of Mr. William Price. A good congregation was present, and gave us their undivided attention, while we addressed them for about one hour and a half.

Several were present, who never heard a Mormon Elder preach before, and remarked they were well pleased with what they had heard. But truly astonished to find, that, we believed in the Bible!

After meeting, one gentleman came forward and remarked, that he believed what he had heard, and wished to embrace the same. We referred him to Prest. Young, then present, for him to attend to it. Others there are believing. After service, Mr. Price and lady, who were present, kindly invited us to their house, near by, made us welcome and where we (together with several of our friends and acquaintances) partook of their hospitality. We hereby tender our thanks, and gratitude to Mr. Price and his lady, for their generous hospitality unto us, and promise them in the name of Israel's God, whose servant we are, that they shall in no wise lose their reward for their kindness unto us. Our prayers are, that not only the things of time, but of eternity also, may be theirs, by obeying the Gospel. But if they never embrace that, their hospitality and friendship will be remembered by us while in mortality, and before our Father in Heaven, in worlds beyond the tomb. A meeting was given out for Sabbath next, July 5, to commence at 12 M., in the "Grove" again, and continue during the afternoon. We expect to be there, as we purpose being at the "Clam Bake" with our friends at Norwalk on the Fourth. Elder Stenhouse will also preach the same day near Northfield, and other Elders will preach at Oxridge, Darien, and Westport according to previous appointment, under the direction of Prest. E. R. Young.

Correspondence of a Wesleyan Methodist Clergyman.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: Unfortunately, perhaps, for me, I am still a Gentile, and therefore cannot address you as brother. Permit me, however, to ask you, (or any one else who may be disposed to reply,) a few questions. I ask them not in order to provoke a controversy, but merely to remove some doubts which exist in my mind with regard to the consistency of Mormonism.

In your "Confession of Faith" given on the fourth page of THE MORMON, you say:—

"We believe the Bible, Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation, and that no new revelation will contradict the old." "The Gospel in the Book of Mormon is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles."

I take up the Book of Mormon which lies on my table, and read the following which you will find in the Book of Jacob, Chap. II: "Wherefore I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord; for there shall not any man among you have, save it be one wife; and concubines, he shall have none."

Now how do you reconcile polygamy with the approving precepts of the Scriptures and the Book of Mormon? You say they are the same, and I believe on this important point they are.

It will not obviate the difficulty to say that is an interpolation, for it is the prevailing sentiment of the Chapter, and is reiterated in Chap. VII., of the Book of Mosiah.

Now polygamy is either right or it is wrong: if it be right, then the Scriptures and the Book of Mormon are both wrong. If it be wrong, then the leading persons of the Latter Day Saints have gone sadly astray, and the sooner they return to the "old paths" the better.

By giving the above a place in your paper, (which I read regularly,) you will much oblige AN INQUIRER.

Port Dover, C. W., May 21, 1857.

P. S.—I am acquainted with your friend Nickerson, of this place, who will forward these few lines, and also my name.

As "AN INQUIRER" appears to be candid in the questions he proposes, we will answer them in brief, trusting that he and all others in the same dilemma may be benefited thereby.

We believe the Bible to be God's Law written to Judah on the Eastern Continent, and the Book of Mormon to be God's Law written to Ephraim on this continent. The Indians, of whom are a remnant—that their fathers were the "other sheep not of this fold" to whom Jesus referred, and so informed his Apostles in Judea, and that "he must visit them," that "they should hear his voice, and become one fold, (in the Gospel, as they were a Branch of the House of Israel) and one shepherd."

That Christ did visit them here on this continent after his Resurrection—and gave unto them his law—chose twelve Apostles—organized his church—healed their sick—offered up prayers to his Father in Heaven, such as were never heard by mortal ears before; after which he visited the "Ten Tribes" in the North country, and "gave unto them his Law" also.

The Book of Mormon perfectly agrees with the Bible on points of scriptural doctrine, and the order of the Church of God, although given to another people. It is a great deal more plain and comprehensive and easier to be understood than the Jewish Bible, because it has never received the mutilations that the Bible has in its various translations by uninspired and bigoted translators.

"An Inquirer" says, after making certain extracts from the Book of Mormon—"Now polygamy is either right or it is wrong; if it be right, then the Scriptures (Bible) and the Book of Mormon are both wrong.

As "AN INQUIRER" is a Wesleyan clergyman of the Methodist profession, as we are informed, and therefore ought to be acquainted with the contents of the Bible, it is not necessary, we opine, to refer him particularly to chapter and verse.

We will proceed to examine in brief, and see if the Bible does not teach Polygamy, and that long anterior to the Law of Moses.

God provided Abraham with Sarah, Hagar, Kitturah, and several other wives not named in the Bible. By this means he became the father of many nations, and his seed was multiplied exceedingly, wherein the promise of the Almighty was fulfilled.

Now after Abraham had obtained all these wives and had raised up children by them, the Lord bears testimony (see Genesis, 26 chap., 5 v.,) saying, "Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws."

Here we have it demonstrated, that a man living four hundred years before the Law of Moses was given, had statutes, commandments, and laws given to him of God, and he kept them.

God also gave to Jacob, (Abraham's grandson) four wives, viz: Leah, Rachel, Bilhah, and Zilpha, by which means he became the father of the "Twelve Patriarchs," and through the lineage of which, the Saviour was born.

In the First Book of Samuel Chap. I., we find an account of one Elkanah, and his two wives, Hannah and Peninnah, and of Samuel the son of this pluralist, who was a promised child devoted to the service of God, and brought up in his Holy Temple.

We might refer to scores almost of Prophets, Patriarchs, and men of God, also others who had many wives. For instance, David and Solomon, "Esau took wives of the daughters of Canaan," "Moses, married Zipporah, also an Ethopian woman," "Gideon, had many wives." "Asher, the father of Tekoa," "Hushim and Baara were the wives of Sharahaim;" Rehoboam, King of Israel, had eighteen wives, and three score concubines;" "Jehoida, the Priest of God took two wives;" "Ahijah waxed mighty, and had fourteen wives, twenty-two sons, and sixteen daughters." All these and a great many others were polygamists, and we do not find the first word of condemnation uttered against them by the Lord, or any of his Prophets, recorded in Scripture. Only in case of transgression (not the doctrine) like David in relation to the wife of Uriah, and Solomon taking strange wives of idolatrious nations, other than his own nation the Jews. Indeed God himself approbated polygamy, and tolerated it among His people as the order of Heaven.

Neither was this institution, or order confined to the Jews or Jewish Dispensation only, but continued with the promise, and blessings, pronounced or conferred upon Abraham, to the Gentiles also, if they would obey the law given to Abraham, do the work of Abraham, come under the same covenant, and thereby be made partakers of the same blessings of Abraham, and joint heirs with him according to the promise.

Hear Paul, Gal. 3 c., "That the blessings of Abrahain might come on the Gentiles, through Jesus Christ, that we might receive the promise of the spirit through faith."

"Now to Abraham and his seed, were the promises made he saith not, and to seeds, as of many but one, and to thy seed, which is Christ, the law (of Moses) which was four hundred and thirty years after cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect, for if the inheritance be of the law (of Moses) it is no more of promise, but God gave it to Abraham by promise."

Again in the 29 v. Paul says to the Gentiles, "if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise."

Here we have the most direct and positive testimony in the New Testament, that the covenant and promise made to Abraham, (and as that covenant or promise was, that his seed should be as numerous as the sands upon the sea shore, and be blest with many virtuous wives, given him by the Lord, according to the Patriarchal order of Heaven, by which he could raise up a numerous offspring, in order to lay the foundation for the fulfilling of the promise, and through whose lineage a Savior should come) were intended for all time, and for the believing Gentiles, and all true christian people, and that they were entirely distinct from the law of Moses, and were never disannuled or changed either by Moses (who was a Polygamist) or Christ.

Thus in this brief review we find Abraham the father of the faithful, and many others, chosen men of God polygamists. And Jesus said to the Jews on a certain occasion, "If ye were Abraham's seed, ye would do the works of Abraham," on another he said, "Many shall come from the East, and from the West, and from the North, and from the South, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (polygamists) in the Kingdom of God while you (monogamists) shall be thrust out."

Jesus further said, Luke xviii. c., xxix., xxx. v., "Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children for the Kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive many-fold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting."

Furthermore, it appears that God has such regard for the old polygamist Jacob, and his twelve sons, (Patriarchs of God, born of four different wives, and whom the christian world at this day would pronounce bastards, and their mothers cyprians,) that He is going to have their names engraven upon the twelve gates of the Holy City, New Jerusalem, to come down from God out of Heaven. (See Rev. xxi. 12.) Likewise their descendants are those who are to receive the "Seal" of the living God in their foreheads. (See Rev. vii. 3-9.

Paul in writing to Timothy enjoins upon him that a bishop or deacon "must (at least) be the husband of one wife," i. e. no bachelor or single man would be permitted to rule over the Church of God.

Paul says that "as Christ is Head of the Church, so is man head of the woman." "That the man is not without the woman in the Lord, neither is the woman without the man in the Lord." "And the glory of the man is the woman." Hence, without woman where is man's glory?

The Prophet Isaiah (chap. iv.) in speaking of the day when "the Lord would create upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud of smoke by day and the shining of a flaming fire by night," &c., says, "In that day seven women shall take hold of one man, saying, we will eat our own bread and wear our own apparel, only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach."

In relation to the passage from the "Book of Jacob, and Mosiah" in the Book of Mormon "An Inquirer" has referred us to, we would respectfully inquire of him why he omitted to quote the sentence contained in the very paragraph to which he has referred us, which reads thus: "For if I will, saith the Lord of Hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people, otherwise they shall hearken to these things," which reconciles the whole. To what things were the people of Nephi to hearken? It appears they were committing whoredoms and excusing themselves, because of the things written concerning David and Solomon, "and did not understand the scriptures," and were taking to themselves wives and concubines without the privilege, "command," or order of God, "because it was written that David and Solomon had done such things." But wherein did David and Solomon transgress? Not because they were polygamists, as we before observed. David's sin consisted in his unlawfully (to gratify his own lust) taking to himself the wife of Uriah; and Solomon in taking to himself wives and concubines of the nations God had forbid him. Hence they became transgressors before the Lord.

We read that on a certain occasion the Jews in order to turn away the anger of the Lord from them, put away some one hundred and upwards of their "strange wives" and the children they had by them," see Ezra x. ch.

But would the Nephites transgressed if the "Lord had commanded them to raise up seed unto him?" certainly not. Did Abraham, or Jacob sin because they took several wives? Verily no; because God commanded them, and all they did in this matter, they did by revelation and commandment, and all the wives they took they received from the hand of the Lord. He gave them unto them. Therefore, they were under no condemnation. And be it known to "An Inquirer" and all persons, that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with many others have received the resurrection of their bodies, entered upon their exaltations, and dominions, and sit upon thrones, with crowns of everlasting glory upon their heads, in the celestial worlds and are not angels, but Gods, among the Gods, and, their wives given them of the Almighty, in time, sealed or married for eternity, claimed in the resurrection, are Queens and Priestesses to the Most High, to bear the souls of men forever and ever. If you will receive it, this is eternal life.

Hence as Paul says, the "glory of the man is the woman." "This is a hard saying who can hear it." The Saducees desired to know of Jesus, whose wife the woman should be in the resurrection, of the seven brethren who had her to wife in time. Jesus informed them that they (like this generation denying direct revelation from God) did err "not knowing the scriptures or the power of God. For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven."

True, they are not given in marriage in the resurrection, neither are we baptxied in the resurrection, for the best of reasons, we have to do it here, Abraham and others received their wives in time, and under the keys of the sealing power of the Holy Melchisedeck Priesthood held by the prophets of God, was "sealed or married for time and all eternity. Hence to whichever one of the seven brethren the woman had been lawfally sealed in time for all eternity, would claim her in the resurrection, although the others might have her in time, and the pious Saducees, ought to have known it. But Jesus told them "they did not understand the scriptures, nor the power of God."

And so it has been with the religious world since the days the Priesthood and the order of heaven was taken from the earth, every law almost that appertained to the Gospel has been transgressed, marriage and everything else. And in view of these things, we refer "AN INQUIRER" to the 24 chap. Isaiah, from the 1st to 6th v. inclusive, wherein the Prophet says that the Lord is going to make the earth empty, turn it upside down, and scatter abroad the inhabitants; wherein People, Priest, servant, master, maid, mistress, buyer and seller, lender, borrower, taker of usury, and giver of usury are all condemned to one common destruction: That the earth is defiled under the inhabitants, and that a curse has devoured the earth, therefore the inhabitants are burned up and few men left; and the reason the Prophet assigns for this dire and universal ruin is, "because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant." Has not the Gospel laws, as taught by the Saviour and his Apostles and left on Record, been transgressed? Has not the ordinance of baptism been changed from immersion, to pouring, and sprinkling? And has not the "everlasting covenant" of marriage according to the Patriarchal order of heaven and Priesthood of the Son of God, for time and all eternity, with a plurality of wives, been broken, and the one wife, monagamic system of Apostate Christendom, wherein they are married until separated by death, been instituted by men in its stead, who in their hearts dispise the order of heaven, and God the author and upholder of the everlasting covenant.

Perhaps "An Inquirer" may ask has God ever commanded "The Later-Day-Saints to raise up seed unto him," or to practice polygamy? We unhesitatingly answer yes, God has revealed the order of Celestial marriage to His people in this day, as he did in former days, and that by Revelation, July 12, 1843, together with the keys of Elijah holding the sealing power to marry for time and for all eternity, and these keys and the Gospel have been restored by the administration of Holy Angels in these days, according to Rev. 14 chap. 6 and 7 v., and Malachi 4 chap. 5 and 6 v.

And we bear testimony to the same. The Mormons know and understand what they are doing, what kind of a being they are worshipping, and what it took to exalt Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the ancient worthies that are among the General assembly and church of the First-born in the celestial world. The Mormons are striving for the same glory; they have the same laws, the same priesthood, and believe and practice the same things; and those that are faithful, and live their religion look forward with bright anticipations of one day meeting Abraham, "the friend of God," although a polygamist, and enjoying the society of those loved and great ones; while those who despise the order of God, or the doings of the "Father of the Faithful," will be cast out, and will have to take up with other society—more congenial to their pious feelings; and, instead of an exaltation among the Gods, like Abraham and many others, be angels—ministering spirits or servants to those that are worthy of a more exalted station, and remain singly and alone in their saved condition, while eternity goes and eternity comes, but never attain to exaltation, because they despised the order of Heaven that leads to it.

The Mormons believe, with Paul, "That there is one glory of the sun, another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars." Or, in Celestial, Terrestrial, and Telestial Glories Paul also said, "He was caught up to the Third Heaven, and heard and saw things not lawful for man to utter.

We might enlarge considerably further upon this subject, but we do not believe in throwing away the pearls of truth and heavenly intelligence, revealed from the Courts of Glory in these days. For, "The mysteries of God are with those who fear Him." We therefore think that "An Inquirer" after reading the foregoing, (although brief as it is,) will certainly alter his mind in relation to polygamy, when he says, "If it be right, then the Scriptures and the Book of Mormon are both wrong."

Arrival of Missionaries.

SEVENTEEN of the missionaries from Utah, who were appointed missions to different parts of the world at the last General Conference held at Great Salt City, arrived in New York on Saturday morning last. We were glad to shake hands with these brethren and give them a hearty welcome. They are "hearty and hale," full of the spirit of their missions, and determined, with the help of the Lord, to push along "the Mormon car." They left their brethren and sisters in the Territory at peace with each other and "the rest of mankind." The Saints were rejoicing more and more in the great work of eternal salvation, breathing freer, and enjoying, in a marked manner, a greater portion of the spirit of the Most High, than in the past, through the blessed influences of the work of reformation.

The new arrivals are a part of the company of 70 Elders whose names were published three weeks ago. We had the pleasure of their society on Sunday in our public meetings, and we presume, judging from our own feelings, the Saints enjoyed richly their testimony. We saw "a chiel among us taking notes," and judged, from his diligence, that he belonged to the penny-a-line gentry, but was assured by him that we mistook his calling. Monday morning, however, revealed his labor, and with it the evidence of his veracity—a column and a half in the Daily Times. We are always doubtful of a person's good intention when there is an absence of that straightforward, business-like procedure which characterizes honest men, and our doubts of this scribbler have been confirmed by his report. He seems to be a bleareyed, jaundiced gentleman, who sees all things colored with his own diseased system. The next time we are privileged with his society we probably will measure our peck with his, and see who requires to shake together and press down to keep from running over.

Prosperity of a Mormon Saint.

A Baltimore paper gives the following interesting particulars relating to the present history of a distinguished Mormon:

The man Cowley—Matthias Cowley is his full title—stands about five feet six inches high, with a stock of flame colored hair between him and heaven, and a pair of dull red whiskers. He is thirty-seven years of age, and has ten wives in Utah, whom he left behind him. He is very prosperous in his worldly affairs. Among his crops last year were eight children, four colts, eighteen calves, about eighty lambs, six hundred bushels of yellow corn, four hundred bushels of wheat, besides a large quantity of esculent roots, &c., &c. According to the opinion of those conversant with the matter, he has received from his converts, in cash, the sum of $75,000 to $100,000, of which he, or the church, will pocket at least $50,000.

[The above is pretty rich. One of Elder Cowley's most intimate friends informs us that he is still a bachelor. We are afraid that his great increase and riches are, therefore, very doubtful. Great pity!—[ED. MORMON.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE din of the police war is considerably diminished. Judge Russel has relieved Mayor Wood from the inconvenience of the writ of habeas corpus and his Honor now stands, to the charge of resisting Coroner Perry's writ, "not guilty." The fighting is still going on between both parties of police awaiting the final decision.

On Sunday 139 Filibusters, male and female, the remnant of General Walker's army, arrived here by the United States steam frigate Wabash. They have had their fill of war and return with its glories, some of their number armless, minus a continuation and the generality broken down in health, sick and poverty stricken. Walker left for the South on Wednesday. He has had a poor reception in this city—the want of success.

Commissioner Reed embarked on board the steam frigate Minnesota on Tuesday, and sailed the same evening for the Chinese rivers.

As the steamer Montreal was on her passage from Quebec to Montreal on Saturday last with about five hundred passengers, chiefly emigrants from Scotland, she took fire and in ten minutes was wholly enveloped in flames. A considerable number were saved, by the other boats and by swimming ashore; 300 are considered to have perished by fire or water. The scenes connected with this calamity were, as may be imagined, heartrending.

Mr. N. P. Banks, the late Speaker in the House of Representatives, is up for Governor of Massachusetts.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

THE cholera is reported to be raging violently at St. Petersburgh. Russia seems to suffer considerably from this awful epidemic. The number of deaths in the capital is reported as high as seventy a day. Disturbances have taken place on the Galican frontier, through the excitement occasioned by the apprehension of the anticipated comet that was to come but didn't! The military had to be called out to calm the folks.

The Emancipation Belge states that officers on missions in Belgium have been suddenly recalled. These events are construed into a confirmation of the unsatisfactory relations said to be existing between the governments of the two countries.

The baptism of the fifth daughter of Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, on the 16th ult., at Buckingham Palace, brought out a great regiment of the English Lords, Dukes, and the long string of nabobs in glitter and tinsel.

The Greytown bombardment has been up in the English House of Commons, and Palmerston has next to caved in before Uncle Sam's almighty greatness. The opposition has hit "Pam." severely and told him that he was a bully over the weak, and a coward before a respectable, good sized enemy.

Governor and Troops for Utah.

So frequently have the public been informed by the special correspondents of our daily press residing at Washington, that Major this or Colonel that, or this ex-Member of Congress, or that ex-Governor of some place had been appointed to the Governorship of Utah, and as often have these reports been contradicted again, that now we really don't know whether a Governor has been appointed or not. The general impression is, that Col. Cumming has been appointed, and purposes going thither with his family. We have seen this confidently asserted, heard nothing to the contrary, and the present calm over the subject lends an air of consistency to the statement. The Colonel is represented by his friends to be the man for Utah; and likely by his good qualities to be acceptable to the Utonians. Time tries all men. We'll wait and see.

Troops are marching for Utah, so it is said; but there is some of the obscurity that characterized the appointment of a Governor, likewise, about the destination of the troops. We have seen reports of troops for Utah and their line of march chalked out, and in a day or so after have noticed these same troops reported on an expedition to the Indian country, to chastise the Cheyennes. General Harney is however reported appointed to the command of the army destined for Utah, and the administration, according to Washington correspondents, have been busily engaged in the organization of a new Military Department, to be styled the "Department of Utah." For the present we refrain from commenting on this step of President Buchanan and his advisers, adding only the following clippings on the subject.

THE APPOINTMENT OF COLONEL CUMMING AS GOVERNOR OF UTAH.

We believe we are not too premature in announcing, this morning, that Col. Cumming, of Missouri, has been appointed Governor of Utah, and that he intends to remove his family thither, with the view of making that Territory his permanent residence. Col. Cumming is a gentleman of tried official integrity, and of large experience in frontier life. Possessing great personal courage, of a conciliatory nature, yet prompt and energetic in the discharge of duty, he will bring to the important responsibilities which he has assumed the most essential qualities for success in the delicate, and even dangerous, mission which has been confided to him.

The difficulties to be encountered in Utah are more numerous and complicated than is now generally supposed. Among them may be incidentally mentioned that Brigham Young claims a title to all the lands in the Territory, and has never recognized the United States surveys. None of his followers have purchased lands in accordance with our laws. Hence one of the delicate duties of the Federal Courts in that territory will be to establish and maintain the rights of those who may hereafter purchase in accordance with our laws. Not an individual in all Utah now holds a foot of land the title of which is derived from the United States, and it follows, under this strange condition of things, that all parts of the Territory are at the present time open to pre-emption.

[Washington Union.

DEPARTURE OF SOLDIERS.

Eight companies of the Tenth Infantry, commanded by Col. E. B. Alexander, and who have occupied Forts Snelling and Ridgely for the last year, took their departure from our Territory yesterday, in accordance with the "General Orders" of May 28th, 1857, for Fort Leavenworth, in Kansas, from which point it is anticipated they will be ordered to Utah.—[St. Paul Pioneer, June 18.

DRAGOONS FOR FORT LEAVENWORTH.

The steamer White Cloud arrived last night, from St. Paul with 200 U. S. Dragoons on board from Fort Snelling, bound for Fort Leavenworth, Nebraska Territory.

This morning, the steamer Minnesota Belle, arived with 200 more dragoons, and forty mules, directed for the same point, en route for Utah.—Dubuque Tribune.

TROOPS LEAVING THIS CITY FOR UTAH.

A force of one hundred and ninety-two recruits left Governor's Island several days ago for Utah, via New York and Erie Railroad. Before moving into the territory they will remain some time at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, where they will be attached to the several regiments destined for Utah. The recruits sent from New York for this purpose belong to what is called the general service—that is, they are liable to be drafted into the artillery, infantry, or other class of soldiers.

Two hundred or two hundred and fifty recruits will leave here for the same field of operations next Monday. The entire force destined for the Mormon territory will consist of three regiments—two of infantry and one of cavalry—numbering about 2,500. This army is considered large enough to keep the turbulent people of that region in order. The appointment to the command has not yet been made public.—N. Y. Evening Post.

WASHINGTON, June 29.

I learn that to-day official orders and instructions were sent to Gen. Harney, who is to have command of the Utah expedition, and that it is to be composed of the Twentieth Dragoons, the Fifth and Tenth Infantry—which will shortly be at Fort Leavenworth—together with the battery of the Fourth Artillery, now at that post, all of which will be prepared to march to, and establish a post at or near Salt Lake City, and at the earliest practicable day he (Gen. Harney) will put the troops en route, but will until that time retain his present command of troops in Kansas. On the 6th of January next, after the Territory of Utah shall have been entered by the troops, it will constitute a new and separate military department, to be styled the "Department of Utah," to be commanded by Gen. Harney, or the senior officer present, who will, from the time of leaving Fort Leavenworth, be the commander of a separate army in the field, within the sense of the 56th article of war. The armament and equipment deemed most suitable for the service of the battery of artillery will be selected, and, if necessary, extended in guns and horses, by the commander of the expedition. I also learn that, under the authority of the Secretary of War, the post at Salt Lake City, when established, and any other posts not exceeding two in addition, that may be established in Utah, will be included among the "chaplain posts" and "double ration posts" of the army.

Capt. Duncan leaves here to-morrow to take charge of the troops now at Carlisle Barracks, intended for the Utah service.

[Cor. of the N. Y. Herald.

The Herald's correspondent from St. Paul, Minnesota, June 8th says:

"The troops from Fort Snelling, six miles from this place, ordered for Utah, leave to-day at 3 P. M. via Fort Ridgeley."

THE UTAH EXPEDITION.

This expedition goes on. It is in vain for us, perhaps, to protest against an adventure which can hardly hope of success, but we regard it as our duty to do so, and we shall persist in it. Had this expedition been determined upon in early spring—had we been told that 2,500 men were to be sent across the prairies of the West, with a view to take position where they could enforce obedience to the laws of the United States, not only from the Mormons, but every one else in that Territory—if it had been given out that horses, mules and cattle were wanted in early spring for such an expedition—is there any one who supposes the Commissary and Quartermaster's Department would now find themselves in the predicament in which they are placed—short of supplies, and driven day and night to extraordinary exertions to comply with their orders. We assume, as a settled fact, that no military expedition, fully equipped and prepared for active field operations, can be fairly put upon the field before the 15th of July to the 1st of August, and that it will take sixty days before they can reach the "Reserve," within forty miles of Salt Lake City. They will not get there before the last of October, and then they will be without tents, and exposed to the heavy snows of that region, and, if the Mormons should be disposed to be hostile, to attacks from well-trained men in that quarter and all the annoyances which they can bring to bear upon the troops.

Look at the actual condition of affairs. We propose to send 2,500 men in military array to Utah, but this number when they come to be mustered will not exceed 1,800 reliable men. It is hardly possible that less than six or eight hundred wagons will be wanted to carry supplies for the troops, and the civilians who will go in charge of this part of the expedition. As we have already said, this expedition will be hardly started before the end of July, and it will be well if they find themselves at the "Reserve" by the first of November. Winter will be upon them at that early period, and no one can say what will become of them in that inhospitable region. The cold is enough to kill them, even if the Mormons should do no more than to avoid them, and leave them to their fate. But a new enemy is on their route, as our last night's news tells us, and it may turn out to be as much as the troops can do to hold the Cheyennes in check, and to protect the emigrants in their persons and property. The troops must at once be employed in this new field of service; and we trust the Government will give up all thought of the Utah expedition and go to work to punish the savages for their depredations upon the property, and the sacrifice of the lives of the emigrants to California. We do not know that it will be necessary at any future time to turn the army of the United States against the Mormon people, but so sure as we do we shall find that we have to whip the Indians as well as the Mormons, and then it will be no child's play for a long while to come.—[St. Louis Republican, 16*th.*

Postmaster for Utah.

On the 28th of October last Mr. Hiram F. Morrell was appointed Postmaster at Salt Lake City, Utah, in the place of Elias Smith removed. The credentials were regularly forwarded from the department, but never delivered to Mr. Morrell. Duplicates followed with no better success. Mr. Morrell now being at the seat of the general government, yesterday received his commission, qualified before the Hon. George P. Stiles, associate Judge of Utah, now in Washington, entered into the bonds required, and in a day or two will start fully endowed to take charge of the Post Office at Salt Lake City.—[Washington Correspondent.

[It is quite possible that Mr. Morrell did not receive his credentials. Quite likely indeed! The writer insinuates that the mails were opened, and in these days of excitement intended to corroborate the numerous charges against Gov. Young and the officials of Utah. We beg to inform the Washington correspondent that the Mormons had not the mail contract that carried or should have carried Mr. Morrell's credentials, and we apprehend that the Mormons have had more reason to complain of a plundered mail than any outsiders. So much so that we have always been obliged to send duplicate letters by both routes to Utah.—ED. MORMON.]

Inscribed to Judge Drummond.

THE following verses were sent to this office, by whom we know not; but as they may amuse the Honorable gentleman and we are not acquainted with his address, we give them a place in our paper in hopes that "his valued friend" may hand them to him. By-the-bye we are not responsible for the quality of the poetry as we claim none of the author's glory. We have a poet's son among us, and we strongly suspect he is the author—the inspiration is in the family.—[ED.

INSCRIBED TO JUDGE DRUMMOND.

O THOU who'art by hell inspir'd
To action on this stage;
Thy deadly, judic'ry advice
Hath made the halcyon rage.

Against the Saints, thy righteous spleen
Has been profusely spread;
And where thy blasting tongue was heard
'Tis counted now as dead.

Thy name was held in reverence,
Till facts appear'd so plain;
No longer could thy friends withhold
Thy guilty head from shame.

'Tis prov'd, and thou can'st not confute—
Procedures have been sore;
In what the Gentiles now believe
The Mormons knew before.

Thy name inscrib'd on history's page
With infamy will reek.
A curse, a guilty man withal
When silent will bespeak.

Thine acts of treachery were great,
Fair Utah's faults to scan;
Forgetting thine own weakness, the
Humanity of man.

Amend your ways, you lying 'judge,'
Be truthful, and be wise;
In speaking of man's character,
You can't be too precise.

From Salt Lake—Hand-Carts—Mormon Elders—Judge Drummond.

ON Wednesday last, 10th inst., a hand-cart train of about 70 Mormons arrived in our city from Salt Lake. Impelled by a desire to examine the much-abused hand-cart, and to obtain such other information in relation to it as we could gather from those who had used it, we paid a visit to the camp. We found the carts formed in a circle, in the same manner as they are placed in camping out. The build is precisely like those used by the colored porters in Philadelphia and other eastern cities. The bodies of the carts were tastefully painted to suit the fancy of the owners, and with such inscriptions on the sides as "Truth will prevail," "Zion's Express," "Blessings follow sacrifice," "Merry Mormons." They had canvass covers, and were better-looking vehicles in every respect, than we had expected to see. From the accounts published in the leading journals throughout the country, the general impression upon the mind of the public is, that the hand-cart is the slowest and most laborious mode of conveyance that can be used. From the report of this party, and of others, we are inclined to think it exactly the reverse. This party was but 19 days in coming from Fort Laramie, a distance of 520 miles—an average of over 27 miles per day—some days they made 35 miles. This is certainly not slow travelling, and when we reflect upon the many inconveniencies to which a traveler is subjected with his horses, mules and oxen, in crossing the plains; the crossing of streams, danger of stampedes, selection of camping place for the cattle, tethering and working with them morning and night, we are inclined to think that for a California or Salt Lake trip, we would give the hand-cart the preference over any other mode—unless we had fine mule teams and so few of other traps as to enable us to take plenty of corn for the animals.

The members of this party were Elders going on missions to different parts of the world; they appeared to be intelligent, and looked like orderly and well-behaved citizens, yet full of fun,—they were feeling finely after their trip, and expressed themselves to be on hand for a foot race or wrestling match, with any one in Florence who might feel inclined to indulge. They report the plains to be in fine condition, had killed a few buffalo and deer, and met with several parties of Sioux Indians, who treated them in a very friendly manner.

They spoke of Judge Drummond as a man of bad habits, who would forfeit the respect of any community—that when he was appointed they expected he would bring his wife along, whose brother is a Mormon, and settled in Utah; instead of which, he had a woman of notoriously bad character, who he passed off as his wife, and who he would sometimes bring into court and seat beside him on the bench. This is their statement—we should not wonder if it was true, knowing, as we do, that many persons look upon the whole female population of Utah as a mere collection of prostitutes, and being told by traders—not Mormons—who have visited the country, that many immigrants passing through, en route for California, act upon this belief, and thus engender many of the difficulties which occur with this people.

This is strengthened, when we reflect, how difficult it must be to find a man of any standing, who would be willing to accept an office in such an out-of-the-world place—separated from friends and home, and where there is so little chance for a "Gentile" to make money, or to gain political advancement.

They report the country to be in a more prosperous condition than it has ever been before—contradict the report of the flight of Brigham Young, and of the great numbers of seceders from them. They say that probably from 75 to 100 families have left or will leave this spring; that Brigham Young had started on a mission to the northern part of the Territory; it being his custom to go on a mission every spring, though, he had heretofore, gone south.

The party sold their wagons at auction, at prices ranging from $8 to $12—they had cost $40 to build, in the valley.

Correspondence of Elder Joseph W. Young.

NEW YORK, June 29, 1857.

EDITOR MORMON—Dear Sir: Having just arrived from Great Salt Lake City, I have thought that a few items would not be uninteresting to you, and the numerous readers of your valuable paper. I left Utah on the 23d of April in company with seventy Elders, on missions to Europe, the United States and other countries. We had a very pleasant trip across the plains, and arrived at Florence, Nebraska, May 10th, all in good health. The particulars of the journey, Elder Mackintosh gives in his report.

On the 11th of June, my cousin Brigham H. Young, and I left Florence for Iowa City. On the 12th of June, we met Bro. Israel Evans and Benjamin Ashbey, 21 miles east of Bluffs City, with the first hand-cart company of emigrants en route for Great Salt Lake City. They were all in good health, and in first-rate spirits. They were provided with mule teams to haul their extra provisions, and were traveling from fifteen to twenty miles per day. We had only a few moments to stay with them as the stage would not wait for us.

We met the first company of ox teams, under the presidency of Elder Jesse Martin, four miles west of Fort Des Moines, on the 18th, and as the stage stopped over night at that place, we improved the opportunity of visiting with the Saints, for a short time. Elder Martin called the camp together and we had the pleasure of speaking to the Saints, after which the sisters sang several of the sweet songs of Zion, which was very refreshing to us, after having had for two days and nights, our ears outraged by a continual air of profanity. After blessing the Saints and being blest by them, we bade them good bye and continued our journey.

About noon of May 14th, some hundred and twenty-five miles from Iowa City, we met the New York company, Bros. Jacob Hofheins and G. J. Taylor in charge. They also were in first-rate health and spirits, had splendid teams and wagons, and were making good headway. We stopped only a few moments with them, just long enough to learn their condition, and to tell them that all was right in Utah.

We arrived at Iowa City on the 15th, met the last hand-cart company ten miles from the city, also the Danish company of teams close behind them, the former under the presidency of Elders James Park, Dilley and Geo. Thurston, and the latter under that of Elder M. Cowley.

They were all in first-rate condition and judging from what we could see they will have a speedy and prosperous journey. The hand-cart company was fitted up as well as it is possible to fit up a company in that way, and having had experience in that mode of traveling, I feel safe in predicting that they will make the trip quicker than any ox train has ever done.

Elders J. A. Little and Wm. G. Young, have fitted up this emigration, and I bare testimony that they have spared no labor in making the Saints comfortable. Elder Young was very busy preparing to start out his baggage train which closes this year's emigration.

We spent two days with him, and the few Saints composing his company, then took our departure for New York, and they left for the valleys of the mountains. Thus we have seen all the emigration for this year on the move.

My feelings were very peculiar when parting with my brother William at Iowa, and the kind Saints with him. They are on their way to the peaceable valleys of Jacob, where all that is dear to me on the earth dwell; wife, children, parents, friends, and the Saints of God, all, all, I love is there. But, with me, how different; my lot is to be cast among strangers, in strange lands to suffer the abuse and derision of those who despise the truth, that through faith, patience, and endurance I may persuade some to be saved.

A word about Utah and the people there, and I will close. I find a great many reports in the papers with regard to "War with the Mormons," "Brigham Young in rebellion against the General Government," "Danite Band," "Murder," "Corruptions," &c.

Now, Mr. Editor, I happen to know something of affairs in Utah, and as one of her citizens I have a right to speak. In regard to war, I will say that the Mormons are making no calculations for any such business, nor are they making any preparations for such a contingency, further than those which the law requires of every State and Territory, viz: that of organizing the militia.

Brigham Young is not in rebellion against the General Government, nor has he ever been. True, he is down on the acts of certain corrupt scoundrels, and is the enemy of wickedness and oppression; furthermore, when he ceases to be such a man as he now is, I cease to be his friend. He is the friend of mankind, the friend of the oppressed and down-trodden, the friend of truth, justice, virtue, and every thing that is God-like, and the enemy of lies, vice, corruption, and wickedness, wherever it may be found, whether in high or low places. And that man who says to the contrary is, in scripture phraseology, "a liar and the truth is not in him."

There is no such thing in Utah as a "Danite Band." Every true-hearted man is a friend to his brother, and will not see his rights infringed upon with impunity. Does any honest man see aught amiss in that principle?

Who has been killed by the Mormons? No one. But every murder that has been committed by the Indians between the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean is charged upon the Mormons, and Brigham Young must, of course, be at the bottom of it all. I wonder if ever runaway judges, disappointed politicians and newspaper correspondents have read that passage of scripture which says "cursed is he that loveth and maketh a lie."

How can a people be so very corrupt who do not get drunk, who do not profane the name of God, who are honest and upright in all their dealings, who marry their wives, support them and make them honorable in the eyes of God and all good men, who educate their children and teach them the fear of God, who look upon the marriage vow as being the most sacred of earthly ties, and who prize virtue more than life?

If this nation wish to purify the morals of the people, and put down infamy and corruption, I would suggest that they begin in New York city, where they bawl so much against Utah. I do most positively assert that I have seen more drunkenness, heard more swearing, and seen more fighting, in one evening in this city, than I ever saw in Utah, and I was one of her first settlers.

I testify that the people in Utah are a good people, a law-abiding people, and that they love the institutions of their country as dearly as any people in these United States. Brigham Young will resign the Governorship of Utah without a word when his successor is appointed, and there is no possible chance of any collision between the Mormons and the General Government, unless President Jas. Buchanan should appoint some hot-headed, blood-thirsty fool as Governor of Utah, who will go beyond all law, all reason, and all good sense, and attempt to rule the people with a high hand. If such a thing should ever take place, let me here say that such a man will find the same spirit in Utah that actuated the citizens of Boston, when a certain power attempted to force them to a tame submission of its will, and he will also find that the same God helps the oppressed that sustained our fathers in their struggle for freedom.

With kind regards for you, and good-will towards all lovers of truth,

I remain,
Your Brother in the Gospel of Christ,
J. W. YOUNG.

Correspondence of Elder Daniel Mackintosh.

NEW YORK CITY, June 27, 1857.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

BEING Clerk of the Hand-Cart Company of missionaries, who started from Great Salt Lake City, Utah Territory, April 23, it perhaps would be interesting to your numerous readers, to give in brief a statement of the organization of the Company and our journey here.

On the 24th of April, our little band of Seventy Elders, including officers, with 26 hand-carts took our line of march from Emigration Kanyon, under the conduct of the following brethren:

Henry Herriman,	President.
Joseph W. Young,	Counsellor.
Stephen H. Goddard,	do.
Daniel Mackintosh,	Clerk.
Wm. H. Branch,	Captain.
James Gallie,	Chaplain.
George Goddard,	Chorister.
Miner G. Atwood,	Captain 1st Ten.
Eli Harvey Peirce,	do 2d do
Joel Terry,	do 3d do
David Brinton,	do 4th do
Thomas Hall,	do 5th do

The name, Office of the Priesthood, and varied points of destination, were reported by letter to the Editor of the Deseret News, and if the report reached his office in that place you will find that piece of information if required.

Under the above arrangement we traveled with our hand-carts across the plains to Florence, Nebraska Territory, without horse, mule, cow, or any other animal to assist: drawing in them our provisions, bedding, cooking utensils, tents, &c., at which place we arrived in the full enjoyment of health on the 10th inst., making the entire trip from point to point in 48 days; but out of that number, we lay by to rest, repair carts, &c., 7 1-2 days, which would make the total number of traveling days 40 1-2, and we would remark that we are satisfied that the trip can be accomplished in a shorter period, say from 30 to 35 days; but the carts with iron axles should be at least 3 feet 10 inches on the track, instead of 3 feet 6 inches, made of the best malleable iron, without flaws when forged.

In our opinion, so as to insure safety, the spindle at the shoulder should be at least one inch, or an inch-and-an-eighth, and at the point, 6-8 of an inch, and to be made with but little gather. The carts with iron axles are decidedly the easiest to travel with, and a very light tent would be found exceedingly useful in a stormy day.

On our way thither we had no trouble whatever with the Indians and saw but few, except a band of the Ogallalie siouxs, who were very friendly; neither had we any trouble with the whites; and we were generally treated very courteously by those of them with whom we had any business to transact, and as to our own conduct, we have not heard of any accuser, therefore are not disposed at present to accuse ourselves.

Upon our arrival at Florence, our ears were saluted with the general tissue of lies circulated through newspaper columns, about the rebellious spirit existing in Utah towards the United States Government; at this we were not at all surprised, when we arrived at the sources from which they originated; and we have no fears in saying that they are as false as Hell, and were only concocted in the frenzied brains of political aspirants, demagogues, and corrupt hearts, so as to screen their own iniquity from public gaze, and furthermore to get up some excitement, by which Uncle Sam's pockets could be rifled out of a few millions of dollars that lay unexpended in the treasury.

We say let the old man do it, he is rich, but being numbered in the family, we feel as though we hate to see the old fellow, so badly fooled in his old age, more especially as the measures contemplated to be resorted to arise solely on a pretended family insubordination, which could be easily settled by sending three men to Utah to enquire into the truth of the matter.

At Florence, the Elders were well received by the Saints, and in a few days began to scatter to their various fields of labor, while the greater portion kept together, took steamer for St. Louis, and arrived there on the 18th inst. and were hospitably entertained by President Horace S. Eldredge and the Saints.

We started by railway from St. Louis on the 23rd, and arrived in this city on the 27th, well, with the exception of some complaining of colds.

The Presidency of the Eastern States, Presidency of Branches, and the Saints in general have exemplified already by their works that liberal feeling which always characterizes Saints of the Most High.

It is expected that in a few days the brethren for Europe will embark at this port, those for Canada left the company in the Western States and have probably arrived in their fields of labor, and those for the States are ready to carry out their appointments.

Emigration.

"THE Mormon reserve has presented a lively appearance during the past week, dotted all over with the tents and covered wagons of the emigrants, large numbers of whom have lately arrived having come across Iowa. They are principally English and Germans, and appear to be well provided for their journey—many of their ox teams are remarkably fine. There was preaching on Sunday. Some of our citizens attended through curiosity—they represent the vocal music to have been excellent.

A wagon train has also come in from Salt Lake, which started a few days before the hand-cart train to which we have referred in another column. Some of the party are seceders from Mormonism, who obtained permits to leave Utah on the plea of business. Mrs. Babbitt, widow of the Mormon Elder who was reported to have been killed by the Indians, accompanied the party. We understand that she is not a seceder."—Florence Courier, June 18.

[We beg respectfully to inform our co temporary, the Courier, that "seceders from Mormonism" require no "permits to leave Utah," but those which are justly required of the Mormons in leaving Florence—paying honorable debts.—ED.]

Missionaries Arrived at New York, June 27, 1857.

☞ The columns of THE MORMON are open to the correspondence and articles of the Elders; but, while we believe in according full liberty to all, we hold ourselves irresponsible for the particular sentiments of any.

Notice to Subscribers

WE frequently receive remittances for subscriptions to THE MORMON, without the sender giving the name of the place he desires the paper to be sent to. Sometimes the name of the Post Office or town is mentioned, but not the county, and as there are several towns in some States by the same name, unless the county is designated we are at a loss to know where to direct the papers ordered. We wish all communications to us to name distinctly the Post Office or town, county, and State or Territory, as then there will be no mistake.

Notice.

THE Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Philadelphia, assemble for worship in the Arch Street Assembly Rooms, on the North-east corner of Ninth and Arch Streets, every Sunday morning, at half-past ten o'clock, in the afternoon at three, and in the evening at half-past seven. Preaching morning and evening. The public are invited to attend.

The Presiding Elders of Branches connected with the Philadelphia Conference, and scattered members or others in that region of country, who may wish to procure the Books published by this Church, should send their orders to President Angus M. Cannon, No. 230 New Market Street, above Vine, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Letters for T. B. H. Stenhouse should be addressed to Box No. 3957, Post Office, New York.

All newspapers intended for "OUR" eyes, should be addressed simply, Editor of THE MORMON, New York.

Notice.

THE SAINTS who desire to send means to their friends in Europe, can have the same attended to, by forwarding any sum they wish in current money, to this office, enclosing one dollar or more, in proportion to the amount sent, to defray the expenses of procuring Bills of Exchange, making remittances, foreign postage, &c., describing particularly to whom, and where they wish to have it sent; at the same time not holding myself responsible in any manner whatever unless the money reach me.

All subscriptions, donations, &c., for the support of THE MORMON, or Conference Fund (except the donations and Conference Funds raised in the Philadelphia Conference, which will be forwarded as usual through President Cannon) must be sent hereafter to my address; as also Tithing; P. E. Fund, and donations for the Temple from those who wish to contribute the same, so each person may be duly credited, and the means forwarded to Zion, and have their names entered in "The Book of the Law of the Lord."

No Power of Attorney, or other legal instrument of writing, going to Europe or elsewhere, forwarded to us for the purpose of sending to Washington in order to obtain the attestation of the Department, and the British Consul's Certificate and seal to the same, will be attended to in future, unless the means to defray the expenses and foreign postage accompanies the Instrument, as there is considerable expense attending it as well as labor. We would like to oblige all, and are willing to give our services when we have opportunity; but we cannot advance means to defray such expenses.

All communications intended for THE MORMON should be addressed—Editor of THE MORMON, New York. Otherwise direct to my address, Box No. 3957, New York Post Office. W. I. APPLEBY.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie; et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spiritual "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

The Gospel Proclamation.

BY E. W. TULLIDGE.

HARK! 'tis the sound of the great proclamation,
In deep-toned strains from on high;
The cry is passing from nation to nation,
"The Bridegroom's coming is nigh."
O'er the land, o'er the sea, the Saviour shall reign,
And "Peace on the earth, good will unto man,"
Shall angels' sweet voices be chanting again.

List! for it tells of old Israel's redemption,
Passing like music along;
And did you not know the Prophets make mention,
Again would Jacob be strong.
His seed shall inherit the land and the main,
When "Peace on the earth, good will unto man,"
By angels' sweet voices is chanted again.

Sound loud the trump of this last dispensation;
Sound it through every land;
Let the glad tidings of Gospel salvation
Be wafted from strand to strand.
And the chorus shall swell in a thrilling strain—
"Now, peace is on earth, good will among men,
And angels' sweet voices are chanting again."

The Religious Press—Its Character and Circulation.

From the New York Herald.

THE religious press consists of a large number of periodicals, published in the principal cities of the Union, and scattered generally abroad, having their circulation specially confined to the religious world. We shall not undertake to enumerate this press by giving the names of its several publications. They are very numerous, but the greater number are published here in New York. The whole weekly circulation is, however, only about 150,000 sheets per week, while the secular weekly press is over 600,000 sheets per week; and the daily press equals nearly 1,100,000 sheets per week; of which more than one-half is issued by the New York Herald establishment.

These journals are severally put forth with the special purpose of advocating the particular doctrines of the religious denomination which they represent. Each sect has its organ, in pursuance of the fashion of the times, according to which every and any sentiment, be it great or little, wise or foolish, universal or special, as soon as it finds lodgment and obtains embodiment in a sufficient number of persons and minds, must forthwith have a journal for its organ, to support and promulgate it. The circulation of all such organs necessarily depends upon the number of adherents to the views and sentiments represented, and is large or small according to the sentiment advocated is favored by few or many. Hence the numerical strength of any sect of party may, in some degree, be measured by the extent of the circulation enjoyed by its organ.

As with the journals which represent political parties, some of them are undertaken by individuals at their own risk, and some are issued by the body or party; so it is with the religious journals. Some of them emanate from religious societies or bodies, and are clothed with a certain degree of official authority, while others are the offspring of individual enterprise, relying on the zeal and numbers of the denomination for their support. None of these journals have a spontaneous circulation at all to be compared to the independent press, such as, for example, the New York Herald. While the independent press has some difficulty, even with the most powerful steam machinery, to throw off daily copies enough for its subscribers, and fast enough for the demand, the religious press—that portion at least which depends upon the spontaneous and unforced demand of the people—lives a stinted and precarious life, and in some cases can hardly find readers enough to support its existence. This fact would seem to indicate not that the private religious sentiment or the disposition towards religious truth is weak and small among the millions of the people, but that the hold which the religious sects possess upon the minds and the influence of religious corporations of all kinds upon the great mass, is feeble and in some measure forced. This is a suggestive idea, which it would repay the trouble of perusing and following out, if it were not calculated to lead us far out of reach of the subject we propose to inquire into. One important consequence, however, of this state of the public mind, we cannot forbear from noticing, and it is this, namely: that the great religious mind of the people is dissatisfied with the religious organizations and corporations of the day, and is only held by them with a feeble hold, for want of something better; and that, if such men as the apostles should now be sent, as they were formerly sent, to inaugurate a better state of things in religion and instruction, they would, in spite of the opposition of established organizations, succeed in overthrowing the corruption which has overspread the land in the article of religion. Perhaps such a day and the hope of better things are at hand.

The character and condition of the organized sects called the religious world, are to be seen and discovered in the religious press. It is formed and conducted to suit the mind and taste of those who support it, and is a tolerably accurate mirror and glass, reflecting the mind and spirit of the religious world. We propose, therefore, to consider some of the prominent characteristics by which it is strongly marked and distinguished.

Contention, strife and disputation are the great characteristics of the religious press.

The whole religious world, in all its sects and divisions, is by means of the press, set in motion by each party, at constant war with itself. The battle and fight are incessantly carried on in the very camp of religion. This state of warfare among themselves, in which not only sect fights against sect, but even a portion of one sect is armed to the fight against another portion of the same sect, is a palpable proof not merely that in this Denmark there is great "rottenness," but also that they cannot stand. The whole house must fall, and we are doubtless on the eve of some great revolution in religion. The religious house is so divided, and the religious world is come to be such a corrupt world, that every lover of truth and righteousness must look for and long after a change.

Everybody knows how bitterly and savagely these several journals of religion fight against each other. We shall not give specimens of what is so well known, nor quote the reproachful epithets with which every one is familiar. But if we inquire into the cause of such wrathful ire in minds pretending to be eminently celestial, the solution will be plain. It is a selfish contest between earthly uncelestial men, for earthly fame, riches, estimation and honor. The sects are like opposition lines, which all offer to carry people to the same place, and the religious press are the runners, who try to pick up all the customers they can for their special line. To do this, of course each runner cries down every line but his own, and protests that no one will safely arrive at his journey's end unless he go by the particular line which he recommends. The greater the opposition is, so much the more eager are those runners to advance the interests of their several lines. The fact is, like other runners, they have become quite a nuisance, for like them, too, all they aim at is to make as much as they can for themselves.

This rude comparison of ours aptly explains the cause of the fighting and combative character of the religious press. From the nature of things it is impossible that in religious matters any one sect can ever be at peace with another; and this is true of all religious denominations whatsoever, which subsist and live like any government, by taxing the people, and which have an organization to support. As the strength of any government consists in the greatness of the population, so the strength of a sect consists in its numbers. Like a government, it has its officers and ministers to support, and its power depends upon a large number of tax-paying people. The sects, therefore, are like so many distinct governments in a country, each appealing to the people for support, and each one zealously striving after the most people and the most money. This is a gross view of such soi-disant celestials, but it is true. All that is most gross and uncelestial is to be found in religious corporations.

It lies in the nature of religious corporations or sects to deprecate, contemn, to decry, and if possible to destroy one another, for the strength and power of each one depend upon obtaining the concurrence and assent of the greater number of people to its views and opinions. The more adherents one of them can obtain to its views, the stronger and the more respectable it is. But to induce adhesion to its own views it must necessarily decry those of all other similar corporations. Religious corporations or sects must, therefore, be opposed to each other, and therefore the religious press, which represents them, must be, as it is, a press militant, or a fighting press. Since, then, each sect requires the destruction of all other sects, in order to be itself alone the paramount and ruling sect, we see here an element which involves, necessarily, contention and strife, opposition and hatred, jealousy and envy. Such are the elements which lie at the foundation of every sect. It may hence be clearly seen that the foundation of every sect is a very hard, nay, a very wicked foundation. Can good proceed out of such corrupt elements? Let us now proceed briefly to inquire—

HOW FAR THE RELIGIOUS PRESS IS A MORAL PRESS AND ACTS AS A TEACHER OF SOUND MORALS AND GOOD CONDUCT.

In this respect, the religious press cannot really claim to be superior, if even it is equal, to the secular press. It professes, indeed, to devote itself exclusively to instruction in righteousness—that is, in the law of right conduct and right actions. But it fails lamentably in this respect: it substitutes superstitious observances for righteous conduct, and sets up a code of deeds, and formal, peculiar, ascetic feelings as a means of "going to heaven." They teach men to follow some peculiar dogmas and formalities, in order, as they tell them, to "go to heaven," while they forget to teach the law of good conduct and virtuous behavior on the earth towards all mankind, without which there is no heaven or peace or happiness to men, and certainly no "going to heaven."

They teach and preach a morbid, unmeaning sort of factitious, artificial morality, like the following, which we find in the New York Observer of the 25th ult., a Presbyterian paper:—

Time spent in unnecessary sleep is stolen. We have no right to steal our Master's time, and pass it away in sleep. A certain portion of time was given for sleep. We do our duty by devoting that time to sleep. When we thus sleep we are doing the will of God as truly as when we are praying for a revival, or urging sinners to flee from the wrath to come. But when we spend more time in sleep than is needed to refresh our bodies and our minds, we rob God and sin against Him as truly as if we were to steal money from His treasury. There are great numbers who thus steal and abuse time. He who gives to sleep two hours a day more than is necessaray, robs God of one-twelfth His time. In course of a single year he steals a whole month. In twelve years, a whole year. Some of my readers may be guilty of having thus stolen and abused several entire years.

Such is a specimen of their silly exhortations, and of the washy, unsolid, unmeaning morality which they teach.

The tendency of such spurious virtue and artificial sentimental morality is not to make known or promote the positive duties which are taught by the law of God. All that law is summed up in the words, doing righteousness—that is, in doing no wrong or evil to any one. The tendency of such teaching is to fill the mind with superstitious fear and dread, and with self-condemnation for things in themselves generally harmless and indifferent. It is in this way that these teachers of a false christianity set up a new law and a new code of morality, (that is, of right and wrong) and lead men to imagine that they are doing right and are in the way to heaven, when, on the contrary, they are doing nothing of the kind. Thus men are led to suppose that if they follow the above and similar teachings, if they do not oversleep themselves, if they do not taste fermented liquors, if they do not dance, laugh or sing, or go to a theatre, they are good Christians—they are doing the will of God.

Such is their religious moral code in general. The above extract is a fair sample, supplied by one of the purest and most orthodox of the religious sects, in his own estimation.

It would not require many ages of such teaching and such a system to destroy all the foundations and to obliterate all the traces of Christian truth and doctrine from a nation and people, and to reduce the whole to a mere exhibition of bodily abstinence, and of a broad self-denial, joined with a few mechanical practices, called by the name of piety, and clothed with superstitious reverence and false sanctity. In fact, to judge by the columns and contents of the various religious journals we have carefully examined, it has come to this already. Already, to a very general extent, the bodily deed of drinking water only, and denying one's self the use of wine or cognate materials, is become practically the essence and sum total of all virtue, moral conduct and Christianity. By such a system as this, all the foundations of Christianity are swept away. It ceases to be a great mystery, the basis and foundation stone of which is the advent of the word of God into our world, clothed in human personality, and assuming the same bodily tabernacles which we men inhabit. This and all its great and happy consequences and effects are all lost sight of and swept away by reducing Christianity and all its teachings and doctrines, all its gifts and powers, to a few simple observances of not drinking liquor, not going to theatres or balls, and of going to church on Sundays. Such, in fact, has come to be the substance and body of all that the religious teachers of the day inculcate upon their crowded and fashionable audiences in their splendid and theatrical temples. Such is substantially all the idea they have and teach of Christianity.

They teach a factitious virtue and vice; not that truth, justice and virtue which come from God and which is the divine nature itself, but that spurious, counterfeit virtue, contemptible in itself, because it is of no manner of use to God or man, and which consists in economical practices and observances—in feats of human policy—in prudential acts, of some domestic benefit, no doubt, together with superstitious acts of no benefit whatever. Plato and Epictetus, Cicero and Seneca, preached a far more manly and wholesome morality than this mean system of pious observances and exhibitions which the religious press teaches, which the religious pulpit echoes, and in which there is neither mind, nor thought, nor knowledge, nor virtue, but cant, and nothing but cant. How far, indeed, modern sectarian Christianity differs at all from ancient heathen philosophy, it would be difficult to discover from the teachings and contents of the religious press or of the pulpit which it represents and reports. All the heathen teachers taught men that they ought to do good, and that if they did so they would be happy, or "go to heaven." Modern heathen, the Buddhists, the Brahmins and other pagans, teach the same thing. This is also the essence, the whole sum and substance of the teachings of the religious press. Wherein, then, is there any difference? Such differences as exist are accessory, and not essential. Some may teach this common doctrine more intensely than others; some may teach temperance more than others; some may be more zealous, more severe and more rigid in their practice; some may mix up more cant and feeling and affected lovingness in their system, but it all results to the same end, and is the same in the end with the religion and philosophy of all ages, viz: "men ought to do good." Of course they ought. This is the common natural law, written in the hearts of all men, which He who made man has planted in the heart of man alone, or all the creatures which He has created. Their system is simple natural deism; they hope to go to heaven on the same ground on which the ancient heathen hoped to go to the Elysian Fields. It would be strange if this were Christianity, though it has come to mean no more than this. Strange infatuation and blindness of the religious press and world to teach that the great Creator of the world sent the breath of his mouth to dwell on the earth as a man among men, not in order to make them that hearken to him virtuous, just and good, as he himself is, but to make them the trembling idiots of superstition, or self-conceited pious pharisees, proudly boasting themselves against their fellow creatures. Hateful in their tartarian hatred of all those that do not join themselves to them.

ANOTHER PROMINENT FEATURE OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS IS ITS BOASTING AND SELF-EXALTING CHARACTER.

This characteristic belongs to them all, and is not confined to the organ of any particular sect. While severely engaged in hostility against each other, they agree to form an abstraction which includes them all, and this abstraction they unite greatly to puff and applaud. They call the combined religion of all the sects together, "Protestant Christianity." In this manner they create an abstract unity out of the most discordant elements; and while they condemn each other separately, they unite to applaud the ideal unity the abstraction composed out of all together, they call "Protestant Christianity." It is a singular spectacle to see bodies of men thus destroying each other in detail, while they profess to be one body in the mass.

They are separate discordant bodies, opposing, reviling and condemning each other; while at the same time, under a name which includes them all, they are loving Christians and a perfect embodiment of pure Christianity. They fight against each other in detail, and exalt and praise themselves in the mass as "Protestant Christians"—a name which includes them all. Taken separately, according to their own representations of one another, these multitudinous sects are all evil and all wrong. Every single one declares it to be so of all the others. But, taken collectively, they are all pure and good, constituting a body of excellence which they call "Protestant Christianity." What a contradiction! What an absurdity that the separate parts should each be bad, but that the whole, composed of these same corrupt parts, should be pure, good Christianity! Each part does wrong and acts badly, but, according to Harper, all of them put together produce unexampled good and the most wonderful effects. Each sect is bad, but all of them put together are the authors of all that is good in the nineteenth century. Thus, Harper's new religious paper says:

The overshadowing characteristic of the nineteenth century is unexampled activity in invention and execution in the province of the useful rather than the ornamental arts, and in favor of the masses rather than of the few. And as this activity is far more prevalent in Protestant than in Catholic countries, and indeed almost confined to them, it is fair to claim it as the product of Protestant Christianity.

Hence we see how they can boast of themselves in the aggregate as "Protestant Christians," while they confess that in detail, as separate sects, they have no right to boast. What a most convenient deception for men who know and say, religiously and truly, they are bad, to be able to lay the flattering unction to their souls that they are under another generis name quite good and authors of great good! Deceit and deception could not go much further.

This boasting and self-gratulation of the religious press and world are not confined to themselves in the mass as belonging to a perfect whole or body. It is indulged in individually, by each sect exalting itself above the others. Each religious journal contains from time to time a due proportion of puffing and boastful anecdotes, relating wonderful things of their pious men and preachers, giving glowing accounts of revivals, &c., in which the proceedings of some country priest are landed and enlarged upon with great luxury and religious feeling, and the world is informed what great "seriousness" and "numerous conversions" were produced. Every now and then, by the publication of such little scenes transacted in some country spot or distant town, they make it appear (as no doubt they believe it to be) that the whole world is on the point of being reformed and converted. It would be a sorry and nauseating picture to give extracts from their columns, showing all their silly glorying and boasting, and how they pretend to hate and condemn all boasting while they do it. We forbear, for the sake of common decency and good taste. Suffice it to say that they have ruined thousands where they have converted one, by bringing religious truth into utter contempt, and making themselves a common laughing stock and bye-word with mankind.

THE COMPOUND AND MIXED CHARACTER OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS IS ANOTHER OF ITS REMARKABLE CHARACTERISTICS.

The religious press is of a mixed character and two-fold nature, and thence partakers of all the disadvantages and evils which belong to everything of a double and contradictory nature. It is mixed, in the respect that it is partly a secular and political, and partly a religious press. It professes, indeed, to be wholly devoted to religion, and yet admits of mundane and purely political events to be recorded and discussed in its columns. We will not say that it ought not to be so. We are making this review of the religious press only with respect to what it is, not to what it ought to be.

We pretend to no other right than to say that it ought to be what it professes to be. Now, it professes to be religious—wholly and altogether pious and religious; yet it contains as much news of a political nature, and as much domestic intelligence in relation to farming, raising cattle, curing hogs, &c., as the unpretending worldly press. Is not this a contradiction to its assumed character of "religious?" It is excusable, however, and we think we might say unavoidable; for so wholly concrete, mundane and business-devoted is the mind to which the religious press is established to administer, that it is very likely this religious press would, if it were really such and nothing else, find no readers and make no profit. It stands, therefore, in this dilemma: either to be what it professes to be—a religious press, and so to have very few subscribers—or to be what it professes not to be—a worldly press—and so to prosper and obtain a large list of subscribers. In this day of religious indifference—this day rather of the deluge—in which religion is drowned in the turbid floods of cupidity, of business, of self-interest and of money making, and, above all, of a corrupt, false and perverted religious profession, who could be found to patronize and even read a paper which was purely religious and nothing else? Could simple, pure religion command at this day an auditory? Would not pure truth speak like the prophetess Cassandra, only to be unheeded and despised? Is it therefore to be wondered at that the religious conductors of the religious press, conscious of the state of the public mind, and being also themselves partakers of the same mind and condition, pursue with wise mundane policy and prudence the plan adopted by sundry venders of bitter pills and medicine, who cover their pills with a coating of sugar, and mix their jalaps with syrups and conserves? All this may be politic and excusable in worldly business matters, but we are not prepared to say that it is consonant with the professed character of a religious press. It is a clear case that this mixed character and double nature are not in harmony with the name and professed object of a religious press. It may be defended as a matter of necessity and policy; but can it be defended by the professed principles on which the religious press is founded, and on which its existence is supposed to depend? Is it religious (and by that term, in the present inquiry, we mean is it honest?) to start a religious paper, professedly as such, and, in order to gain circulation and readers, to make it a common newspaper, only differing from an ordinary secular journal by a tinge of religion now and then, and a faint daub of piety? If the men who start and manage these concerns did not profess to go upon holy grounds, we, who profess no such pre-eminence in journalism—who do not publish ourselves as celestial journalists or celestial creatures—should have no right to criticise their conduct. But when they profess holiness for their character, and resort to all manner of unholiness for their profit, we have a clear right, as to them, to tell them how the matter stands, and a plain duty, as to the public, to place in its true light such hollow professions and such wordly practice.

In this, its mixed and duplicate character, the religious press wholly and perfectly resembles the character of the religious world so called, for whose entertainment and benefit it caters. We say the religious world, for we doubt if there be a religious world, and whether the world in which we live be religious. We use the term, because it comes to hand ready made, but we claim the right of doubting its application and propriety.

This identity of character is undeniable. As we have described the religious press to be in its nature and character, so is the religious world. It is "half horse and half alligator"—that is (for so we interpret the Kentucky saying) it is partly of the nature of one beast, and partly of another. Hence it appears oftentimes under different and contradictory aspects. At one time it appears all gentleness and piety, smooth-faced, placid, benignant, benevolent. At another time it appears harsh, bitter, morose, bigoted, severe, vindictive. Such is the religious world—it looks at one time like a lamb, and at another time like a dragon. It more often, however, acts as the latter than as the former. Its looks are cheating, for it looks the one but acts the other.

The religious press is altogether of the same mixed nature. At one time it preaches gentleness and love, at another time fire and brimstone. These adverse ingredients of character spoil the mixture which they make, and render it a compound of the worst and most hateful description. Unmixed characters are the best, whether they be good or bad. Compounds in mortals are compounds of moral puridity. It is a wise saying, "Either make the tree good and its fruit good, or make it corrupt and its fruit corrupt." Confusion is bad: a compound, half good and half bad, is a deceitful, dangerous and hateful thing. A community of none but tigers might live happily together; one also of none but angels would do very well together, no doubt. But a community of half tiger and half angel can never subsist in peace. So it is with the religious world. If unmixed in character, one way or the other, it would be a better world. If it were wholly a lamb we should know what it was, or if it were wholly a dragon we should know how to shun it. But when it is compounded of both, and absolutely neither one nor the other, we are always deceived, and are forever at fault. We cannot even express a just opinion. For if we reprobate its bad qualities, we are referred to its good ones, and so the bad escapes the condemnation which it merits. Or if we commend its good qualities, we are referred to its bad ones, and so good loses its merit and appreciation. Good and evil are mutually sufferers by being thus mixed together. Good becomes bad by its mixture with evil, and evil is made worse by its union with good. We cannot love the good, for there is so much evil with it; and we cease to hate the evil, for there is so much good about it. Evil obtains the love and commendation which it ought not to have, on the credit of the good, and the good gets the odium and reproach which does not rightfully belong to it, by fault of the evil; such is the consequence of being found in bad company.

In general, however, the world makes up its mind from that which predominates. The religious world is a professed community of the good and the virtuous; it professes to be the especial temple of the Deity, and to teach and represent in its life and conversation all His will and mind, all His truth and goodness. Therefore when the world beholds the special professors of virtue to be no better than other people, and oftentimes worse, they conceive a thorough contempt for all the teachings of such persons, and doubt the truth of all they say.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1857.

Mormon Celebration of the Fourth at Norwalk.

Patriotic Oration of a Mormon Leader—The Saints' Opinion of the Constitution—The Policy of Brigham Young Explained by his Disciples, &c.

The Norwalk and Westport, Conn., branch of the Mormon church having invited their brethren from New York and other places to participate with them in a patriotic celebration of the Fourth of July at Norwalk, and judging that they would take that opportunity of making some public exposition of their views regarding the present critical state of affairs in Utah Territory, we despatched a reporter to attend the celebration; and it will be seen by the following report of the proceedings that we were not mistaken. The statements made on this occasion by leading members of the Mormon community are highly interesting, and will throw much light on the complicated condition of things now existing in Salt Lake City and the Territory of Utah.

A party of the brethren from this city, including the choir and orchestra, left for Norwalk on the steamboat John Hart on Friday afternoon. On arriving there, our reporter found that little was known of the next day's celebration by the citizens of Norwalk, but through the kindness of Mr. Stephenson, of the Norwalk Hotel, he was enabled to make the acquaintance of some of the elders of the branch there who gave him every information, and treated him with the greatest courtesy. Had the weather of the previous few days been favorable, large delegations from Boston, Philadelphia, New Haven and New York would have been present. As it was, the celebration was confined to a small number from Norwalk, Westport and New York.

The morning's train from this city brought a considerable number of guests, and on its arrival the party proceeded on board the sloop William Miller, chartered to go to an island in the bay known as Nauvoo Island. Its name was originally Smith's Island; but since last Fourth of July, on which occasion the Mormons had a celebration there, it bears the name of Nauvoo Island. This is the third celebration of the national anniversary which the Saints in the Eastern States have had.

At 11 o'clock the sloop left the wharf, the choir singing one of Christy's popular songs as she floated away. The Mormons do not confine themselves to sacred music. All the popular songs of the day—English glees, negro melodies, and even sentimental ballads—they bring into their service. Their hymns are for the most part sung to familiar "profane" airs. Judging from the events of the Fourth, solemnity or seriousness of deportment forms no part of their faith; nor do long faces and glum looks constitute with them an adjunct of piety. Jolity, good humor, lively music and kindly feelings were the prevailing features of the occasion. The men were mostly young. The ladies, though of all ages, seemed strongly to possess a uniformity of good spirits, the oldest among them going into the enjoyment of the day with as much gusto as the youngest. When one of the young ladies of the company said to our reporter "Well, I guess you didn't expect to find the Mormons such a jolly set," he had to "acknowledge the corn;" for in fact he expected to see the ladies all customed in "Shakers" skirts of piously small circumference, straight laced in manner and demure in countenance. But on the contrary, he found in the picturesque groups assembled on the woody knoll of Nauvoo Island all the modern appliances of city belles (including hoops), the radiant faces, sparkling eyes and artistically arranged hair that one usually meets with at a pic-nic party, where neither piety nor patriotism is supposed to be represented.

It was with some reserve that our reporter introduced himself to Bro. Young, the President of the Norwalk and Westport branch of the Mormons, and expressed a wish to accompany the party, for he was led to believe that a Gentile, and especially a Gentile of the press, was an obnoxious individual in the eyes of the elect. Bro. Young, however, cordially extended him the hospitality of the brethren; and it is to his kindness we are mainly indebted for the means of laying so much that is interesting before our readers this morning. On the boat were Bro. Appleby, of New York, President of the Mormon Church in the Eastern States, an intellectual looking gentleman, of tall and portly form; he is the Clerk of the Supreme Court of Utah Territory, but has been in New York over a year, his duties being now performed by a deputy; Judge Dulin, of the New York MORMON; W. H. Miles, President of the New York branch; Elder Savage, under whose care the choir and orchestra, are placed; Bro. Mackintosh, just arrived from Salt Lake City; Bro. Ott, President of the New York Conference, and Bro. Hall, also from Salt Lake City. In conversation with some of these leading brethren of the Mormon church our reporter learned many interesting facts and opinions. They spoke unreservedly, and answered all questions freely. Believing that a statement of their views will prove agreeable to our readers, we publish them in substance, as given to our reporter:

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S RELATIONS WITH THE INDIANS.

The policy which Gov. Young pursues towards the Indians, Mr. Mackintosh says, is not what it is represented—one of conciliation with any view to a friendly alliance against the United States authority. His policy is simply that he would rather feed than fight them. He finds it cheaper and more convenient. Sometimes, when they steal cattle or molest his people, he is compelled to chastise them, but he finds a wholesome warning and threats of vengeance, accompanied by kindly acts, more powerful in repressing them than an open declaration of hostility. Mr. Mackintosh was secretary to Gov. Young for four years, and is now a missionary appointed to travel in the United States. He is one of those who crossed the Plains lately with the hand-carts. He describes that journey of six weeks as being of the pleasantest character, the party resting at night under their tents, and conducting everything with the precision of a disciplined force.

ALIENISM OF THE MORMONS.

Mr. Appleby assured our reporter that the necessity of becoming citizens of the United States was universally enjoined on all emigrants to Utah. That neither Gov. Young nor any of the elders desired that their people should be other than loyal citizens of the republic. He could testify to the naturalization of thousands, whose papers he had himself signed, as clerk of the Supreme Court, within a few years. Mr. Mackintosh stated that he was a Scotchman from Perthshire, only in the country since 1849, and produced his naturalization papers in proof of citizenship.

WHO OWNS THE LAND IN UTAH.

Our reporter having asked for information as to the ownership of land in the Territory, he was informed that the public lands are not in the market yet; that the Indian title is not extinguished, though $45,000 was voted some two years ago for that purpose, which has never been paid; that there is no land office in the Territory. When it is established, it is the intention of the Mormons to purchase, claiming, of course, a pre-emption right. That the idea that Brigham Young claims all the land as his own is a malicious and absurd slander.

THE CHARACTER OF BRIGHAM.

Mr. Mackintosh, Brigham Young's Secretary, for four years, spoke highly of the Governor. He says he is a perfect gentleman—neither drinks nor swears. His moral character stands as high as any living man. He believes in polygamy, to be sure, and practices it; but Mr. Mackintosh could not tell exactly how many wives he had at present. Our reporter having some curiosity to know whether the Prophet was maligned, asked if Brigham was not vulgar, profane, and often blasphemous, in his public speeches; and he was informed that he sometimes used "strong language" when excited; that he spoke to suit his hearers; but he is really most sublime when he wants to be sublime; that he is not profane, though he may say "D——n your souls to hell;" but that our reporter was assured is only "a contraction of condemn," rather the converse of a contraction, our reporter thought, and withal very nearly akin to profanity, though coming from the lips of a prophet.

POLYGAMY.

The elders complained bitterly that their doctrine of polygamy is misrepresented. They indignantly refute the opinion that their women are held in common, and that the passions of the men are unbridled. There is no community, they aver, in which the marriage relation is esteemed more holy. Prostitution is looked upon by Mormons as a nuisance; and the man who attempted to corrupt the wife or daughter of another would be treated in Utah with more severity than in the outer world. No man can marry a second wife if he ill treats the first; nor are marriages contracted, as represented, at the will of the leaders. Our reporter was assured that they are matters solely of affection with the Mormons, as with other people. This seemed specious, but on looking round at the bright faces of the Mormon maidens, the indices of hearts created for love—perhaps for one abiding love, whose duration time cannot measure—it seemed as though the rule which may consign them to the silent sorrow which divided affection is certain to entail was most cruel, if not unnatural.

THE ISSUE WITH THE GOVERNMENT.

On the present crisis in Utah, and the probable course the Mormons would take with the United States troops now on their way to Utah, our reporter made anxious inquiry, and gathered that the Mormons are willing to obey all laws of the United States, but will not tolerate corrupt officials. Judge Drummond they condemn, and deny his statements in toto. They acknowledge that with such officials as Chief Justice Kinney, Judge Shaver and Colonel Steptoe they have no fault to find. President Appleby stated that he heard Brigham Young declare, in the presence of thousands, that if Steptoe was appointed Governor he would be the first to bow to his authority; but they did not want demagogues or politicians to rule over them, and corrupt the stream of justice. "But," our reporter said, "the crime charged against you is that you will not obey any law of the United States that conflicts with your doctrines or opinions." He was promptly answered: "They cannot conflict with the United States laws. Our book of doctrines and covenants expressly declares—'He that abideth by my law hath no need to transgress the laws of the land.' The issue they seemed to think simple enough. It was this: If the United States soldiers are sent by the government to Utah to see that the laws are enacted, they will not be molested—no notice will be taken of them; but if they come there to corrupt our wives and violate our daughters, then we will die in resistance.

MORMON OPINION OF THE HERALD.

The course of the New York press, and the Herald in particular, on Mormonism, was the subject of much conversation. President Young, expressed himself grateful for the opposition of the Herald. This newspaper slang, he said, did them a great deal of good, because numbers of people who never heard of Mormonism before, now wanted to know both sides of the question. "In fact," he said, "since 'you fellows' (a polite cognomen for the Heraldic) commenced to write about us, we can hardly attend to the number of applicants. You have spread a knowledge of Mormonism all over the world."

THE SAIL DOWN THE BAY.

Nauvoo island lies about three miles down the bay from South Norwalk. It is a small, flat island, with a solitary mound, crowned with trees, rising from its southern margin. On this mound the Mormon celebration took place. The day was calm and genial; cloudy in the morning; but about noon the sky cleared off, and the rest of the day was most propitious. On landing, a Yankee clambake was made in the most approved fashion, and disposed of with a rapidity that spoke well for the appetites of the Saints.

This ceremonial concluded, the party ascended the green mound, and under the shade of the trees the proceedings of the day commenced by a prayer from Brother Mackintosh, delivered with uplifted hands, in language and tone of voice entirely devoid of the usual peculiarities of such solemn ceremonies; after which the choir sang a Mormon hymn, and Brother Miles, of New York, read the Declaration of Independence. The stars and stripes floated from the trees overhead, and President Appleby, advancing under its folds, proceeded to deliver the oration of the day.

ORATION OF PRESIDENT APPLEBY.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS:

I am happy to meet you [on the present occasion] all here to-day. Our congregation is small, on account of the weather. Had that been propitious we would have had numbers of the brethren here from New Haven, Philadelphia, Haverstraw, and other places. We are assembled to celebrate the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence and for recreation—to express the true sentiments of our hearts with regard to that event. Let me speak of the views of the Latter Day Saints with regard to this day and to the Constitution and laws of the United States, to which we are charged with being disloyal. I speak of them as an American; and all the leaders of our church, with one exception, are Americans [by birth]. Some were born in New York, some in New Hampshire and other States.

Brother Taylor alone was born in Canada, [England, but an American citizen by naturalization.] Of our people, hundreds and thousands, it is true, are from other countries, but many of them are naturalized. I attended to that duty myself in my capacity as Clerk of the Supreme Court of Utah; and these men are patriotic and loyal, as far as I know. Eighty-one years ago to-day the Declaration of Independence was declared. On that day our fathers vowed that they would either be free from British oppression and the yoke of all foreign tyrants, or they would sleep with the silent dust. To this they pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honors. Some of their immediate descendants are here; I am one of them myself. (A voice—And I am.) They pledged themselves to this; we pledge ourselves to the same. We pledge ourselves to uphold and protect the Constitution of our fathers with our life's blood against all sacrilegious hands. Now what are the views of the Latter Day Saints as regards the laws of the United States? As a principle, we believe this land a land of freedom specially set apart by God as the theatre in which are to be enacted the greatest events of these latter days. We believe, too, that there were three distinct [races of] people on this continent at various periods of antiquity:—First, came the Jeredites [from] the tower of Babel and [at the time of] the confusion of tongues. Second, came a branch of the house of Israel under Mulek, [Lehi, from Jerusalem, in the days of Zedekiah, King of Judah, and landed on the North American continent, some few years after Mulek,] son of Zedekiah, King of Judah, [came to this continent with a small colony also. Those who came with Lehi, and those who came with Mulek, soon mingled together. Those who kept the law of Moses, which law they brought with them, were called Nephites, and those who did not keep that law were] called Zephites [Lamanites.] This was about 600 years before the Birth of Christ, and [a portion of] these people kept the Jewish law. There were millions of the Jaredites on this continent [previous to the Nephites coming here]; they had ships—men skilled in the arts and sciences [and so were the Nephites,] but they became corrupt, wicked, despised the laws of God, and His vengeance overtook them. They fell by intestine commotions [as did also the Nephites.] We believe that the Indians of this country are the descendants of that Zephite (Nephite) race. It was [were] them who erected those magnificent architectural monuments in Yucatan and Guatamala, whose ruins remain to-day to attest [their greatness and] the vengeance of the Lord; for through sin this people became offensive in His sight, and by plagues and feuds [famines] He smote them until the [a] remnant only exists [existed] in a wild and savage state. Then came the Anglo-Saxons under Columbus.* [Then came Columbus, who discovered this continent in 1492. He was succeeded by others; and, Anglo-Saxon like, they soon spread over different parts of this continent.] We [also] believe that God let His Spirit work in Columbus, but he led him to this land only to pave the way [not] for those who would not abide in the Lord [law] of Heaven. [For it is decreed that all nations that inhabit this land, when they become wicked and corrupt, shall be cut off when their iniquity is full.] The Anglo-Saxons [our fathers] were inspired by [of] God to establish a government under which [freedom of conscience in relation to the Gospel of] Jesus Christ would be recognized. This is what we believe on this point. We believe the Saviour visited this continent after his resurrection; that he was [there were] three days [darkness] in South America, [American continent,] during which time storms and whirlwinds swept over the land, cities were [destroyed, mountains were] tumbled down, and the scenes enacted in Jerusalem during the Crucifixion [in rending the rocks, &c.] were repeated there [here]. He [Christ] established there [here his church with] twelve apostles, the same as he did [had] in Judea, and gave to the people of this continent [Nephites] the same laws [as] he gave the Jews, [al]though four hundred years afterwards they fell away [and were nearly all destroyed] through sin. And this was what the Saviour meant when he said to the Pharisees [his Apostles]: "And other sheep I have who are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." This is what we believe [on this point].

Our fathers, I say, were inspired to resist British oppression for the purpose of establishing an asylum for all nations. Our people come from many nations to dwell here, free from oppression; and who will say that, come what may, we will not rally round the stars and stripes? That is the opinion [feelings] of every Latter Day Saint. We believe that the Constitution of the United States is a revelation from the God of Hosts. His Spirit guided the hand that wrote it. We honor it, therefore, and cling to it as something as pure as ever came from the throne of Heaven. We ask nothing more than it can give us. Could we, then, be disloyal to it? No; let it never be said that we are so degenerate. We believe Washington was inspired to triumph over his enemies; that God upheld him to carry out the principles he had designed for this land. Nowhere is there such a land as Columbia. Nowhere such laws and government as those of the United States. They were intended to give equal rights and equal protection to you and me and all of us; and believe me, if the laws were administered in the spirit which they were in the days of Washington and Jefferson, sin [crime] could not raise its head in this land with impunity—there would be no mob riots, no persecuting and driving into exile. There would be peace in the National Legislature—there would be no jugglery and chicanery in politics. Our fathers knew nothing of the perquisites of office or government patronage, [neither sought after them as their degenerate sons do in our day]. Who will deny that there is [not] a deterioration in our judges, our Legislators, even our Presidents? In ancient days money would not purchase rights, or secure immunity for crime. Mobs will now rise up, and in some places no law can reach them. Honor and integrity and private reputation are sacrificed for political cliquery. But the Mormons do not hold the laws responsible for these things. For one I am disposed to say, "America, with all thy faults I love thee still." Mobs may rise and kill, rob and despoil our people, but they can never deprive us of our love of country, never, [no] never. These are the views of the Mormons regarding the Constitution, &c. Our loyalty has been impugned. Now, let me say what I know. I have been seven years in Utah. I am a Latter Day Saint, [have been] for seventeen years; I have been with Gov. Young [by] day and [by] night; [have known him] for fourteen years. He is a patriot, from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. He loves the Constitution and the laws of the United States, and he teaches all his people to do the same. We are all interested in preserving the Union. Then why this discord? I will tell you. Politics [and office seeking]. We don't go into politics. We ask the rights the Constitution gives us; no more. Yet we are called aliens and traitors. Did we ever refuse to answer the call of our country? No; but when that gallant legion [battalion] of 500 young men, the flower of our camp, on the plains of Iowa, were summoned to the Mexican war, they went. From [Iowa to] Santa Fe, [thence] to California, they marched, and came back, having lost [their] all. And they would do the same again to-morrow, in spite of all that has been said and done unto them, and I know it. We are the best friends of this country and of its laws. And here I prophesy to-day, in the name of Israel's God, that the [time will come when the] Latter Day Saints are [will be] the only people who will uphold the Constitution and [be willing to] shed their blood for it. Here a murmur of "Amen" arose from the congregation. Discord and desolation will come upon this land, and no man can stay them. There are men who have already declared the Constitution a compact with hell, and the Union a curse; these men we pronounce real traitors to their country. We wish those who assail us would test our loyalty and not condemn us unheard. We invite all who malign us to investigate our doctrines. If we are wrong, show us the right path. If I am deluded, let them show me how, [where] by law, [reason] and scripture. If I have errors, I want to get shut of them. In conclusion, we believe in upholding the laws and Constitution. The latter is the palladium of liberty, the amulet of peace, and the admiration of all nations. I am happy to meet [with] you all on this occasion. I am happy to see the reporters here—they are welcome. We are the friends of all mankind, and only desire [want] to be known [to be appreciated as such]. God bless you all. Amen!

The "Star Spangled Banner" was then sung by Brother Hall of Utah, chorus by the Saints, in which the Gentiles (reporters) joined.

Brother Mackintosh, of Utah, ex-Secretary to Brigham Young, was then introduced, who spoke in behalf of the foreigners of the Mormon church. He was born in Scotland, but was now a citizen of America. He had his papers in his pocket, and showed them to the gentleman from the NEW YORK HERALD that morning. Nine tenths of the foreigners in Utah are naturalized, and go through as strict a course of naturalization as any one in the States. For himself he would say that he had to stay one year in the Territory before he could get his papers, though he had declared his intentions in due form long before. But he had children in Utah (and he wished he had more of them) who claim this their native land; but they would not be more faithful to the laws than he was. When the Mormons endorsed the laws they did not endorse corrupt administrators of the law. The speaker thought that all our "presiding men" were cliques, that all the evils of the country arose from our pusillanimous public men, who don't know where the next dime is to come from when they go out of office. We had some good men once. Jackson, for instance, was a good old stick. Bro. Mackintosh spoke warmly in favor of the loyalty of the Mormons, and denounced the Garrisonian school in no measured terms, as traitors and firebrands. If the Mormons said that the constitution should be burned, there would be a cry against them from Dan to Beersheba. The Mormon who happens to be a foreigner wishes simply to learn the laws of the country, to obey them, and become a citizen as soon as he can.

Brother Appleby said that he wished to state something with regard to the foreigner in Utah, and he hoped the reporters would take it down. Many of them know nothing of our laws when they arrive; but they are taught in Utah to consider them the best in the world, and that it is their duty to understand them and to get naturalized. They are instructed daily upon this point. Their doctrine teaches them obedience to them. When they come here they fancy that all the riots and persecutions they witness proceed from the government; but in Utah they learn better; they are taught that such things are against the law. Turning to our reporter, he said, "I wish you would take that down as an answer to our maligners, who charge us with teaching sedition among our people."

REPORTER—I have done so.

The song of "The Mormon Creed," to the air of "The Days when we went Gypsying," was then sung by Brother Savage, and the company proceeded to partake of the excellent dinner spread out on the grass. Hilarity and good nature presided at the abundant board. Every provision for the creature comfort was made that ordinary mortals, not of the elect, usually make at picnic parties, and to do the Saints justice they partook of the good things quite after the manner of the Gentiles. The beautiful daughters of President Young waited on the table, at the head of which Brother Young himself sat, gracefully dispensing the hospitality of his branch of the church to its guests. After dinner and a blessing by Brother Appleby, the regular toasts were proposed, as follows:—

TOASTS.—BY PRESIDENT YOUNG.

The Constitution of the United States—Given by inspiration of God, and bequeathed to us by our revolutionary sires, may it continue to be administered in the same spirit as those who indited it.

George Washington—The father of his country, who was chosen by the Great Father of us all to lead the armies to victory.

President of the United States—May he be inspired by the Great Eloheim to administer justice and equal rights to all men.

Brigham Young—The prophet of the Latter-days; may he be delivered by the God of Israel from his enemies, and all nations learn of his goodness and give heed to the principles of eternal truth that he teaches, revealed in these the last days for the salvation of mankind.

The Press, and its representatives who are present—They have our kindest feelings.

BY BROTHER MACKINTOSH, EX-SECRETARY TO BRIGHAM YOUNG.

The Nation We Live In—May her shadow never grow less.

The President of the United States—May his rule be right and his armor bright for evil doers.

The Day We Celebrate—Ever memorable to the Sons of Freedom.

Freedom—The offspring of Truth, long may her genial rays be cherished and her value appreciated by her votaries.

Columbia—Freedom's soil, may it yield.

The Virtue of Utah—A diadem sacred to her brave sons and noble daughters, may it still shine with increased brilliancy.

The Ladies—What could we do without them? May they ever live to bless.

The Present Company, with its associations—May it be everlasting.

BY PRESIDENT APPLEBY.

George Washington—The great and good; the father of his country; raised up and protected by Heaven to fight her battles and lead her armies to victory and conquest.

Thomas Jefferson—The framer of the Declaration of Independence, inspired by the God of liberty and justice to guide the pen that wrote the sacred instrument that made our fathers free.

The Constitution of the United States—A revelation from God to man, given by the inspiration of Heaven to our fathers—may their sons ever protect it.

The Constitution and Laws of the United States—The terror of despots, the wonder of the world, the pride of freemen; the boast of Columbia's sons, when administered according to their spirit and letter.

Utah up in the Mountains—The child of Uncle Sam, now a woman with quite a large family—may she soon change her name to the State of "Deseret," her officers be of her own choosing, and take her position along side of her sisters.

Brigham Young—The Prophet and Lion of the Lord—the guardian of right and the friend of the oppressed, the defender of the weak, the world's target, a terror to evil doers—the Saints know his voice, and when he roars the small beasts of the jungle tremble.

The Saints of Latter Day, called Mormons—That much despised and persecuted people, their leaders the sons of revolutionary sires; the friends of right, the lovers of their country, supporters and defenders of the constitution and laws—although aspiring demagogues and political cliques would fain trample them into the dust, the Saints will uphold, support and defend them with their life's blood from all sacrilegious hands.

Several humorous volunteer toasts were next given. One Saint proposed "The bachelors of our people, may they soon get virtuous wives."

Another Saint—That is an echo from the heart.

The next toast was, "The babies of the company, may they soon get bigger."

Then followed "The ladies of the company, may they soon get (our reporter was going to write bigger) but the Saint added sweeter."

REPORTER (under the influence of Mormon beauty—That would be impossible.

Brother YOUNG—Sisters, my friend here says that would be impossible.

REPORTER (modestly)—that is only a Gentile's opinion. It is of no value among the elect.

Brother YOUNG—Truth is valuable, even coming from a Gentile.

Brother MILES, of New York, then gave "The press and its representatives who are present."

After which the company broke up, when dancing, leapfrog and romping generally became the order of the day, until the proximity of the sun to the horizon warned them that it was time to get on board of the sloop. The scene of the embarcation was amusing. The water being shoal, many had to be borne in arms to the boats, thus affording an excellent chance for innocent flirtation, and the Saints, male and female, availed themselves of the opportunity in the most terrestrial fashion. The sail home was delightful, the choir chanting delicious strains all the way. The sloop reached Norwalk at 8 o'clock, where our reporter received a courteous farewell from the leading brethren and the prettiest sisters of the band, and retired fully convinced that whatever the demerits of Mormonism may be, the Mormons are a jovial crowd for a pic-nic party.—N. Y. Herald, July 6.

* We have given the report of our Celebration on the Fourth from the New York Herald of Monday last, with our corrections in brackets. We do not wish to harbor a thought that the gentlemanly reporters, both of the Herald and Times, who were present, would knowingly or designedly exaggerate or misrepresent us in what we said, or wished to convey on that occasion; but a portion of that which they have reported as delivered in our speech was spoken to them in private, both before and afterwards. We believed at the time they would not get a correct report of what we said, or the ideas we wished to convey, for the galaxy of charms, beauty, and loveliness that surrounded them on that occasion perfectly bewildered them and destroyed their ideas. Hence it is most likely they made out their reports from recollection after they returned to New York. No wonder they imagined we had spoken of "Anglo-Saxons coming here with Columbus!" When we were a school boy we learned they were Spaniards and Italians!

However, take the report as a whole, it is about as fair as we can expect in relation to us, and we feel to tender our thanks to the Herald and Times for the friendly notice given of our celebration, &c.; but we trust they will do us the justice to publish our speech as corrected; and we will cordially invite the gentlemanly reporters (for they certainly conducted themselves as such on that occasion, although they have had a little fun on paper at our expense) whenever we have another "clam bake" to attend and partake of our hospitalities.

As the foregoing contains only a part of our festivities on the glorious Fourth, we here give it, and represent ourselves. On our arrival from Nauvoo Island in the evening at South Norwalk, we were waited upon and respectfully invited by Mr. W. B. Swan, of Norwalk, to participate in a moonlight excursion with a large company then collected on board the steamer John Hart, Capt. W. G. Green.

We cordially accepted the kind invitation, and were escorted on board by Mr. Swan, (together with several of the brethren and sisters comprising the New York Choir, under their leader, Elder Savage, and others,) and received the friendly welcome from Capt. Green.

We had a delightful excursion on the "sound" to the New Haven light boat, and back, some sixty miles. The excursion was made pleasant and enlivened with songs, music, &c., and some tript it on the "light fantastic toe."

At the request of Capt. Green and Mr. Swan, we delivered a short address to the ladies and gentlemen on board, (not in relation to "Columbus and the Anglo-Saxons,") but on our moonlight excursion and "the day we celebrate" which was received with hearty applause.

We were treated with marked respect and attention, and we hereby tender our thanks to Capt. Green and Mr. Swan. We consider them gentlemen—every way worthy of the name. We hope they may never lack for a friend, nor the John Hart ever discontinue running for want of patronage.

We returned to Norwalk from the excursion about midnight, every thing having passed off pleasant and agreeable. We also tender our thanks on behalf of the Committee of Arrangements of the celebration, to Capt. B. Knapp, of "The Norwalk Light Guards," who kindly offered us the free use of his fine and commodious "drill room," in Norwalk, for our accommodation on the Fourth, in case the weather should prove stormy.

On Sabbath afternoon following, we held two meetings in a grove, near South Norwalk; quite a large congregation was present, and good attention given. Elders Ott, Miles, and Dulin addressed the meeting; after which we spoke on the "First and Second Resurrections."

An invitation was tendered us to preach in the town hall at Stanford, Conn., by some gentlemen then present from that place, which we promised to do at our earliest convenience. Meeting was also held near Northfield, by Elders Mackintosh and Hall, from Salt Lake, under the direction of Prest. E. R. Young.

On Monday morning we returned to New York, and are again in our sanctum.—ED. MORMON.

Appointments.

ELDER DAVID BRINTON, is hereby appointed to travel and preach the Gospel in the State of Pennsylvania, under the direction of Elder A. M. Cannon, President of the Philadelphia Conference.

Elder Miner G. Atwood, is hereby appointed to travel and preach the Gospel in the States of Connecticut and Rhode Island, under the direction of Elder Alexander Ott, President of the New York Conference.

Elder Thomas Hall, is hereby appointed to travel and preach the Gospel in the Canadas, under the direction of the Presidency at New York.

All these brethren will labor in the respective fields assigned them until further orders, and endeavor to hunt up the lost sheep, build up the Saints, organizing churches, and comforting the hearts of all who desire to do right, and preaching the Gospel wherever a place may be open, and endeavor to labor in new places as much as possible. They will also respectively act as agents for THE MORMON, obtain all the subscribers, &c., they can and make the remittance to us at New York.

W. I. APPLEBY, President, &c.

Arrival of More Missionaries.

Elder Reuben McBride arrived here on the 2d inst.; Elders Thomas Hall, M. G. Atwood, Martin Luther Ensign on the 3d; Elder R. G. Evans on the 4th; Elders E. Richardson, J. Brooks on the 7th, and Elder Henry Herriman on the 8th—all in excellent health.

The Missionaries.

For the last few days our office has been considerably enlivened by the daily incoming and outgoing of the missionaries who have recently arrived from Utah on their way to the nations of the Old World. They came amongst us hearty and hale, bouyant in spirit, and have left us the same. The young and the aged were alike full of zeal, full of hope, and determined, with the blessing of the Most High, to go among the children of men and faithfully discharge the important duties of their high calling. We cannot say that we saw a demure, or too serious countenance, or too much gaiety among them—they were feeling well, and seemingly ready for any business that would build up the Kingdom. We have been glad to enjoy their society the few days they were with us, and believe that the Saints around us, whose circumstances permitted them to entertain these brethren, feel as we do—they are good men, and we feel to ask our Father in heaven to bless and prosper them.

We have had to make a call upon the Saints to assist some of them across the water, and we doubt not that all who have had opportunity of contributing to that end, have done so. Some we do know have done so freely and liberally, and if any have missed the present opportunity of lending a hand in the present movement, we beg to inform them that others are daily expected who will likewise need assistance. So they can send on for that purpose.

We sent Elders Iver Iverson to Philadelphia and Ephraim Tompkins on to Massachusetts for aid for themselves and their brethren; but at the present writing they have not returned, and as the Dreadnought is already in the stream they with others will sail, we anticipate, in a few days. We were requested to return the thanks of the missionaries to all who have entertained them and contributed to the expenses of those who required assistance to launch upon the broad expanse of waters.

The missionaries for the United States are, presently, visiting their friends and relatives before entering upon their official duties.

The Conference Fund.

As many of the Saints now under our charge were not present at the last April Conference held in New York, and therefore do not understand in relation to "The Conference Fund," we hereby inform them that agreeably to a vote of Conference, that Fund was raised and to be applied expressly for the house expenses, board, &c., of those who labored in the office without pay. But all the "Fund" that has yet been received will not pay the board of one person. What we have received, we have been under the necessity of turning into the office for the support of The Mormon; but a strict account is kept of it.

President Ott, of the New York Conference, received some eleven dollars of the Fund while he labored in the office in June last, but he is now, and will continue to travel through his Conference, and it is the imperative duty of the Saints wherever he travels to bear his expenses, clothe him, &c., independent of any Conference Fund, donations, or otherwise, as we want all these for the support of The Mormon; as those who labor gratuitously in the office, have need of something to eat and clothing to wear. We generally provide our own. We therefore say to the Saints, send on your donations, Conference Funds, &c., directed to our address at this office, that The Mormon may be sustained, our hands unloosed and unfettered, to advocate the principles of truth and defend the rights of the Saints. Do your duties and you shall be blessed. W. I. Appleby,
President of the Church in the Eastern States.

Arrival of the Mail from Utah.

At the moment of going to press, we have received a batch of letters from our mountain home. We are obliged to defer the publication of other communications, but that from the Historian till next week. Every thing in the Territory denotes peace and prosperity. The news of the furore in the States against Utah; appointment of new Federal officers, and the rumor of sending troops had just reached. They had scarcely got time to rub open their eyes before the departure of this mail; but we apprehend, judging from what we learn from the Missionaries, that the Utonians will be terribly surprised to learn that they have been so awfully wicked and that Uncle Sam is so anxiously and piously interested in their salvation. More anon.

Departure of Missionaries.

The following Elders from Utah, on Missions, to Europe and Africa, left this port on Wednesday for Liverpool on board the fine clipper Dreadnought: J. W. Young, B. H. Young, Seymour Young, John Y. Greene, Wm. J. Harris, James Andrus, S. H. B. Smith, Robt. Logan, Phillip Margetts, Wm. J. Stewart, E. Richardson, James Brooks, Wm. P. Thomas, Peter Harrocks, Reuben McBride, Enoch Reese, M. L. Ensign, Eli Harvey Pierce, David Wilkin, Henry Herriman.

Departures.

Elder Ephraim Tomkinson arrived from Boston on Thursday morning and left at noon for Liverpool by the steamer City of Baltimore.

Elder Miner G. Atwood, leaves to-morrow (Friday) for Connecticut; President Alexander Ott leaves the same day for Toms River, and Elder Thomas Hall for Canada.

More Correspondence on Polygamy.

Boston, July 6th, 1857.

Editor Mormon—In your valuable paper of last week I saw an article, which I have read with considerable pleasure, being an answer to a "Wesleyan Methodist Clergyman" in relation to Polygamy, and wherein I consider his inquiries ably answered. I never knew before that there was so much scripture, as you have produced, to establish the doctrine.

Indeed, I do not see how anyone believing the Bible can disbelieve (if the Bible be true) that Polygamy was sanctioned of Heaven in former days.

But there is one thing I wish to inquire of you. You say that God has revealed the order to His "Saints" in these days. Now do not think me impertinent. That is, do you believe in practising such things anywhere else but in Utah? Do all practice it there? Have you more than one wife? If not, what are your reasons? Why preach up or advocate a doctrine you do not practice? Do you believe in abiding by and upholding the laws in whatever state or country you may be?

I have long been investigating the different creeds of the religious world, and comparing them with the Bible; but I cannot find any one that agrees with the doctrine preached by the Apostles, as recorded in the Old and New Testaments, except that of the Mormons, so far as I have investigated. Polygamy has been a stumbling-block to me; but since I have read your reply to "An Inquirer," it appears more reasonable and consistent. I am a well-wisher of all who desire to do right and like the free exercise of conscience; but I do hate and despise this bigoted and persecuting spirit that is manifested against your society through the press; yet, in spite of all, it appears your society is increasing.

By answering the foregoing questions you will confer a favor on one not a Mormon, (I suppose you would call me a Gentile,) as I ask for information, that my understanding may be enlightened.

A Seeker After Truth.

As "A Seeker After Truth" appears to be candid in his inquiries, and breathes quite a free, tolerant, and friendly spirit towards us, and says he has long been investigating the different creeds of the religious world, and believing that the doctrine preached by the Mormons agrees with the teachings of the Apostles, &c.; and that an article of ours on Polygamy has removed that "stumbling block," but wishes to inquire still further in relation, (as we suppose, to some more "stumbling blocks,") that his understanding may be enlightened. All very good.

As we have removed one "stumbling block," we will endeavor to remove the others also.

Question 1. Do you believe in practising such things (Polygamy) any where else only in Utah?

Answer, No. No person belonging to the Mormon church is allowed to enter into any engagements, consumate, or practice such things, in any shape or manner whatever; neither are the Elders sent out permitted to do such things. Any one doing so will be dealt with immediately and severed from the church, and delivered over to the laws of the land that they may have transgressed.

Ques. 2. Do all practice it in Utah?

Ans., No. The gospel is a perfect law of liberty, that makes us free. A person in Utah, if he is a good, worthy man, and does right by his family—if a half dozen women loves him, and it is their desire to be "sealed" (married) to him for time and all eternity—if the first wife and the parents or relatives of the others, and the man are willing, it is his privilege to have them, provided he is able to maintain them; but he must not go after other women not belonging unto him, if he does he loses all he has taken, and is severed from the church. No one is compelled to marry in Utah. A person can have one wife if he choses, and no more, or he can live a bachelor, no one will interfere with him.

Ques. 3. Have you more than one wife?

Well, we declare, that is rather personal if not "impertinent." We would respectfully inquire of our correspondent, what that has to do with principle, or the truth of the gospel? However, as he is "a seeker after the truth," we answer no. We have but one wife, and never had any more," although we have been a member of the Mormon church some seventeen years.

Ques. 4. If not, what are your reasons?

Personal again. Rather tough question that. Perhaps it is because we are not "good looking;" or, perhaps, we have been like "Paddy by his pills," thought "one at a time was a dose." We have thought sometimes while in Utah, when seeing such a galaxy of beauty surrounding us, that we would "pop the question;" but our heart began to beat and flutter, our tongue to cleave to our mouth; and we couldn't say "nothing at all," which made us feel "rotten onry." Hence we have been waiting for the charming creatures to "ask us;" but as yet they have not done so. Leap year has gone by some time ago, so now we have concluded to wait until the next leap year comes round, then, you know, the ladies will have the privilege to "pop the question"—then, we think, we will stand a pretty fair chance.

Ques. 5. Why preach up a doctrine you do not practice?

That's pertinent—Yankee-like—"Deu tell!" Well, we will. But we think we have answered this question in the preceding one. We preach the Gospel, and obey every principle connected with it as fast as we can. "We abide our time." For "There is a time for all things," "A time to marry." We have no right to interfere or practice anything of the kind here, but keep ourselves pure and unspotted from the world.

Quer. 6. Do you believe in abiding and upholding the laws in whatsoever State or country you may be in?

We answer emphatically, Yes. We firmly believe in upholding, abiding, and being obedient and subservient to the laws of any Territory, State, Kingdom or Empire we may be in, and not transgress them, for our Doctrine and Covenants, teaches us, "He that abideth by my (Lord's) law, hath no need to transgress the laws of the Land." If any person belonging to the Mormon Church transgress the laws of the Land wheresoever he may be, we say let the laws be made honorable, and judge him by the laws, not by mobs. We believe in doing right in all things, treating everybody with that respect due them, and doing good to all men. At the same time we believe in taking our own part, when we are attacked or imposed upon, to resist tyranny and oppression and when provoked to a retort, to give it, but not to be the aggressor. We have been taught from our youth to contend for what is right.

We have thus briefly answered the questions propounded, by our correspondent, and which we hope will prove satisfactory. At the same time we think he is wanting to know too much in relation to our domestic concerns. However, we trust that all "Seekers after Truth" will be benefitted by our answers, and have their "stumbling blocks" removed.—Ed.]

Correspondence of Dr. Jeter Clinton

New York, July 7, 1857.

Prest. Appleby—Dear Brother: I arrived in this city on the 15th of June from my mountain home, in good health, as I thought, and spirits never better; felt happy in meeting with you, Brother Stenhouse, and others of old acquaintance. I went to bed in the evening, feeling only a little fatigued. On awaking the following morning I found myself sick and under every symptom common to the small pox. On the third day, my person was entirely covered with that awful disease. I was confined to my room during fourteen days, and, through the blessings of the Lord, it has come upon my body and left it, without scarcely leaving a trace behind. I am truly happy to inform you that my health is now so far recovered as to enable me to walk round without difficulty and without fear or apprehension of injury to myself or those with whom I may have intercourse.

I beg to thank you for the accommodation I had in your house during my sickness, and I likewise thank all who waited upon me and ministered to me.

I hope in a few days to visit my old stamping ground in Pennsylvania, where I have many friends whose acquaintance I shall have much pleasure in renewing. I am also ready to enter upon any duties which may be assigned me in the Eastern States in conformity with the mission assigned me by the Presidency of the Church in Zion. As I see the harvest is great and the laborers are few, in my humble opinion, there never was a better time for the promulgation of the Gospel, I am anxious to put on the harness. Falsehood against the Church in Utah has been so abundantly circulated and so extravagently colored that a reaction is more or less evident, and the people are now, in many places, ready to hear what the Mormons have to say. I feel anxious to join my labors to those of my brethren already in the field and to go-ahead trusting in the Lord my God.

I remain your brother and humble servant.
Jeter Clinton.

Correspondence from Utah.

Historian's Office, G. S. L. City,
June 1st, 1857.

Editor Mormon—Dear Sir: The May mail, which left Independence on the 1st, arrived here on the 29th ult., conducted by John Murdoch and O. P. Rockwell—bringing all the mail matter left on the way since last November.

Hons. George A. Smith, J. M. Bernhisel, and Elder Truman O. Angel, arrived with the mail in good health and spirits, notwithstanding the fatigues of the journey, which was rendered very laborious on account of the scarcity and, in some parts, almost entire absence of feed on the route.

The weather was cold during the fore part of last month, with occasional showers which mostly fell on the mountains around the valley. The frost on the morning of May 9 killed the beans, potatoe vines, and injured the fruit blossoms; the latter part of May has been very warm and dry.

The water is abundant; water sects in the city are full and overflowing.

Crops are very promising throughout the Territory.

During the absence of President Young and company north, the News has been ably edited by Judge Elias Smith; from which you will learn of the prosecution and completion of much public improvement in and around the Temple block, Council house, and Governor's residence. The same spirit of public improvement is manifested through the city and in many places throughout the Territory.

May 26: Gov. Young and party arrived, having been gone one month and two days; he travelled 762 miles, had a laborious, but otherwise pleasant journey, remained with the settlement at Salmon river four days, where the brethren have made much improvement, and have sown 120 bushels of seed wheat this spring.

Elder A. O. Smoot and company start with the June mail; he takes men enough along to make a mail station at Deer Creek to preserve the animals from Indian depredations. Several companies have gone out this spring to make mail stations on the route.

Many teams are constantly engaged hauling rock for the Temple, and a company of stone-cutters have been sent to Big Cottonwood kanyon to cut the rock preparatory to boating it for this point.

The health of the inhabitants of the Territory is excellent; and since the opening spring has washed away with the tide of emigration many of the half-hearted Saints, the moral elements feel considerably clearer.

George A. has just stepped in, and hearing we were writing to you, says: tell the Editor I am glad to be at home and have the privilege of walking our streets once more.

Yours truly,
W. Woodruff.

Correspondence of Elder Joseph W. Young.

New York, July 6th, 1857.

President Appleby—Dear Sir: Having secured my passage, in company with seventeen other missionaries, on board the clipper ship Dreadnought, and presuming that we shall sail to-morrow or early next day, I improve the present opportunity of writing you a few lines, and expressing my gratitude to you and the good Saints of the New York Branch for the kindness manifested towards me and my brethren.

They have truly been good to us, and have done nobly in contributing means to forward the mission. May they be rewarded with the choicest of heaven's blessings—with means to gather to Zion, and with faith to overcome all temptations that may surround them.

We were sorry that we could not share the hospitality of Bro. E. R. Young at the Connecticut "clam-bake," on the Fourth, but the unfavorable weather and securing our passage prevented our going. We learn that those who met there had a good time, and we trust that all who participated will live to enjoy many happy returns of the day.

Not being able to spend the Fourth with the Saints in Connecticut, we concluded to make the best of it in New York, and, after finishing our business with the ship agents, some ten or twelve of the missionaries and myself repaired to the house of Elder Stenhouse, where we spent the afternoon and evening very agreeably.

We should have had all the brethren from the Valley together on that occasion, as such was intended, but it was so late in the day before we decided to go, that they could not afterwards be found.

Brother and Sister Stenhouse did everything in their power to make us comfortable and happy. At 5 o'clock P. M. we sat down to a splendid supper, and, if we are to judge men by their works, I am safe in saying that the brethren were well pleased with their entertainment. The evening was spent in singing, speaking and praying. Several speeches of a truly patriotic nature were made by the brethren, and our festival may truly be called a celebration party.

Our little party broke up at half past 11 o'clock. No one was drunk; no one wished to fight; all was peace, joy and happiness—and when we separated all felt a desire that the time might not be long before we have the privilege of meeting again.

How different with us, and those parties who meet and spend their evenings in drinking, swearing and fighting, and who make merry at the cost of every principle of virtue, and not unfrequently at the cost of life.

In speaking of these things my mind naturally wanders back to my peaceful home in the mountains where the Saints meet, enjoy themselves, and separate again without an angry word or a single hard thought.

In looking over the daily papers of this city, I notice that several persons have been killed and wounded during the celebration of the Fourth.

Will the Valley of Utah ever witness such scenes as neighbor fighting against neighbor, and for no cause whatever, only that they are drunk and full of bloodshed? No, never, never.

The boys are off to the ship and I must cease writing you more at this time, but perhaps I may write again from Liverpool.

With kind regards for all the Saints under your presidency, and in all the world, I remain your brother in the gospel of peace,
J. W. Young.

The Army for Utah.

General Orders, No. 12.

Head Quarters of the Army,
New York, June 30, 1857.

The General-in-Chief, with the approbation of the War Department, issues the following orders:—

1. The 2d Dragoons, 5th Infantry, and 10th Infantry, as they assemble at Fort Leavenworth, will be prepared, with the battery of the 4th Artilery now at that post, to march to, and establish a post at, or near, the Salt Lake City, Territory of Utah.

Brevet Brigadier General Harney will command the whole force above described, continuing on duty, according to his brevet rank—and, at the earliest practicable day, will put the troops in rout—but will, until that time, retain his present command of the troops in Kansas.

2. On the 1st of January next after the Territory of Utah shall have been entered by the troops, it will constitute a new and separate military department, to be styled the Department of Utah, and to be commanded by Brevet Brigadier General Harney, or the senior present; who will, from the time of leaving Fort Leavenworth be the commander of a separate army in the field, within the sense of the 65th Article of War.

Special instructions for his guidance are addressed to that officer.

3. The 5th Infantry, ordered temporarily to Jefferson Barracks, will, as soon as practicable after its arrival there, be put in route by its commander by water, or, in part, by railroad, for Fort Leavenworth.

Requisitions for the transportation and supplies required for the movement will be addressed by the commanding officer to the proper staff at St. Louis.

4. The armament and equipment deemed most suitable for the service of the battery of artillery, will be selected—and, if necessary, extended in guns and horses—by the commander of the expedition, consulting with Captain Phelps.

5. In addition to the instructions already given it is further directed that all requisitions which the commander of the expedition for Utah may, in his discretion, address to the departments of supply, be promptly complied with, without reference to higher authority.

6. Under the authority of the Secretary of War, the post at Salt Lake City, when established, and any other posts, not exceeding two in addition, that may be established in Utah, will be included among the "chaplain posts" and "double ration posts" of the army.

By command of Brevet Lieutenant General Scott.

Irwin McDowell, Ass't Adj't General.

The Woman's Story—Mrs. McLean.

The papers were recently full of the account of the murder of the Mormon Elder, Pratt, by Mr. McLean, on the alleged charge that he had seduced Mrs. McLean. It was gloatingly told and enlarged upon—rolled as a sweet morsel in the mouth of Scandal. Not a word against the outrage was anywhere spoken. The whole details were given approvingly—boastingly—rejoicingly. McLean is almost canonized as a hero for the deed. Pratt is treated as would be the death of a beast of prey. Mrs. McLean is looked upon as is the denizen of a brothel. And thus was the affair passed off.

But Mrs. McLean, smarting under a tyranny next to death, has appeared before the public with her statement. It will be found in another place, under the head of "The Story of a Woman's Wrongs."

This statement has been quite generally published, by the leading papers of the country, but everywhere with a sneer, a cold voice of insult and bitter insinuation.

She has everywhere been pointed at as an example of to what infatuation will lead a woman.

But would that the falsely educated, bigoted, and vindictive, who are so ready to denounce without investigation, could see how really they are infatuated, far, far worse than the poor, suffering victim of their hatred and animosity.

Not one word can be said in favor of the polygamy of Mormonism. It is contrary to justice, reason, and the law of nature, but it is no more than any other gross monopoly. And it is a great deal better that a dozen women should live with one man, as his wives, members of his family, loving their children and being as good mothers to them as possible than is the licensed brothelism of the Christian cities of New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans, and even Chicago and a million times better than the open, shameless, ravishing all over the land of slavery.

Let every earnest, true woman read Mrs. McLean's story, and then ask her own soul which was the greater wrong? Beaten, oppressed, driven from home, and persecuted in the most tender ties of womanhood and motherhood,—where is the instinctive woman who will turn cold from her and with smiling complacency upon McLean?

It may be necessary for us to repeat emphatically, to prevent misconstruction, that we totally repudiate all affinity with anything of Mormonism of which we have any knowledge. But we have an abiding faith in womanhood; and we enter earnest protest against the gross wrong done to Mrs. McLean. We ask the women of the country to read her statement.

[Chicago Weekly Ledger, June 13.

Grasshoppers in Minnesota.

The St. Anthony (Min.) Express speaks of the ravages of the grasshoppers in that region as follows:

"The region around Monticello is literally alive with grasshoppers. Never in our life did we see so many of these troublesome and destructive insects. They crackled under one's feet like brittle shells. There was no such thing as avoiding them; whichever way one looked or went, they were manifesting themselves. Though not yet half grown, they are already doing immense damage, and unless they speedily emigrate, must devour every green thing in Wright county.

"Well informed men who have watched the grasshoppers, and who know something of their instincts and habits, assert that they are already preparing to take up their line of march for the southern country, and that the region of the upper Mississippi will soon be delivered from them.

"Mr. Ferguson, who cultivates a farm on Minnetonka Lake, informs us this week that he had twelve acres of wheat which, ten days ago, looked in excellent condition. Four or five days since the grasshoppers commenced on it, and not a single blade can now be seen on the whole field. Several acres of corn which had come up in fine order, had been destroyed in like manner.

"J. F. Bradley, Esq., of Monticello, informed us that on Saturday evening last he passed a wheat field of about twenty acres, near Monticello, which was in excellent condition, the wheat standing four to six and seven inches high, and very thick. On passing the same field on Monday morning last, some thirty-six hours later, the field looked as if it had never had a crop on it; not a blade of wheat was to be seen. The cold rains do not seem to have destroyed any—at least not to any appreciable extent."

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

The constitutionality of the "Metropolitan Police Bill" has been acknowledged by the Court of Appeals, and the Municipal Police of our city have laid down their truncheons and cut off their buttons and other insignia of authority. The city was all sensation on the arrival of the decision.

For some days preceding the ever memorable Fourth of July the weather was anything but agreeable, and very far from flattering to the hopes of those who calculated on great enjoyment on the 81st anniversary of the Declaration of Independence. We presume that in consequence of the heavy rains, much of the outside entertainment, pic nics, &c., anticipated, would have to be put off to a more promising opportunity. In this city there were several processions and reviews, and a considerable consumption of powder by the little and big boys; but the pyrotechnic displays in honor of the occasion and for the public entertainment were put off till the following Tuesday evening.

In the absence of harmless amusement the rowdies got up a "glorification" on Saturday evening, which ended with six killed and more than ten times that number badly injured. The rioting commenced with some opposition to the new Police force and a contest between rival clubs. Brickbats, pistols and muskets were freely used, and the war only terminated by the presence of the military. Three regiments were called out, and one of them was kept under arms all night. On Sunday evening hostilities re-commenced, and a considerable number of persons were injured. The city is again quiet.

Ex-Secretary Marcy died on the morning of the 4th inst., at Balston, Saratoga Co., N. Y., where he was on a visit. He was in good health the same morning, and at noon was found dead in his room.

Arrival of the Tuscarora.

This packet ship, with five hundred and thirty-seven Mormons, arrived at Philadelphia on the morning of the 3d. We have not yet received a report of the voyage from the President of the company; but have learned from some of the emigrants who have passed through this city, that the passage across the Atlantic was favorable, and but few deaths occurred among the company. The Scandinavian Saints have gone on to Burlington, Iowa; a goodly number of the British Saints to St. Louis; and a number remain for the present in Philadelphia.

The Philadelphia Ledger seems to have a special reporter who visits the new arrivals, and from one or two scratches of his pen he seems a personage of very loose morality. A person who rejoices in the absence of the constituted authorities over the company, as rendering greater facilities for strangers moving among the emigrants, is not to be trusted. We would advise our emigrants to count "their spoons" before he has gone far from them.

Dr. Jeter Clinton.

By the communication of our fellow laborer, Dr. Clinton, found elsewhere, the Saints will learn that he has passed through a trying time of his life. We have twice had his visit in our sanctum this week, and are glad to say that his appearance indicates a speedy and total recovery. We have heretofore purposely refrained from noticing his sickness in The Mormon to save his numerous friends and family uneasiness. Being now well, we hope to place before our readers more from and of this faithful servant of the Lord.

Notice.

The Saints who desire to send means to their friends in Europe, can have the same attended to, by forwarding any sum they wish in current money, to this office, enclosing one dollar or more, in proportion to the amount sent, to defray the expenses of procuring Bills of Exchange, making remittances, foreign postage, &c., describing particularly to whom, and where they wish to have it sent; at the same time not holding myself responsible in any manner whatever unless the money reach me.

All subscriptions, donations, &c., for the support of The Mormon, or Conference Fund (except the donations and Conference Funds raised in the Philadelphia Conference, which will be forwarded as usual through President Cannon) must be sent hereafter to my address; as also Tithing; P. E. Fund, and donations for the Temple from those who wish to contribute the same, so each person may be duly credited, and the means forwarded to Zion, and have their names entered in "The Book of the Law of the Lord."

No Power of Attorney, or other legal instrument of writing, going to Europe or elsewhere, forwarded to us for the purpose of sending to Washington in order to obtain the attestation of the Department, and the British Consul's Certificate and seal to the same, will be attended to in future, unless the means to defray the expenses and foreign postage accompanies the Instrument, as there is considerable expense attending it as well as labor. We would like to oblige all, and are willing to give our services when we have opportunity; but we cannot advance means to defray such expenses.

All communications intended for The Mormon should be addressed—Editor of The Mormon, New York. Otherwise direct to my address, Box No. 3957, New York Post Office. W. I. Appleby.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là. dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

The Hand-Cart Song.

BY ELDER PHILIP MARGETTS.

As repeated inquiries have been made of Bro. Margetts for the hand-cart song, we have had it placed in our hands for publication, with the author's modest assurance that he makes no pretensions to be ranked among the inspired favorites of the Muses:

Ye nations list! the men of God, from Zion now they come,
Clothed with the Priesthood and the power, to gather Israel home;
No purse, no scrip they bare with them, but cheerfully they start
And cross the plains a thousand miles and draw with them a cart:
Then cheer up ye Elders, you to the world will show
That Israel must be gathered soon, and oxen are too slow.

Ye pious men whose sympathy is touched for fallen man,
A pattern now is set for you, just beat it if you can;
Here's men who're called to go abroad the gospel to impart,
They leave their homes and friends so dear and start with their hand-cart.
Then cheer up ye Elders, &c.

Now competition is the rage, throughout the world 'tis true,
To head the Mormons they must rise far earlier than they do,
For Mormonism it is sound, without a crack or flaw,
They know the arts and sciences, and we're learning how to draw.
Then cheer up ye Elders, &c.

Some folks would ask, why do you start with carts, come tell, I pray;
We answer: when our Prophet speaks, the Elders all obey;
Since Brigham has the way laid out that's best for us, we'll try;
Stand off you sympathetic fools, the hand-carts now or die.
Then cheer up ye Elders, &c.

Then come ye faithful ministers, with blessings now we'll go,
To gather out the honest hearts from darkness and from wo;
Our strength increasing day by day as from this land we part.
We'll bless the day that we were called to go with our hand cart.
Then cheer up ye Elders, &c.

The Religious Press—Its Character and Circulation.

From the New York Herald.

CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.

There was once a time when it was not as it now is; when the unreligious world, seeing truth, goodness and right conduct to be and exist as a reality among the professors of Christian truth and doctrine, looked with awe and respect upon the source of what they witnessed. In other words, they respected what is called religion. But now, witnessing quite the contrary, they look upon Christianity itself as a deception and a humbug. It is quite natural that mankind in general should judge in this manner. Truth and virtue are wholly concrete and personal, and can only be known and seen in persons and in their actions. When, therefore, they cease to appear in the conduct and actions of men, the conclusion of mankind is that they have no existence whatever. They learn to despise the source of all good, and to question even His existence, when those who profess to represent Him in their spirit and actions prove themselves, by their conduct, to be even worse than their fellow creatures.

The religious world are quite angry and exasperated at this natural consequence of their own conduct and actions. They call the world which thus judges them and their doctrines and their professions by their fruits, all sorts of hard names, and consign them all indiscriminately to perdition, because they laugh at them. This is altogether wrong, and herein they depart from the truth they profess to follow and believe; for by that truth we learn that men, whether infidels or christians, will be judged in equity, not according to their professions, but according to their conduct and behavior. Professors, therefore, being no better than infidels or atheists in their deeds and actions, will fare no better than them in a just judgment. And if with all their professions their deeds are not so good, just, honest and honorable as those infidels, they will not fare so well as they will.

The religious press is a picture and mirror of the religious world; hence, in speaking of the one we have not been able to avoid speaking of the other, much as we would have preferred it.

Far be it from us to speak after the laughable, or to wish to make fun in the consideration of these very serious matters. Yet there are some really laughable and funny things in the course and system of this religious press and of the religious world which it represents. One of these droll things is, that men who do evil quite as much as other men should not perceive their equality with other men in the sight of Him who judges all men justly according to what they do. What astonishing blindness it is that they cannot perceive that one evil doer is like another evil doer, and will have the like judgment! How singular, if not funny, that one class of evil doers should not undertake to burn up all other evil doers, except themselves, in fire and brimstone. Another funny thing is, that a certain clique of men giving themselves a distinguishing name, should exhibit themselves before the world as special professors of special and peculiar honesty, while they are not, in fact a whit more honest than their neighbors. One may see all these droll things fully exhibited and brought to light in the religious press and its various articles and lucubrations.

What general inferences may we draw from all the above? We conclude that while the mundane press is not perfect, the religious press is the consummation of imperfection. This is indeed only a part of the general truism, and while the world is wicked, the religious world in the present day is the very consummation of wickedness, as judged out of its own mouth, and especially by the fruit it produces. The truth is, they do not think so of themselves; on the contrary they are highly pleased with themselves and their attainments. This is quite natural, for the consummation of wickedness is accompanied ever with consummate and perfect moral blindness.

Hitherto we have considered the religious press, as it exists in single, separate journals, like the secular press; but there is another department of this press which is of a different character and nature. It is

A NEW AND NOVEL KIND OF PRESS, UNKNOWN IN ANY WORLD EXCEPT THE RELIGIOUS.

This is what is called the Tract Society. Unlike the other religious press, it does not represent any single sect. It represents the great religious confederacy of all the sects, as it were, federally united. It represents the abstract idea of what is called "Evangelical Christianity." It is the common organ and an ideal abstraction, in which the religious world puts its trust, as a representation of absolute truth—an abstraction by which men imagine that though the religious world is, in its detail of sects, confessedly a very bad and wicked world, yet here, in the union of all its parts, they have truth and perfection itself. It is to the Protestant sects much the same thing as "Mother Church," another ideal perfection, is to the Roman Catholic sect.

This deception of supposing that though the parts are bad, the whole, composed of these same parts, is good, is a pleasing illusion to the mind which loves deception. When a man belonging to some one sect plainly sees that he and his pastors and people are cheats, adulterers and money worshipers; that his sect is a compound of all that is bad in human nature, of austerity, pride, malice, covetousness, ostentation and boasting—when he sees that his sect and people are the same as the world at large, and not different, but equally fierce, selfish, contentious, backbiting, unmerciful, unforgiving, unkind, this delusion saves him from opening his eyes to the fact that his religion is no truth, and his trust in it is vain. He says to himself, "Never mind; it may, perhaps, be that there is something wrong in me and my sect; it may be true that all this which we are is no more like Christianity than Satan is like God, but 'Protestant Cristianity' is all right, evangelical principles are all good—there is nothing wrong there, and that is what I also belong to."

The Tract Society is the press of Protestant or evangelical Christianity, so called—the organ of an abstraction, and of certain abstract ideas. It represents ideal truth, justice and virtue, while the sects represent the practical violation of all truth, justice and virtue. Thus right and the violation of right are made as it were to harmonize together; truth and falsehood are made to embrace each other, and men can, as religious men, do all manner of evil, and yet lay the flattering unction to their souls that they are the followers and friends of truth.

This press is diurnal and perennial. Its publications are not one sheet which might be called a journal, but the name of its publication is legion. It is pre-eminently a religious press. It publishes no news of the day, as the other religious press, and contains in the numerous publications issued no recipes for the cure of heaves in horses, nor instructions how to make the real Herkimer cheese. It is wholly confined to religion, chiefly in the abstract, occasionally refreshing its readers, in the concrete, with thrilling anecdotes and romances, describing the amazing and admirable piety and virtues of favorite pious heroes.

Strictly speaking, it is the only genuine unmixed religious press. Its publications consist of religious tales, histories, biographies, stories, anecdotes, narrations, poetry, sermons, exhortations and essays. It seizes upon all and every topic of literature, and, as it were, religionizes the whole. By its aid the strict religious world can indulge itself in all the trash and frivolous reading of the great world, having it served up in a sanctified form, with a sprinkling of cant and piety to savor it, by this versatile press. If we reflect upon the subject we shall come to the conclusion that this society is a religious press of astonishing power and diffusion, and which stands alone in the singularity of its operation and organization.

Such an organization as a press is unique, and has never been seen before in any age of the world. The circulation of almost any one of its numerous publications is equal to that of any one of the religious periodical papers published by individuals. Its diffusion is vast, its means of spreading its publications are immense; it is a gigantic press. By its operation in diffusing widely a vast mass of light and amusing religious literature, it has great power and influence upon the public mind as a religious engine. Men of all religions and of no religion, take up and amuse themselves with its publications, as they occasionally meet their eye, and are often beguiled by its amusing stories, or frightened by its threatening anecdotes, into what is called a "respect for religion." The smaller one-leaf tracts, exhorting to some special fear or religious terror, and which are circulated and distributed in such vast quantities over the world, serve for little more than to supply the public with waste paper, or give to the scoffer and skeptic a subject for ridicule and laughter. It is a question which might be raised, whether this society, which is, par excellence, the religious press, has not operated more than any other cause in this day to bring religious truth into contempt, and to satiate and disgust the greater portion of mankind with religion. Would not bread strongly mixed with ipecacuanha and jabbed into every man's hand or mouth at every corner of the road, in every street, lane and alley of the world, though bread itself is good, produce in men a sort of contempt and loathing, even for bread? So is it not possible that truth of the sublimest nature—the great truths and doctrines of revelation—are rendered repulsive, vile and common to the world, when, corrupted and polluted with the poison of lies, superstition and priestcraft, they are forced upon men in every hole and corner of the world, with the object of inducing them to submit to the religious schemes, practices and formalities of corrupt religious corporations or denominations, composed of bad men, whose aim is power, money and social influence? For it is the singular characteristic of this peculiar religious press which we are now considering, that it works collectively for the whole body, of a hydra-headed creature which is composed of all the corrupt religious denominations. Its object is to convert men to any one provided it be some one religious denomination, and to induce them to attach themselves to some church, of all the innumerable churches of which it is the general organ and common advocate. It is supported by all the denominations, and it works for them all, without distinction. The religious theory of the day is, that if a man only joins some one, and any one, of the corrupt religious denominations, presto, he is converted, he has "got religion," he has thereby become a "good man." This is a gross, corrupt, false and most pernicious idea. Its fallacy may be perhaps discovered if we make the inquiry, viz., supposing every one, without exception to belong to some one of the orthodox or evangelical denominations, would men, would the world, when thus converted, be a whit different or better than it now is? Would men and women be better husbands, better wives, better sons and daughters, better citizens than they now are? Would pride, vanity, lust, covetousness, fraud, deceit, suspicion, wrath, envy, strife, anger, malice, hatred be banished from the world? Looking at any one of the denominations, and at their most zealous, most devoted members collectively, and even individually, the answer which forces itself upon us is, that it would be a madness and a delusion to reply in the affirmative to this question. It follows conclusively that all the religious labor expended to promote denominational religion, and to induce men to become religious in the views and sense of any one existing denomination, is labor in vain. It is worse—it is labor in a bad cause.

The productions of this religious press may be literally said to be innumerable. It employs colporteurs over nearly the whole world. It sends its tracks into every part of the habited globe. It has numerous amateur agents, who work for this press gratuitously and without pay, silly men and women—especially the latter—go about from house to house in every city, town and village, distributing its pious publications. It is a matter of piety with these persons to do all this—they suppose they are doing God wonderful service to go about distributing the publications of this great religious press. In this manner the Society gets rid of large editions of its works, and we may be sure, not without profit, for the amateur agents buy these tracts by the thousand, and distribute them liberally. Thus it has a power and advantage which no other press, religious or secular, possesses. The others must depend upon some merit or attractions to obtain subscribers and pay expenses. But this press has religious zeal working on its behalf and its innumerable editions of almost innumerable publications are bought as a duty and as a means of "going to heaven." To distribute its tracts is set down as an essential article in the code of pious deeds, and is enlarged upon from the pulpit as a proof of "true religion" and a special way of doing "the will of God!" Hence men buy by wholesale, and so this press does a flourishing business and has an immense circulation. It is compared with the other religious press as a railroad is to a stage coach, or as a steam engine is to hand power. It must be a great money-making organization. It is classed among the "benevolent enterprises of the day," and is supposed to be "evangelizing the world." As such, notwithstanding its great business, it appeals to the credulous world for gifts and contributions in money, like the Irishman who went about begging while he had a girdle full of gold concealed round his waist. The Evangelist thus speaks of this press:—

The American Tract Society is accomplishing much towards evangelizing our country and the world. The receipts for eight months, up to Dec. 15, have been, in donations, $85,231, and for publications sold, $128,176—making $213,407, exceeding by a few dollars the corresponding months of the previous year. The number of colporteurs has been somewhat increased, and by the increased expense of supporting them, with other outlays, the total expenses have exceeded the receipts by $10,000, in addition to which notes had been given, chiefly for printing paper, to the amount of $18,940, payable before April 1, when the society's year ends. Applications and claims before the committee show that from $18,000 to $20,000 will also be needed for foreign lands before April 1. A friend of the society has recently sent in his check for $2,000 as a donation, and liberal contributions have been received from the City of New York and some of the Western States. The Tract Society will be supported in its useful labors by others, according to their ability, we doubt not, and therefore we cheerfully recommend it to the cordial aid of all classes of Christians.

ANOTHER CHARACTERISTIC OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS IS THE BITTERNESS AND ENMITY WITH WHICH IT ATTACKS ALL OF MANKIND WHO DO NOT BELONG TO THEIR PARTY AND UNITE IN THEIR ORGANIZATION.

There is no truth more certain than that happiness consists in virtue. It is equally certain that virtue emanates from the Deity, is derived from Him, and is His nature. (When we say the Deity we mean that Supreme Being and Creater of all things, who has revealed His Word and Truth to mankind, first in the letter of the Scriptures and then in His Son.) Now, if the religious world were possessed of virtue they would be happy and at peace with themselves and all mankind; they would not seek to torment mankind by threats of all kinds; they would not desire to render them more miserable than they are by forcing them to the curtailment of what little enjoyments they have. They teach and profess that all mankind except themselves, are going "to hell." Now, then, if they had any kindness in their hearts and natures, would not that be misery enough for mankind? Why then do they seek to torment in this world, those whom they consign to eternal misery in the world to come? Yet they are engaged in a constant warfare with the outside world, and interfering with them in the things wherein they enjoy themselves for a short time in this world before going to the place to which the religious world consigns them. Why this meddling with them? Why this labor to curtail them of a few innocent enjoyments? Why pass laws, or urge upon government to pass laws to prevent these poor wretches from tasting a drop of wine? What bitter hate, what enmity against mankind, to doom them to an indiscriminating and same hell for ever hereafter—and not content therewith, to seek to make them miserable now. Why meddle with their doings and amusements wherein they do not meddle with them? If they are all going "to hell" why seek to deprive them of a little enjoyment now? Why attack them and abuse them because they dance, because they drink wine, because they go to the theatre? All which things are innocent properly enjoyed, and none of which are prohibited by the law of God.

There is no mercy, pity nor kindness in all this. But mercy, pity and kindness to his fellow-creatures, which are the essential characteristics of true Christianity, are not to be found in conduct nor engraved in the heart of the modern professors of religion.

THE ATTEMPT OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS ON THE DRAMA AND DRAMATIC LITERATURE.

The religious press, not content with quarrelling polemically with itself, and living in a state of civil war with its own religious cotemporaries, indulges itself regularly in attacking the world and criticising and condemning its avocations, with which, if this religious press were really religious, it would have nothing to do.

Among other things it directs its venom against dramatic literature. If we compare the two together, viz: religious and dramatic literature, the superiority will be found greatly on the side of the latter. Religious literature is most intolerant and absurd. It paints its characters in the most unnatural light and the most repulsive colors. Its heroes, like the genius that conceives them, are unkind, unamiable, high pretending, boasting, canting, disgusting creatures, exhibiting a perfection of severity and bigotry which is quite hateful. Mankind are rendered conceited, canting bigots by such literature. Dramatic literature, on the other hand, represents men as they are: it abounds in truthful and striking pictures of human nature. It reprehends folly and vice by keen ridicule and sarcastic reproach; it paints in its denouements the inevitable fate of vice and the ultimate reward of virtue; it instructs mankind to a certain extent; it reforms the taste and manners of the age, and has been the precursor or the attendant of the highest civilization which mankind have ever attained. An admirable and comprehensive compendium of morals and ethics might be gathered from the dramatic works of Shakspeare and other writers for the stage—whereas a compendium of morals collected from the religious literature of the day would be both absurd and contemptible; it would amount to showing silly things, in which there is neither virtue, honor nor honesty; it would be all summed in the precept, "You must go to church on Sunday," or some similar thing, which a cat might do, and yet remain a cat, which dishonest men do and remain dishonest men. Such is the nature of religious literature when compared morally with dramatic.

Such are some of the characteristics of the religious press, which we have here briefly considered. There are doubtless many other features and characteristics upon which we might extend our remarks, and not without profit to the reflecting mind. But, enough. We make no suggestions, for it is true "that which is crooked cannot be made straight." We make no condemnation, for he that is without sin only has a right to lift up a stone against, and boast himself over the follies and errors of his fellow creatures. One thing, however, is clear and certain, and that is, that the truth which men have so grossly disfigured and perverted is the truth still. It lives still, though overwhelmed by the multitude of counterfeits. It will come out some day or other, cleared of all those vile counterfeits. It will prevail and they will be destroyed, and come at last to the exposure and infamy they deserve.

Another Herd of Mormons.

SHOULD the Salt Lake settlement continue to drain the old countries of their peasantry, as they are now doing, the Mormons will soon become a strong people. Another cargo arrived at the foot of Walnut street, yesterday, per packet ship Tuscarora, consisting of five hundred and thirty-seven souls. This entire multitude were Mormons, only excepting one Irishman. They hail from Sweden, Denmark and Great Britain, the majority being natives of the latter country. Our reporter boarded the ship on her arrival, threaded his way through the disciples who thronged the decks, and sought out the President or Elder of the party.

We found him in the person of Richard Harper, a fair type of the English mechanic—lusty, vigorous and healthful. He became a convert to Mormonism about five years since, through the preaching of an itinerant Mormon who visited Lincolnshire, his native county. Harper declared that the truths uttered by this vagabond Mormon were so irresistable that he yielded implicit credence to them. Feeling, therefore, like Paul—"wo is me if I preach not the gospel," he in turn became an exhorter, an elder, and finally President of the societies in the district. He then determined to form a company to emigrate to Utah, with what success the reader can judge for himself. He is accompanied by his wife and four children.

The appearance and condition of the passengers are better than we have ever before seen in an emigrant ship. The contrast between these Mormons in point of cleanliness and apparent comfort with the passengers of the Saranak—a ship at the adjoining pier which was just then discharging a load of Irish—was strikingly in favor of the former. Their cheerfulness, too, was remarkable, but is accounted for by their immunity from care in disposing of their baggage, etc., all of which was attended to by Mr. Cannon, agent for the Mormon Emigration Society. When the ship hauled into her berth, there was a crowd of boarding house keepers ready to extend their good offices, but all their attentions were entirely superfluous, and the Mormons saved their money.

Each family pays its own expenses. The cargo of the Westmoreland, which arrived some three weeks ago, was entirely from the continent, and was a sort of joint stock concern. Not so with this. Indeed, only about a third of them are going direct to Utah; the remainder will remain in the States until they can earn sufficient money to carry them out. One Englishwoman, whose dress and address were alike refined, informed us that she was a dress maker, and should remain here if she could obtain employment; otherwise she should go with the others to Salt Lake. There are quite a number of seamstresses on board who were eager to know whether employment could be readily obtained, while mechanics of the opposite sex were no less inquisitive. We were much surprised at the degree of conversance which these people have gained with the Holy Scriptures. A man, to whom we spoke upon the subject of Mormonism under the impression that he was utterly ignorant of the Bible, astounded us by an exposition of his creed backed by scriptural quotations, so apt, that none but a well versed theologian need attempt an argument with him.

It is unfair to characterize these Mormons as unlettered, or charge them with embracing the creed for the mere sake of promised happiness in an ideal country. On the contrary, they seem fully to realize the hardships before them, and to have their eyes open to the fact that they must earn their bread by patient toil upon arriving at Utah. They appear to be a moral and correct set of people, with no such ideas as we find existing in the land of Brigham Young. While on ship-board there were religious services three times on Sunday, and every morning and evening during the week. No intercourse was permitted between the crew and passengers. The President, Harper, was the mouthpiece of the tribe. The mode of address among each other was brother and sister, while their intercourse appeared to be eminently cordial and affectionate.

There were two births on the passage, two marriages, and four deaths. Two others, children, died this morning from debility. The light faded from the eyes of one little one, while we looked pityingly, yet not regretfully on, as it is impossible to resist the conviction that death is far preferable to the horrors of Utah. The emigrants will start for their destination on Monday. The voyage out was a pleasant one, and occupied but thirty-one days. How many of the poor creatures will reach Utah remains to be seen.

[Philadelphia Paper.

A BOY got his grandfather's gun and loaded it, but was afraid to fire; he, however, liked the fun of loading, and so put in another charge, but still was afraid to fire. He kept on charging, but without firing, until he got six charges in the old piece. His grandmother, learning his temerity, smartly reproved him, and, grasping the old continental, discharged it. The recoil was tremendous, throwing the old lady upon her back! She promptly struggled to regain her feet, but the boy cried out, "Lay still, granny—there are five more charges to go off yet!"

CHICAGO is evidently getting to be a city. Within the past two weeks, says the Chicago Times, only three constables and two justices of the peace have been sent to Bridewell, one county physician and two almshouse agents arrested for robbing graves and selling human bodies, and one Mayor arrested for stealing mail bags! That is all—in the official line. If the public officials are corrupt, the people of the city seem to know what their proper duty is towards them, and, by bringing the bad to justice they will secure a better set of officers.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1857.

A Word to the Mirror.

"In looking over Mr. Appleby's paper, we find that he strongly defends Polygamy, and gives various quotations from the Bible to prove that this system has the Divine sanction, and that the Mormons, in appropriating to themselves a number of wives, are but following in the footsteps of those who were favored of God, and that 'God Himself approbated Polygamy and tolerated it among His people as the order of Heaven.'

"Mr. A. tells us that he is a 'Jersey Mormon' and a 'Jersey Blue.' We cannot consider him a true 'Jersey Blue,' until he renounces the Mormon doctrine of Polygamy. It is a system which true Jerseymen consider fraught with the most degrading evils, and calculated to sap the foundations of morality, religion and good government. We are not willing to admit that Mr. Appleby can be a true Jerseyman and a Polygamist."

We clip the foregoing from the Mount Holly Mirror, New Jersey, July 9, in relation to us.

The Mirror says we strongly defend Polygamy, and give various quotations from the Bible, &c. Well, Mr. Mirror, if you believe what is contained in the Bible you will believe Polygamy too, and there will be some reason in replying to you; but if you do not, it is labor thrown away. No doubt but what you think you believe it, and quite probably you do, when it is shut, but not when open; for the most sublime truths contained therein are disbelieved, and repugnant to, this generation on account of their tradition, and God's Word is considered and treated as a nullity.

The Mirror says, "we cannot consider Mr. A. (us) a Jersey Blue until he renounces the Mormon doctrine of Polygamy. It is a system which true Jerseymen consider fraught with the most degrading evils, and calculated to sap the foundations of morality, religion, and good government." Why, to be sure it is. The false morality, false religion, and the corrupt governments of the present day are all to be swept away, for the Lord has declared it. The Scriptures say the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdoms of our God and His Christ, and we have no doubt but what the truth of Heaven, revealed in those Scriptures, are considered in this day of Christian Apostacy fraught with degrading evils. God's ways always were thought so by those who knew not God, neither His ways. God's law always did come in contact with the traditions and infidelity of the world. He establishes one order—the world, another order in opposition—"no counterfeit without a true coin." That which is evil the world calls good, and that which is holy the world calls evil. If Abraham, "the Father of the Faithful," were here now, how quickly would a prison be his doom; because he would "keep the laws, commandments, and statutes of the Lord, and walk in them." He was the friend of God by covenant, and into which covenant we all must come, and become the seed of Abraham, (that old Polygamist,) or we cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven. Is the Mirror prepared to enter the Kingdom? Perhaps he does not wish to be in the company of Abraham. How different are the ways of apostate christendom. See the fruits of their monogamic system of what they call morality, religion, and good government. Mr. Mirror, look at the evils, corruption, and abomination surrounding you on every side; see the houses of assignation in your cities and towns; look at the Cyprians that meet you at every corner; mingle with the seducer and libertine in their bachanalian revelries; look at the votaries of illicit pleasure; see their very vitals consuming under loathsome and foul diseases. Did the children of Abraham practice such things? Were they acquainted with them? Verily no! The Mormons look upon such things as a disgrace to humanity, a stench in the nostrils of the Almighty, and the perpetrators of such crimes not fit to live. No, indeed, no such things believed in, or practiced by the Mormons. No true Jerseyman but what despises such things; no true Jerseyman but what believes the Word of God in preference to the traditions of men; no true Jerseyman but wishes to become a son of Abraham by adoption; no true Jerseyman but will do the work of Abraham; no true Jerseyman but what believes the Bible; no true Jerseyman but what wants to sit down in the Kingdom of God with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, (all Polygamists,) while all Monogamists will be "cast out," for Abraham will certainly be ashamed of them. We are therefore determined to become a son of Abraham. We think "True Jerseymen," or "Jersey Blues" are scarce, when compared with the truths and order of Heaven, and we think the Mirror, when weighed in the balance of the law of God, will be found wanting: hence not a "true Jerseyman" or a "Jersey Blue;" for there is a wide difference between him that serveth God and him that serveth Him not.

Returning Apostates from Utah.

THE Herald of Monday last thinks the recent arrival in California, and on the Western Frontiers, of apostates from Utah, not exactly evidence of "the spread of Mormonism and the consolidation of the empire of Brigham Young on an impregnable basis," so stoutly "predicted by the Norwalk orators." Our neighbor thinks, too, that "these Norwalk orators" had not fairly represented "the state of halcyon felicity" in Utah, as no mention had been made of these renegades. Only a slight mistake, Mr. Herald, a slight mistake, that's all. "The Norwalk orators" knew all about these returning folks, and talked about them, too, at the "Clam-bake," but the reporters had not time to put it down—and who could blame them? Excellent clams, delicious ham, and splendid etceteras, all served up by lovely, charming creatures—and all the good things going down, too, with a gracious, whole-souled welcome from the governor of the feast—who could think of reporting? The next time the Herald wants a full report, we advise him to send, instead of a gentleman as his representative, a run-a-way judge of the Drummond school, or some "hell fire and brimstone" christian minister, or a missionary, like the Rev. Mr. Ward, of St. Louis, and then he will get a report as is a report.

But what of the folks coming from Utah! Well, what of it? If the Herald could only read the catechism the inhabitants of that Territory had to look at last winter; he would be surprised that so few had "fled" from Utah. The Mormons out there have had a reformation, a general time of confessing their sins. It was nothing of that kind of low mumbling on bended knees to some imaginable "one eternal, not one eternal but three eternals, not three eternals but one eternal" of Episcopalian prayer book jugglery—a real confession, a turning away from wickedness in the Pentecostal style. Think of it, Mr. Herald; think of asking a fellow if he had committed adultery! That was the rub! That was the little question that turned up more than one man who has lately figured in print against Utah. And more than one tongue that has whispered in the ears of James Buchanan, "Send troops to Utah, we require them," knew well they required protection, for death or flight is the penalty for that crime in Utah. Do you understand it now, Mr. Herald? If some escaped that ordeal they were asked "Have you stolen?" That caught many a one who had been so imbued with christianity that they forgot the difference between mine and thine. We must, however, stop—the printer says there is no more room. Stop we must, then; but we have given the key without adding the catechism that has driven some from Utah. How many would be left in New York if if they had to answer the Utah catechism?

Appointments.

ELDER WILLIAM H. BRANCH is hereby appointed to travel and preach the Gospel in the State of New Hampshire, under the direction of Elder Alexander Ott, President of the New York Conference.

Elder Daniel Mackintosh is hereby appointed to labor in the State of Massachusetts, in connection with Elder J. F. Cleary, President of the Church in Boston, in preaching the Gospel. He will act under the direction of Elder Cleary for the present.

Elders Robert Gardner, Charles Shumway, William B. Twitchell, and John M. McCrary are hereby appointed to travel and preach the Gospel in the Canadas. All the Elders on missions there will counsel and correspond together as often as necessary for the good of the cause, and the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God. They will act under the direction of the Presidency at New York, and report their labors from time to time.

All these brethren will labor according to their appointments until further orders, in preaching the Gospel, baptizing those who believe, organizing Churches, hunting up the lost sheep, building up the Saints, comforting the hearts of all those who wish to do right, and counselling them in relation to their duties, gathering to Zion, &c. Always endeavoring to preach wherever a place may be open, and to labor in new places as much as possible.

They will also act as agents for THE MORMON, obtain all the subscriptions, donations, &c. they can, and remit the same to us at New York.

W. I. APPLEBY, President, &c.

Editorial Correspondence.

LITTLE PAPPEAU, near Florence, N. T.
July 1st, 1857.

BRO. APPLEBY—Dear Sir: I have just made a start from Florence in company with a number of brethren, and for the first time since my arrival in this upper country, find time to address to you a few words.

Previous to my leaving Florence I requested Bro. Musser to write you an account of the emigration, to which I beg to refer you. I will merely say that all things are moving well. The first English company of hand-carts left in good spirits on the 19th ult., and I visited them, in company with Bros. Snow, Cunningham, Musser, and others. It certainly was to me a novel sight; old and young, male and female, were in some manner "hitched in," aiding in pushing or pulling the hand-carts, and thus practically carrying out a song that they seemed to chant with great glee:

"Some will push and some will pull," &c.

I took hold of a hand-cart alone to pull it up a hill, and found it rather heavy; but this same cart had five persons to draw it, which, of course, is different from one. The opinion of most persons who are experienced in the matter is that those who are inexperienced in cattle can travel the road easier in this manner than to have the charge of a team. Some seventy Elders, destined for various districts of country, have travelled in this way from the valley.

Captain Martin left with an ox-train company on the 29th. The St. Louis ox-train company left on the 30th, and the Delaware and Philadelphia ox-train company left to-day. The last two companies are organized in one, with Jacob Hophines as their captain. Bro. Little arrived from St. Louis two days ago, and Bro. Eldridge of St. Louis yesterday. Bro. Phineas Young also arrived a few days ago. The Danish handcart company, if not now arrived, is expected hourly. Everything is moving peaceably and harmoniously, and officers and people, I believe, are doing as well as they can. The weather is now warm, and grass abundant, and there is every prospect at present of the emigration moving on well. But I find I am doing what I requested Bro. Musser to do, and must stop.

Bro. Snow left a few days ago for our new settlement called Genoa, where we expect to join him and others en route in a few days for Utah. Bros. Henry W. Miller, Andrew Cunningham, Geo. J. Taylor, accompanied by a number of horsemen, who go with us to Kearney to guard us against depredations from white and red Indians, are now with us. The tents are now up, the camp fires smoking, and the cheerful sound of women and children, as the former attend their domestic duties and the latter rollick on the green grass in the innocence of youthful mirth, all bespeak happy contentment—all, indeed, at this their first experience on the rolling prairie, are full of hilarity, and seem as merry "as village bells at harvest home." A waggon that was upset and some parts of it broken, was unloaded, mended and reloaded in half an hour.

The prairies are now dressed in a lively green. Nature has dealt with no parsimonious hand in this country. There is enough of grass in this unoccupied region to feed millions of cattle, and the land for hundreds of miles is rich and fertile. Often, while I have been here, have I reflected upon the miserable position of tens of thousands in the eastern cities, who are dwelling in miserable damp cellars and pent-up garrets, breathing a fetid, unwholesome atmosphere—while there are millions of unoccupied lands in the western country, which only requires labor to produce not only the necessaries, but the luxuries of life. Our eastern people seem to be unacquainted with the resources of the West, or, if they know it, do not appreciate it. They indeed sing "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm," but they are too indolent, negligent, or lack the energy to possess it.

Very great improvements have been made in all the upper country on the border of the Missouri. Florence, however, is one of the prettiest sights that I have seen. They have made very rapid improvements here, and what was a few years ago a solitary place is now a thriving and rapidly increasing little city. Labor of all kinds commands much better prices here than in the East.

In passing through this county I am reminded forcibly of the time when we first traversed this land, and especially our sojourn in Winter Quarters. I visited the graves of many of our dead, and could not but reflect upon the trying scenes we then passed through in our exodus from what is boastingly called "the land of the free, the home of the brave, and the asylum for the oppressed." We then left the abodes of civilization (?) to find an asylum among the tawny savages of the forest; and many fell beneath the ruthless hand of persecution and the fiendish hate of hypocritical demons in human form. The honest-hearted man, the old revolutionist, who had battled for what is called liberty, together with the widow, the fatherless and orphan, were hunted like the deer in the forest, and many a stalwart arm and noble heart lay palsied in death. I felt like saying: "Sleep on, ye martyrs of truth; you are now at rest, and all is well. No slanderer's tongue can longer bite as a viper; you are far beyond the reach of mobs and mob violence."

Many of the headboards of the graves that designated the last resting place of those weary wanderers were removed or burned by the yearly prairie fires. I was enabled to decipher the following, which may be interesting to many of their friends: M. Das; H. T. F.; I. H. F.; P. J. Hallins; Eliza Elaker Starke, 15 Juin 1856; A. F., Feive, Denmark, 27 Juin, 1856; Jane Benbow; Sarah Halley, Dec. 28, 1846; J. S. and H. S. Turley; S. A. Pendleton; John Smith; T. Bellington; Susannah Bigler; Michael Peterson; Norga Dodder, 7 Juin, 1856, America. Like all grave yards, the old and young slumber together. But I find I must stop; I am writing in my carriage, with a board for my table, and the messenger awaits my letter. My love to all. Adieu.

As ever, your brother in the E. C.,
JOHN TAYLOR.

Massachusetts.

ELDER J. F. CLEARY writes us from Boston this week, that the work of the Lord is progressing favorably in his field of labor. Several have lately been added to the Church by baptism, and a good spirit prevails among the Saints generally.

Bro. Cleary is a faithful, humble man, earnestly devoted to the success of his mission. It is pleasing to see the Lord working with His faithful servants, and giving them souls as seals of their ministry. The prospects for spreading out in other places contiguous to Boston are encouraging, and as Elder Cleary calls on us for assistance, we have appointed Elder Daniel Mackintosh, recently from Great Salt Lake City, to labor with him. Bro. M. is one of the hand-cart missionaries whose practical information will doubtless be useful to those whose faces are Zionward.

We trust that the united labors of these two good men in the "Bay State" will be a blessing to the honest in heart who seek the Kingdom of God and its righteousness.

General Walker—Nicaragua

THE General has been at home, Nashville, Tenn., and there "made a speech." The past, known to everybody, was reiterated, and the sublime mission of filibusterism in Central America sanctified and made holy. He believes in the future smiles of "Manifest Destiny," and means to "get up and at it again;" but when, does not say. While he and his braves here in the States have been branding the inhabitants of Central America with every title and name akin to barbarians, and savages, his own deserters and the sick uncared-for wounded that he had left behind, are praising, blessing and eulogizing the Costa Ricans for their kindness and humanity.

Though the allied armies are being disbanded and retiring to their firesides, Nicaragua does not yet enjoy perfect peace: the ambitious are still at work. Costa Rica and Nicaragua begin to talk sense to John Bull and Jonathan. The two States talk of combining and coming to a mutual understanding on boundary lines, and now tell John and Jonathan that the Lion and the Eagle may each stay at home—they can do their own business and manage all about the Transit business across the Isthmus, from the Atlantic to the Pacific without any assistance from either. As Great Britain feels very solicitous about the welfare of the Mosquito Sovereign, they offer to give him a pension, which they think will be more agreeable to this jungle sovereign than any gilding they can put on his brow.

The Latest from the Plains.

THE St. Joseph Journal, of the 2d inst., publishes a report brought by a French trader, that a hundred troops and fifty teamsters, under the command of Colonel Summers, were attacked by a large body of Cheyenne and Arrapache Indians, two hundred miles from Fort Kearney, and all slain. The report is confirmed by a trader who arrived at Pacific City, Iowa, on the 2d, and also by the emigrant train from Salt Lake.

[The above is discredited at Washington. Some persons who have just crossed the plains, informed us this morning, (Thursday,) that they had learned sufficient of the Indian preparations for hostilities to warrant Uncle Sam's boys to count on tough times on the plains.—ED.]

Arrival from England.

ELDER ELIJAH E. HOLDEN arrived in this city on Tuesday evening, by the screw-steamer City of Washington from Liverpool. He left on Thursday morning for St. Louis. He is in good health, and hopes to overtake the Utah emigration on the plains.

Personal.

PRESIDENT ANGUS M. CANNON arrived here on Friday, and returned to Philadelphia on Tuesday, accompanied by Dr. Clinton. The health of the Doctor is daily improving.

Prest. Appleby will preach at Stamford, Coan., on Sunday afternoon.

Departures.

Elders Richard G. Evans, Iver N. Iverson, and John W. Berry sailed from this port last Saturday for Liverpool, on board the packet-ship Columbia.

Elder Thomas Hall left for Canada on Monday evening.

A New Utah Judge.

HON. EMERY D. POTTER has been commissioned Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Utah, in place of Judge, Drummond, who has resigned.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

WE have had another week of excitement. The row between the "Dead Rabbits" and "Bowery Boys" on the Fourth had scarcely terminated before different wards of the city were the scenes of more strife, fighting and bloodshed. On Sunday evening, through some difference between two Germans and the interference of one of the Metropolitan police, a row sprung up, in which many persons were badly hurt, and one German shot and badly beaten with clubs. The German population in the neighborhood have been greatly irritated, and forced the police from the street. Brick bats and other missiles were freely showered upon the heads of the new police, and in some cases with very damaging effect. Fire arms were resorted to by both parties, and, as is almost always the case, the innocent, unoffending have come in for a liberal share of the injury. On Monday an inquest was held on the body of the murdered man and followed by a post mortem examination, to which the crowd rushed to glut their appetite for revenge. The circumstances attending this examination were such as were calculated to madden the people, who, doubtless, would have done considerable injury to the M. P.'s if they had not been well guarded in the station house. Three regiments have again been under arms and ready to march to the battle field.

At Seguine's Point, where a temporary Quarantine is being established, the inhabitants of the neighborhood have strongly manifested their oppositiou to the erection of buildings there for the sick and affected with fevers, &c. They have had a row with the police, an appeal to arms, by which many of the former have been badly wounded.

On Tuesday morning the greater part of the State Lunatic Asylum at Utica was burned to the ground. The patients were fortunately rescued. The damage done to the building figures in the neighborhood of $200,000.

Rumors were in circulation last week that Col. Sumner and troops under his command on the way to Utah had been met by the Indians on the plains and entirely destroyed. The report was generally credited; but from the latest advices from the plains we think the report groundless. The Indians are, however, certainly determined to show fight if they meet Uncle's boys.

The grasshoppers are doing dreadful damage in Minnesota. Two years ago they made a severe attack upon Utah at which many pious christians rejoiced. We shall watch how they enjoy a visit of the "unnumbered millions."

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

THE native troops in the East India Company's service have thrown the ruling powers in that vast empire into confusion by their recent murderous revolt. At Meerut several regiments combined in the insurrection, shot down every officer on whom they could lay their hands, liberated the first rebels of their own ranks, and set free more than a thousand other prisoners. Before the European troops could be brought against them, the rebels carried devastation and death to the homes of the English residents at the stations. When pursued they fled to Delhi, where they were first opposed, but afterwards joined by the native troops there, and then commenced an indiscriminate massacre of the English—men, women and children. Lieutenant G. D. Willoughby rushed to the arsenal where the rebels were furnishing themselves with the material of war, and by an act of heroism which cost him his life fired the arsenal and destroyed upwards of a thousand rebels. The Commander-in-Chief and the Governor General are confident of suppressing the insurrection; but so wide spread has been the revolt and so determined the rebels, that they have before them, unquestionably, a difficult mission.

The cause of this unlooked for outbreak is believed to be religion. The troops had the idea that their wholesale conversion to Christian doctrines and practices was contemplated. Their first symptom of discontent was the refusal, on the 19th of May, during a review, to bite the cartridges that had been touched by some matter repugnant to them.

Bomba, King of the Two Sicilies, has had another escape from assassination. On the 17th ult., while four soldiers were permitted to approach his majesty, one of them, in taking from his breast a petition, took with it a double barreled pistol and aimed it at his royal master. The flash singed the hair of his head, but did no further damage. The soldier immediately shot himself with the remaining dose for one.

Quite a considerable number of Italians have lately been apprehended in Paris, on a charge of conspiracy to assassinate the Emperor.

Italy seems to be again in movement. An attempt has been made to get up a revolution in Genoa. At Leghorn, there has, likewise, been an attempt at the same game. Mazzini gets blamed for every manifestation of rebellion in Italy, and, of course, is the author of the present troubles. Hundreds of arrests have been made, thousands of muskets captured with an abundance of ammunition.

A cotemporary states that the Waldenses of Piedmont are likely to have a chance of redemption, as some of their pastors have got the notion into their noddle of purchasing some land in Monongalia County, Virginia, where these poor Protestants may ultimately gain their independence. This is a move in the right direction. The awful poverty of that people is incroyable to all who have not witnessed it. America is big enough to hold all Italy and "the rest of mankind." If, instead of supplying money and fire arms to hot-headed politicians, their professed friends would bring them along to Uncle Samuel they would soon laugh at Pio Nino, Bomba, the Boy Emperor of Austria, and the whole string of tyrants, instead of breaking their jaws with big swearing and getting forever into trouble.

The screw steamer Fox, Captain McClinton, fitted out by Lady Franklin, sailed from Aberdeen on the 1st inst. for the Arctic regions, in search of the remains of Sir John Franklin and his crew.

The Duke of Marlborough is dead.

A New Daily.

THE enterprising editors and publishers of the Council Bluffs Bugle—Messrs. Babbitt and Carpenter started on the ever memorable Fourth of July a Daily Morning Bugle. They promise their patrons at least one year of their Daily, and calculate before the next anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, that that which is now a trial will become a necessity—an unchangeable fact. This new Daily is very neatly got up, ably edited and deserves well the support of folks out West, which we trust it will abundantly receive.

Notice.

WE are almost daily receiving letters from unknown individuals, requesting us to send them a copy of THE MORMON for them to examine, and if they like it they will subscribe for it. We would be willing to gratify them if we could afford it; but we can not. We serve all alike—then there can be no complaining. Those who wish THE MORMON will receive it regularly by forwarding their subscriptions. One dollar for six months, two dollars for one year—in advance.

A Scene by Moonlight.

EVERY one present at the celebration on Saturday, probably noticed, in the procession, a man painted and dressed as an Indian, but we presume few were aware of the fact of his being a real Mormon Elder! Such, however, was the case, and we understand he has been driving a brisk business at convert-making since that day. On Tuesday evening he was seen, with some half a dozen young women, wending his way down to the river below the swing ferry. Our informant, alive to the prospect of seeing some fun, crawled carefully along, under cover of the bushes, to within a few feet of the party. It soon became evident that the Mormon rite of baptism was there, under the mellow light of the moon, to be administered. Our informant owns himself quite favorably impressed with the convenience if not with the gracefulness of the Mormon mode of administering this ordinance. After a short prayer, the Elder and his converts entered upon the ceremony before them, by laying off all their garments with the exception of a certain unmentionable nether one, and one after another received a dipping at his hands. After coming out of the water, each removed her wet garment, and stood forth in all the unrestrained freedom, if not in the blissful innocence of glorious old Eden. They soon donned again their customary apparel, satisfied, no doubt, that by this time they were far above the liability of committing sin, and that by becoming subsequently "pickled," as a Mormon preacher recently said all true followers must, they would be happy forever. Thus it appears that we have Mormons, not only in Utah, but at our very doors. We are unable to learn the Elder's name, but understand that he came here from Shelburne Falls.—[Holyoke Mirror.

["The real Mormon Elder" alluded to has forwarded to us the above clipping, and states he was not in Holyoke on the Tuesday evening alluded to, nor had he baptized any person "since the last of May." The Mirror's informant aware of the very moral! very delicate! public taste could not resist the temptation of lying about the "man painted and dressed as an Indian," when he discovered that he was "a real Mormon Elder." Baptism is not administered by the Mormons in the convenient style that so "favorably impressed" the Mirror's informant, or we doubt not that, for the privilege of accompanying "by moonlight" "half a dozen young women" without "the unmentionable nether one," he would immediately seek after "holy orders" for the bliss of such "unrestrained freedom" that his corrupt tongue exhibits to be uppermost in his corrupter heart.

Such is the rage for "Free Love" and the depravity of editors who pander to the vitiated that even the above falsehood could'nt be told a second time without being helped to a deeper tinge couleur de rose. The Hartford Daily Courant, July 11th, says:

"A writer from Holyoke in the Springfield Republican, gives an account of a baptism by a Mormon Elder, which he saw surreptitiously by moonlight. Some half a dozen young women were baptized in the river, and were stript in toto, to signify the freedom from all sin."

The Hartford folks, if judged by the editor of the Daily Courant, seem to have a penchant for things strong and well marked. At Holyoke the half dozen had on the "nether one;" in Hartford they were "stript in toto." Better that who can! Corrupt mortals—lying generation, they cannot speak the truth.

Will the Mirror, Republican and Daily Courant copy this? We'll see.—ED. MORMON.]

THE commission of Col. Cummins as Governor of Utah was made out last Saturday and the other Federal offices have likewise been filled, save that of Marshal.—[On dit.

☞ The columns of THE MORMON are open to the correspondence and articles of the Elders; but, while we believe in according full liberty to all, we hold ourselves irresponsible for the particular sentiments of any.

Utah Correspondence.

PAROWAN, Iron Co., U. T.,
May 10, 1857.

PREST. APPLEBY,—Editor Mormon: I take up my pen to give you a few items from this portion of Utah, thinking that perhaps it might be acceptable, though I have no news of very great importance to communicate. It is, as usual, a general time of health and activity with us in Parowan, all hands being busily engaged in farming, building and making improvements of various kinds, and consequently we are poorly supplied with those little items that are so numerous in other parts of the world, and which add so much to the interest of their daily press, such as murder, adultery, arson, burglaries, robbery, theft and deeds of like nature. In Utah, every honest man is too busy to spend time in such operations, even if the temptation were laid before him, and the rogues that occasionally come among us find it rather unprofitable business, when all things are taken into consideration. For the first named offences DEATH is the penalty, and for theft a restitution of four fold is required, which makes it rather expensive. Such characters as delight in such practices, when they become known, usually leave us with far greater pleasure and haste than they exhibited on their arrival among us, and as a cover to their own evil deeds make awful and startling disclosures of the wickedness and abominations of the Mormons. We should "give the devil his due," and I will here acknowledge with pleasure the testimony that our worst enemies sometimes give in our favor, John Hyde, Jr., for expample, who says we send out the biggest rascals we have as missionaries, and consequently leave it to be inferred that we who remain behind are a pretty decent set of fellows—barring, of course, father Abraham's sin of polygamy. It is certainly highly proper that such an exception should be made, for although Abraham is considered by both Christians, Jews and Mahomedans as the father of the faithful, and the Holy Scriptures call him the "friend of God," yet he lived in a dark and benighted age, and could hardly be expected to know any better. It is true he lived in constant communion with the heavens, and received great and glorious promises, and it is also said that God is unchangable—the same yesterday, to-day and to-morrow, and some whose minds are not lighted up with the glorious effulgence of the 19th century, might be so foolish as to infer and believe that if an Alwise and unchangable God sanctioned a plurality of wives then, he would do so now; and if Christ, the Redeemer of the world—the Son of God—thought it not beneath his dignity to come upon the earth through the lineage of a long line of polygamists, and God testified of him saying "this is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased," that it could not but be right now. Well, all such deluded souls should be pitied, and should have proper allowance made for their ignorance.

The members of the various christian denominations look forward with bright anticipations to the time when, having "kept the faith and fought the good fight," they will have a place in Abraham's bosom and sing their souls away to everlasting bliss, but do they ever reflect seriously what kind of a place that is, and what kind of company they would have to associate with? Just to think of it! Abraham, a polygamist! It is an old saying, though one not very sanctified in this connection, that "birds of a feather flock together," and consequently we should expect that they would prefer to associate with those of their own stamp and way of thinking, and instead of going to Abraham's bosom, would rather go some where else; in fact, Abraham himself might prefer such an arrangement.

Why is it that God permitted to Abraham and other holy men a plurality of wives? Was it to gratify a principle of lust in them, or was it because God did not know it was wrong? The christian community will answer unhesitatingly that neither of these was the reason—it would be incompatible with the acknowledged attributes of the Deity. It is because it is a holy and righteous principle, a principle of eternal truth, and truth is immutable and eternal—one of the attributes of the Deity. What was truth then, is truth now, and will be truth throughout all eternity. A mere lapse of time cannot change error into truth, nor truth into error, but each is for ever unchangable and eternal.

I see by the papers from the east that the same tide of slander and misrepresention which has so long heaved its turbid current against the rock of truth, still dashes with mad fury against it, but we in Utah are not yet scared. We are the true "unterrified democracy" and rejoice continually in the plan of salvation as revealed by Joseph Smith, knowing that all earth and hell combined cannot overthrow it. The waves of opposition that dash so violently against the rock of truth only serve to cleanse and purify it, by washing away the filth that may from time to time accumulate upon it, and so it is with Mormonism.

When we see Congress appropriating $50,000 to some of the territories for the purpose of building State-houses, and refusing $25,000 to Utah, we only smile, and say we are perfectly able to do without it. Utah is able to walk alone—to take care of herself—to govern herself and build her own public buildings, and if Uncle don't see fit to deal out even handed justice to us as well as others, let him rip—we don't care. We have learned long since to depend—not upon others but upon ourselves, and the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. The fact of our existence and prosperity in the midst of an inhospitable desert is sufficient proof of this.

We are endeavoring to live nearer to the true mark then ever before, and some whose deeds are evil and who will not reform are leaving us; a source of rejoicing to us, for we know if we as a people are pure in the sight of God we have nothing to fear. The new steam engine will soon be in operation at the Iron works, and we anticipate soon having plenty of iron to supply our wants. Strenuous exertions are being made to supply ourselves with wool, indigo, madder, cotton, (which latter flourishes finely) hemp and flax, and of course we shall succeed. The Sorghum Sucre is being also introduced, but we cannot as yet, say how it will succeed in this locality. Having already occupied much of your valuable space; I will close, praying continually for the prosperity of the Kingdom of God. Yours truly,

JAMES H. MARTINEAU.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 7, 1857.

PREST. APPLEBY—Dear Brother: After a busy time and a little breathing spell I seize my pen to inform you of my doings.

Upon taking leave of you and the brethren of "Gotham," on the 25th of last month, I came to this city, and attended meeting the same evening, in the 2d district, where I found everything pertaining to the branch had gone on, in my absence, as I could have wished, and a good spirit prevailing among the Saints. There being quite a number assembled on that occasion, I addressed them a short time in relation to the progress of the Latter Day work, and the purposes of God our Father with regard to us, His children.

Having received a letter informing me that Elder J. F. Snedaker lay very sick, I immediately arranged my affairs that there might no trouble occur in case the ship Tuscarora arrived in my absence, and started the next day to see my fellow-laborer and to attend a quarterly Conference of five branches in the district of Minersville to be held on the following Sunday. Upon arriving at Schuylkill Haven I was kindly received by the Saints, with whom I found Bro. Snedaker in a state of convalescence, gaining strength fast, although he had been very sick through a severe attack of the scarlet fever.

On Saturday the 27th I went to Minersville, and on Sunday the 28th I attended three meetings, preached twice in a crowded Hall, and transacted the business of the conference, which was composed of delegates from Westhaven, Pottsville, New Mines and Mount Carmel. These Branches gave in good reports, although the Saints have to work very hard, in miserable damp places, and meet a great deal of opposition springing from their religious belief. In the last quarter, several had been cut off and some baptized, while a number have emigrated West, and others been received. On Monday the 29th I left the Saints enjoying a good spirit, and determined to press onward in the Kingdom. Then I went to New Mines and preached from the 12th and 13th chapters of first Corinthians, to a full house and interested audience. Tuesday I went to Pottsville, where I found some good Saints, and preached that evening, showing the Saints and those present what blessings we would yet enjoy if faithful; what little the world lives for, and what we as children of light should never crave. Poor short-sighted creatures now have their riches at their own control, and according to their desire, as was that of the Prodigal Son, but who will soon squander it, and at length will have to come to an insulted Father and ask a servant's place, when a just God and wise Father will not fail to rejoice; and having acknowledged the right of His faithful children, the Saints, to possess His highest honors, He will, nevertheless, provide for the remainder according to their deserts, as they, unlike the faithful, have proved unfit to govern, but are only fit to become servants to those who are heirs of Salvation.

Wednesday the 30th I preached at Schuylkill Haven in the evening, when quite a number of strangers were present, and appeared, from the attention they paid, to be favorably impressed; as some afterwards expressed themselves to the effect, that what they had heard was uncontrovertable, being the principles advocated by Jesus, and those which alone could emanate from Heaven.

I returned here on the 1st inst., where I was pleased to meet Elders Eli H. Pierce, D. Wilkin and Iver N. Iverson, on their way to Europe. I would have been glad to attend the clam-bake on the Fourth had I not been informed upon my return to Philadelphia that the ship Tuscarora was then on her way up the river, and I thought of duty first and pleasure after.

On the 3d the Tuscarora came to her berth, with upwards of five hundred and forty Saints on board, enjoying remarkable good health, notwithstanding two infants died after their arrival in port. Bro. Richard Harper presided over the company, comprising persons from seven different nations—as some were from Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Germany, England, Scotland and Wales. These people, although of different tongues, were of one heart and one mind, being baptized into one faith. I witnessed no bickerings or strife among them.

The Saints spoke of Captain Domlery as a gentleman in his behavior towards them. He was, likewise, well pleased with their conduct on board, and says he would never wish to carry better people over the sea than they were. In fact they have been pronounced the most respectable company of passengers that have landed in this port, by numbers who visited them.

This voyage was pleasant as it only lasted 32 days and they had a few marriages, births and deaths. Prest. Harper promised me to send you a full report, hence I need say no more on that.

It was 10 A. M., when we boarded the vessel on Friday, and all were sent away by next day at 6 P. M., with the exception of some who took up their abode in this City.

Between three and four hundred went West by the Baltimore Rail Road, under the direction of Elder Christian Hyers who was sent by Prest. E. Snow to take charge of the Scandinavian Saints, while others went to Massachusetts, New York, Maryland, and different parts of Pennsylvania. It was gratifying to see all enjoy such excellent spirits.

As I found it extremely difficult to make arrangements to send the people West on the Fourth I called upon Mr. Cope, one of the company, who run this line of ships, to ask permission for the Saints to remain on board till Monday. I was accompanied by the Rail Road agents and Elder Wilkin when I received in answer to my reasonable request:—"No! We have no sympathy for your people. They must leave straight away, and were it in my power to benefit them by turning my hand over I would not do it; but would rather scatter and prevent them from emigrating. They are a poor deluded people, and I believe they will be mobbed to-morrow." When I perceived his meanness I told them they should remain on board forty-eight hours from the time of their arrival if I wished it, which I had a right to do through a provision wisely made in the emigration laws, of which he was ignorant till I convinced him. Chagrined more, he expressed regret, that we were not in his power.

I felt a thorough contempt for so corrupt and miserable a being, even though he professed christianity and was dressed in the garb of a gentleman.

This is a specimen of the fruits of some men's christianity, who, being full of charity, unlike the Latter Day Saints, breathe a spirit of mobocracy and bring persecution upon an innocent people, seeking to deprive them of their rights, and to rob them of their only remaining treasures;—virtue and integrity before God by throwing them helplessly upon the world.

Such beings as Mr Cope would speak evil of the "Mormons" and say they were without charity, although they have shared their all with the poor, fed and clothed their enemies who once hunted the lives of the innocent children of God as the wild Roe of the forest. While he, religious creature, filled with charity would not grant a favor, but would injure, if in his power, helpless strangers, simply because they go according to the dictates of a pure conscience.

One whose heart is thus corrupt would have taken three hundred people, ignorant of our language, from his vessel to scatter among men whose hearts together with their systems of Christianity are rotten and corrupt as the heart and thoughts of such a being.

Specimens of those in fellowship with such schemers might be seen lounging about the ship, taking the name of God in vain at almost every sentence, and while some of them went so far as to boast, how much they would like to rob the young and innocent of their virtue, the Saints praised the name of the Highest, for their present freedom, and besought His protection in prayer against the snares set by enemies to entrap them.

Other fruits might be witnessed as what their systems had nourished if not produced. Men, women and children might be seen reveling in drunkenness and all kinds of debauchery, when not a few were laid aside in most of our Eastern Cities with fractured heads and limbs together with bloody faces. While numbers who remained sound enough at night would enter houses of the worst character to satisfy their passions and seal their damning deeds. When if the law of God was brought to bear upon such people as is the case with the "Mormons" their blood would have to drench the ground, as an atonement for their iniquity. Praying for the redemption of Israel, I leave Mr. Cope in the hands of the Lord, who has promised to judge and reward all men according to their works.

I remain, dear Brother, your humble servant in the Everlasting Covenant,

ANGUS M. CANNON.

A Travelling Sketch.

NEW-YORK, July 7th, 1857.

PRESIDENT W. I. APPLEBY—Dear Bro: On the 2nd of June, at 6 o'clock P. M., I left on board the Boston steamer, the mighty City of Gotham. The beauty of the evening was matchless and presented with the lovely scenery a panorama as only the sublime artist of Nature can portray it. The Sound with its vast sheet of azure water lay before me like a gigantic mirror, in the midst of which now and then small islands dotted with elegant villas, arose, as it were, out of the watery embrace of Neptune, who with Æolus did not feel inclined to disturb the harmony of the evening and exact involuntary sacrifices from the poor landsmen by a rough sea. For which favor I am particularly thankful to the old god with the triangle, and I promise him solemnly not to come within his dominions whenever I can help it. The shores of the Sound adorned with scattered farms, orchards, country seats and animated with all kinds of living beings, recalled to my mind the magnificent scenery of the Gulf of Mexico, between the Island of Cuba and New Orleans.

At 10 o'clock A. M., on the 3d of June, I landed at Stonington, where I took the cars and arrived at 6 o'clock A. M., the same day in Boston. I met with a hearty welcome from the Saints, who did their best to make my sojourn in their midst as comfortable and pleasant as possible, administering to my wants, and manifesting their determination of carrying out my instructions. Being very anxious to get a perfect knowledge of the condition of the Saints, I visited accompanied by Prest. James F. Cleary, the Saints in Boston City and its vicinity, teaching and instructing them relative to their different duties, especially concerning the importance of sustaining THE MORMON. I can truly say, that the Saints under the Presidency of Elder Cleary—who enjoys their confidence and goodwill, are doing well, which does all honor to their Presiding Officer, whose energy and indefatigable exertions in spreading the truth and building up the Saints under his charge, have had beneficial effects.

On Sunday, the 7th of June, I preached three times to quite a number of Saints and sinners. An excellent spirit prevailed in the assembly and the greatest attention was paid to my words.

On Monday, 8th June, at 2 1-2 P. M., I left Boston for Lowell. The ride was a very pleasant one, and afforded me a fine opportunity of contemplating the lovely scenery around me.

The nice hamlets; the scattered farmhouses with their natural ornaments of ivy and jassamin; the variegated colors of the fields that were thickly matted with flowers and the fruits of ceres; the wooded hills; the picturesque dales; the chirping and singing of the feathered choristers; the distant hum of busy life, all this formed a picture, in which nature, art and taste were harmoniously blended, and which far surpassed the artificial productions of the most refined genius.

While looking at this kalcidescope, I could not help thinking that Nature is the great repository with which everyone of of a cultivated mind ought to be familiar. It is from this grand Temple of physical creation that men like Phidias, Murillo, Raphael and others had imbibed their ideas which made them gods in their studios, so that they gained an immortal fame; it is from Nature that a Beethoven could become inspired enough to write his sublime Fidelio; it is from a knowledge of Nature that James Fenimore Cooper, Chas. Dickens and others could portray scenes with the colors of real life. An artist excels whenever his productions are natural, because the aim of fine arts is a correct representation of Nature; hence we see the great difficulties under which persons of histrionic pursuits labor; it takes some time before they realize that the stage represents the world en miniature.

On my arrival in Lowell, I called the Saints together, and after having properly instructed them relative to their duties, I organized them into a Branch with Bro. E. S. Davis as President. I preached twice in Lowell and twice in Lawrence; in both places I found the Saints warmhearted and willing to live their religion.

Phoebus had risen in his splendor and majesty, and dressed all nature in the beautiful colors of a lovely morning, when, on the 13th ultimo, I bade adieu to the brethren and sisters of the Lowell Branch, and it will always be with associations of a pleasing nature that my mind will revert to those fleeting but interesting hours I have spent in that circle of kindhearted and faithful Saints.

While confined to the small compass of a railway car and being at the mercy of the Iron Horse that dashed along the track with the usual rapidity of steam locomotion, the floating curtains of Nature's great theatre were thrown back; and a panorama of multifarious scenes was unfolded before my eyes. I had entered the domains of the "Granite State" whose mountain scenery reminded me forcibly of my native home in Silesia.

While contemplating the scenes of civilization and listening to the hum of industry, my thoughts led me through the vista of time to the celebrated Captain John, so well known from his connections with the early settlement of Virginia, who, in 1614, explored the Atlantic coast from the Penobscot to Cape Cod, trading with the natives. The hardy and brave pioneers of the Hilton family that made in the spring of 1623 the first settlement on the Piscataqua River, within the present limits of New Hampshire, with all their various trials and difficulties were called to my mind. What a change has come over the scenery! The Indian war song is heard no more; the arrow and the tomahawk are buried in our mother-earth; the paths that were untrodden by the white man's foot, are now transformed in high roads of civilization. Those proud Indians that signalized themselves so horribly in King William's war, in the massacre at Fort William Henry in 1757 are buried in Lethe's stream, and only a few miserable remnants of half-civilized Aborigines betoken the former existence of the once powerful Indian nations, and flourishing villages and towns have arisen, (as if by enchantment,) out of the camping and hunting grounds of the natives of a past world; and as the wheels of Time are rolling on, oblivion is drawing its veil forever over the scenes of Indian life.

The train of further reflections was suddenly interrupted by the prosaic, shrill whistle of the exhausted and panting Iron Horse that had carried me, after a very pleasant ride to Keene, to a beautiful inland town in Cheshire County. After a short delay I left the latter place for Gilsum in a conveyance, nick-named stage, but that deserved more the appellation of a mangle with Baker's patent, because, on account of the incessant shaking and squeezing within the crowded compass of a small wagon, not a crease was left in my coat at the end of the journey. The close confinement in a den-like place; the dreadful jolting; the noisy conversation of the female portion of my fellow travellers, which reminded me of those memorable sacred geese, that roused up by their noise the Roman garrison and thus saved the Capitol of that Eternal City from being captured by Hannibal, all this caused some unpleasant feelings in me, and I was very happy when I landed safely at Bro. Solomon Mack's residence, where I was received with that kindness and hospitality which characterizes so nobly every good Saint.

During my short stay in that truly picturesque part of New Hampshire, I have been accompanied by the ever willing and faithful Bro. Mack, engaged from morning until night in hunting through dales, vallies and hills after stray members, instructing Saints and sinners in the principles of eternal life, and doing my best in enjoining upon the public mind the necessity of embracing the Gospel of Christ. Through faith, perseverance and energy, I succeeded in getting up a meeting and when some of those old members who had not been to church for years, made their solemn appearance among the congregation, the remark was made, that the resurrection had commenced. After I had addressed them on the necessity of living their religion, they all declared their determination to lead a new life, to renew their covenants and be Saints in very deed.

On the 18th of last month, I left for Greenfield, Franklin County, Mass., where I arrived the same day. Stopping one night under the hospitable roof of Bro. Geo. Lee, I spent a very pleasant evening in the society of a few true-hearted Saints, teaching them the things pertaining to eternal life.

On the morning of the 19th of last month, I took, in company with Bro. W. Walker, the cars for Holyoke, where I arrived the same day at noon. The Saints who are operatives in cotton factories, give through their honesty, orderly conduct and respectable appearance the greatest satisfaction to their employers, so that the latter candidly state that they prefer Mormons to any other people. The foregoing is a good illustration of the principle, that virtue always has a good influence; that it secures the respect and esteem of our fellow-beings, and that it exercises a power which overcomes in the end all difficulties.

The little Branch there appeared to me, on account of its life and vigor, in the midst of mental darkness and barrenness, like an oasis or green spot in the Sahara's sandy ocean. I held there several meetings, in which an excellent spirit prevailed.

On the 22d of last month, I left for Wallingford, where I held two meetings and organized a Branch with Bro. Doolittle as President. I visited likewise the Saints in Northhaven and Hanover and found them generally desirous of living their religion and doing better.

On the 25th, I rode with Bro. Doolittle to Fairhaven, where I held a meeting and enjoined upon the Saints the necessity of improving, in order to secure a prominent position in the Kingdom of God. I must say here that the Saints of the Northhaven Branch received me with very friendly feelings, and that I am especially indebted to Mr. Tuttle and his lady, and Bro. L. A. Doolittle for that share of hospitality and kindness which are the indices of a noble mind and a good heart. On the 26th of last month, I returned to this place.

Praying that God may bless you with His Holy Spirit in the performance of your arduous duties, I am respectfully yours in the cause of Truth. ALEXANDER ORR.

NEW YORK, July 8, 1857.

ELDER T. B. H. STENHOUSE—Dear Brother:

While travelling through the States on my way to Europe, I have found it generally believed by the people that the Mormons, or that portion of them called, by these corrupt Judges, surveyors and officials, who have lately infested Utah, the Danite Band, committed the depredations and murders on the plains last year. As my brother Thomas was among the number who were killed, I have taken considerable pains to be correctly informed of the circumstances which led to the Indian hostility, as well as its results, and as such facts as I have gathered may be both interesting and useful to you in your present position, and not without value to the friends of the murdered, I have thought prudent to pen what I have learned, and leave it in your hands for publication if you think proper.

Some time in the latter part of August, 1856, as the United States mail, running from Oregon, Mo., to Fort Kearney, N. T., was passing a camp of Cheyenne Indians, the chief sent his boy to get a piece of tobacco from the mail carrier. When within a few rods of the wagon, the mail carrier perceived the Indian boy, and supposing the Indians hostile, fired his revolver at him several times, but fortunately missed him. The rest of the camp, hearing the report, started off at full speed to rescue the boy. The mail carrier seeing them coming, was still more excited, whereupon he threw some sacks of corn out of his wagon to lighten his load, and while in this act the Indians overtook the mail, but not before several arrows were shot, some of which came near sending the mail carrier to that home where several through his agency were afterwards doomed.

After both parties met, they had a proper understanding, and found that it was a mistake on both sides, so they settled the affair, as the Indians thought, all right, and the mail carrier gave the Indians the corn, not wishing to return back, and parted apparently good friends; but the sequel will prove how much the mail carrier valued his word.

He immediately proceeded to Fort Kearney, and told the officers there a false story, and gave them to understand that he had been robbed and nearly lost his life; never said any thing about the misunderstanding of both parties, or that he had settled the matter with the Indians; but, on the contrary, he made it appear the Indians were the aggressors, and that their intention was to rob and kill, and that he had made his escape.

The officers hearing his story, and thinking it true, prepared to exterminate the whole. The next morning, while the Indians were enjoying a feast made with the corn which had been given them the previous night, the soldiers rushed upon them, killing and wounding thirteen men and women, ten of whom died, and the rest of the band made their escape. Burning for revenge, and being determined to have man for man and blood for blood, they proceeded up the Platte river on the south side, watching for the lonely traveler or those who were not strong enough to protect themselves. The first they met was a Mr. Dixson, who was travelling to the States from California with his wife and child, accompanied by two men. The Indians fell upon them, shot Mrs. Dixson, and dashed the child's brains out against the wagon wheel: Mr. Dixson and the two men narrowly escaping with their lives. They next crossed the river to the north side of the Platt, and came upon a train of four or five wagons belonging to Col. Babbitt, loaded with freight, while they were encamped for the night. The Indians fired upon them, killing one man and wounding a woman that was going to Salt Lake with her young child. The men belonging to the train, fearing they might share the same fate as their comrades, fled for safety; the Indians then commenced their plunder, went to the wagon where the mother and child were, and finding the woman not dead, they took her prisoner, but she soon died; the poor child shared the same fate as that of Mr. Dixson's. After taking what they wanted from the wagons, they left, but still determined to have the same number of whites that they had lost Indians.

Their next course was back to the north side of Platte river; here they met my brother Thomas and wife, and a man by the name of James Cowdy, wife and child, all travelling together with one wagon; besides the above named, there was a discharged soldier from Fort Kearney travelling with them to the States, who was the only one that made his escape. From him I learn that my brother Thomas accompanied him on a buffalo hunt, and left the wagon in charge of Cowdy and the two women. It appears that they soon shot a buffalo, and returned to camp to get some utensils to carry the meat and tallow in; after which they proceeded to where the buffalo was, and, according to the man's account, my brother returned to camp about fifteen minutes before him, and when he arrived he saw my brother, Cowdy, and wife, all dead on the ground, and likewise saw the Indians who had committed the deed riding across the prairie as fast as they could. The soldier examined my brother's body, and supposed him to have been killed by a tomahawk; and fearing that he would be killed, jumped on his horse and made the best of his way to Fort Kearney. Before he left the fatal spot he observed that Mrs. Cowdy's child was not dead, but trying to get to its mother's breast. It appears from this man's statement to me that Mrs. Cowdy had been shamefully outraged. He could not see my brother's wife.

The Indians, not fully satisfied, fell in with Col. A. W. Babbit, who was camped on the north side of Platte river, accompanied by Mr. Thomas Sutherland and a young man whose name I have not heard. Mr. Babbitt was taking an express from Kearney to Laramie, and was therefore in haste. This is the reason why he was not with a company; still, he was going to Salt Lake; but had agreed to take this express, because no one else would, in consequence of the hostilities of the Indians.

After making a clean sweep of Mr. Babbitt and party, the Indians crossed to the north side of the Platte, where they killed their number of whites from emigration trains passing to the States.

Not wishing to prolong my letter, I will simply say that this is a correct statement, given by one of the officers at Fort Kearney, and it likewise agrees with the statement I received from the man that travelled with my brother till a few minutes before his death.

The Indians, after killing all they wanted, or the same number as they had lost, went to Fort Laramie, and delegated an Indian to see the officers at Laramie and acknowledge what they had done, telling them likewise that they had killed all they intended to kill, and wanted to be friends; but it appears that the officers would not accept their acknowledgement, so they continue enemies to the whites, and I have not the least doubt but some will suffer from their hatred this summer.

I will here say that my brother's wife was taken prisoner by the same Indians that killed the rest of the party; she is also with them yet, unless she has been rescued lately. I will here say likewise, that all these outrages were committed at least seven hundred miles from Salt Lake City.

I shall not extend my letter with more than an expression of my sympathy for the people who are deluded by the false reports of the calumniators of Utah; and to the firebrands who do their utmost to bring difficulties upon that Territory, I would say to them, take your time and reflect, for you will yet be sorrowful for your lies. I am, dear Brother, yours respectfully,

PHILIP MARGETTS.

The Utah Expedition.

WE alluded yesterday to the extraordinary exertions which have been made by the various departments of the military arm of the Government in this city to get under way, at the earliest possible period, the expedition to the Territory of Utah. That expedition having been determined upon, it was the province of the Government to show how quickly one-fourth of the army could be concentrated at one point, and the munitions and all the supplies for such an expedition be collected, and ready to take the field as soon as orders should be given. It is not over a month or six weeks since it was resolved by the Government that such an expedition was necessary—that it was the bounden duty of the authorities to see that the laws of the United States were executed in Utah as well as everywhere else, and that such an example would be eminently salutary in the case of Utah. In a little while—not exceeding ten days we should think—the whole army will be in the field, and then the attention of the country will be directed to its progress. We have our doubts, not now for the first time expressed, whether such an army, so incumbered with baggage and military supplies, can reach Utah before the winter sets in, but if not they can readily find quarters at Fort Laramie, and thence make an early march to Great Salt Lake City in the spring.

We have spoken of the arduous duties performed by the officers of the Quartermaster and Commissary Departments in fitting out this expedition. They have done wonders. Since the 5th of May, and up to the 3d of July, we learn that the number of troops forwarded by them to the West is 1,600; that the number of horses purchased amounts to 302; number of mules, 234; number of wagons, with harness for six mule teams, 325; total number of tons of Quartermaster's and Commissary stores purchased and shipped, 5,750; number of bushels of oats, 15,000; bushels of corn, 70,000; steamers engaged, 45; number of teamsters employed, 200. We further learn that the value of the Quartermaster's stores is $700,000, and that of the Commissary's stores, $328,000. We do not know that this includes the value of the horses, mules, &c., purchased elsewhere than in St. Louis; and we are quite sure that it does not embrace the material of war furnished by the St. Louis Arsenal, and in the preparation of which an average of one hundred men have been for some time employed. When the whole account comes to be footed up, it will be found that this expedition has been the means of disbursing some twelve or fifteen hundred thousand dollars in Missouri, to say nothing of transportation across the Plains, the supply of beef cattle, &c., contracts for which have already been made. Such a depletion of the Treasury, for supplies to be found at our doors, cannot help exciting a beneficial influence upon the pecuniary affairs of this State. It offers evidence, also, if evidence were wanting, of our ability to fit out an army in shorter time than any other city in the Union.—[St. Louis Republican, July 4.

The Expedition for Utah.

THE preparations for the Utah expedition are going on with great zeal at Fort Leavenworth. It is understood that the troops will be sent out in three divisions, so that they may encamp at different points, and thereby be sure of an abundance of grass for the horses and cattle. Gen. Harney will soon be prepared to move at the head of the whole force, and we have no doubt of his being able to render a good account of himself, whether in Utah or elsewhere. Up to Monday last, to which time our advices reach, nothing had been heard from Col. Sumner's command, except that he was within some 15 miles of Ash Hollow.

The Terre Haute, Alton and St. Louis Railroad Company, yesterday brought to this city 221 troops, destined for Utah. They were from Carlisle Barracks, Penn., and were under command of Captain Duncan, United States Rifles. The other officers accompanying were Captain Anderson, Second Dragoons; Lieutenant Jackson, Rifles; and Lieutenant Lee, Second Cavalry. These troops were at once placed on the Pacific Railroad cars, and left at three P. M. for Jefferson City by railroad, and thence to Fort Leavenworth by the Lightning Line. They are mostly recruits, and will be assigned to Companies en route to Utah, on their arrival at Fort Leavenworth.

Notices.

THE Saints who desire to send means to their friends in Europe, can have the same attended to, by forwarding any sum they wish in current money, to this office, enclosing one dollar or more, in proportion to the amount sent, to defray the expenses of procuring Bills of Exchange, making remittances, foreign postage, &c., describing particularly to whom, and where they wish to have it sent; at the same time not holding myself responsible in any manner whatever unless the money reach me.

All subscriptions, donations, &c., for the support of THE MORMON, or Conference Fund (except the donations and Conference Funds raised in the Philadelphia Conference, which will be forwarded as usual through President Cannon) must be sent hereafter to my address; as also Tithing; P. E. Fund, and donations for the Temple from those who wish to contribute the same, so each person may be duly credited, and the means forwarded to Zion, and have their names entered in "The Book of the Law of the Lord."

No Power of Attorney, or other legal instrument of writing, going to Europe or elsewhere, forwarded to us for the purpose of sending to Washington in order to obtain the attestation of the Department, and the British Consul's Certificate and seal to the same, will be attended to in future, unless the means to defray the expenses and foreign postage accompanies the Instrument, as there is considerable expense attending it as well as labor. We would like to oblige all, and are willing to give our services when we have opportunity; but we cannot advance means to defray such expenses.

All communications intended for THE MORMON should be addressed—Editor of THE MORMON, New York. Otherwise direct to my address, Box No. 3957, New York Post Office. W. I. APPLEBY.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Évangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

Poetry.

A Song for Thinkers

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

Take the Spade of Perseverance,
Dig the field of Progress wide;
Every rotten root of faction
Hurry out and cast aside;
Every stubborn weed of Error;
Every weed that hurts the soil;
Tares, whose very growth is terror—
Dig them out whate'er the toil.

Give the stream of Education
Broader channel, broader force;
Hurl the stones of Persecution
Out where'er they block its course;
Seek for strength in self-exertion;
Work and still have faith to wait;
Close the crooked gate to fortune;
Make the road to honor straight!

Men are agents for the future;
As they work, so ages win
Either harvest of advancement,
Or the product of their sin;
Follow out true cultivation;
Widen Education's plan;
From the Majesty of Nature
Teach the Majesty of Man!

Take the Spade of Perseverance,
Dig the field of Progress wide;
Every bar to true instruction
Carry out and cast aside;
Feed and Plant whose Fruit is Wisdom;
Cleanse from Crime the common sod;
So that from the throne of Heaven,
It may bear the glance of God!

Polygamy.

The restoration of the Patriarchal order of marriage in these "latter days," in fulfilment of the declarations of the holy prophets, seems to create more uneasiness in the minds of some of the political demagogues in the United States, as well as of religionists devoted to the dissemination of those principles of corruption and abomination, which, if they did not originate with, have been fostered by, the "peculiar institutions" of that church commonly called "the mother of harlots," and countenanced by priest and people throughout the length and breadth of the land, than any other subject within their knowledge, and many consider it "a violation of the whole recognized civil, moral and religious sentiment of the people."

That this institution is diametrically opposed to the recognized "civil, moral and religious sentiment" of a large majority of the people of the United States, is readily admitted, and it is not the only institution of Heaven that is opposed to the doctrines, commandments and practices of many in high places; if it was, they would not be so much alarmed for the safety and perpetuity of the institutions of the "scarlet lady" or of the "man of sin" they so much respect and revere. The reason, no doubt, of their being more opposed to the doctrine of plurality of wives, than to any other principle of truth revealed for the salvation and exaltation of the children of men, is, that it more immediately comes in contact with their evil and corrupt doings, and is more directly opposed to the damning sin of prostitution, than any other that has come to their knowledge, and sets things in their proper light.

Where is there a christian nation, so called, that does not tolerate and protect its citizens in the commission of every species of debauchery and prostitution that was ever practiced upon earth? Where is the city or town, of any considerable size, that has not its houses of "ill fame," licensed and protected by municipal regulations, for the accommodation of both high and low, rich and poor? And where is the priest or legislator that does or dare lift his voice against that abominable but favorite institution of the people? If there are any, we do not know who they are, nor where they reside. The pastor of a congregation in any of the principle cities of the United States would soon lose his situation if he interfered with or spoke against those establishments of filth and iniquity; and the aspirant for civic honor or promotion could not expect to obtain either if he uttered one word unfavorable to that popular appendage to civilized society—the brothel.

Such being the "civil moral and religious sentiments" of men it is no marvel that they are opposed to a principle that would tend to destroy, what they so much approve of and admire and wish to bequeath to their posterity; and they will unquestionably exert themselves to the utmost the necessity of Legislative enactment to extirpate polygamy in order to secure the perpetuity of monogamy and its attendant and consequent institutions if it is thought that it will in the least prolong their existence. Congress may even pass the act said to have been on the calendar of the House of Representatives last winter providing for "the prevention and punishment of polygamy" if the presence of so many "pretty women" as was reported to be in attendance during the late session does not entirely engross their attention, though the presumption is that those "visiting ladies" will strongly advocate its passage and call the attention of the Senators and Representatives to the important subject.

Should Congress in the heat of political religious phrensy yield to the importunities of a certain class of people whose institutions are in danger and pass an act to prevent and punish polygamy in the Territories, without some special provisions are made, it will certainly be a hard matter to enforce the law in the Territory of Utah. Special arrangements will have to be made for the accommodation of the Judicary, more than have been, or it will be a hard matter to get a full bench of the Supreme Court to reside here any considerable length of time, unless the Executive should be more fortunate in making appointments than heretofore. Provision will have to be made for the establishment of some of the popular institutions of the day, and for the importation of stimulants, or ten to one if they do not leave and raise the hue and cry, that the laws cannot be executed.

So far as the people of Utah is concerned, it matters not to them, whether the proposed law for the regulation of their social relations is made or not; being decidedly more in favor of "popular sovereignty" than of "popular institutions," they will pursue the even tenor of their ways as heretofore, let what will come, and practice what they preach without fear of molestation. But should there be any infringement ever attempted to be made on their constitutional rights, they know what those rights are, and dare maintain them.—Deseret News, May 13.

Correspondence.

We received the following communication a week or two ago from a gentleman who resides in Napa city, but who is a stranger to us. We intended to publish it last week, but was compelled, in consequence of a press of other matter to defer it until the present.

SEVASTAPOL, Cal., June 7, 1857.

GEO. Q. CANNON—Sir: As much has been said in the halls of Congress during the present session in regard to Utah and the state of affairs there, knowing also that many prejudiced men now stand ready to seize the present opportunity to fasten the guilt of the murder of Captain John W. Gunnison and party during their explorations in Utah in 1853 upon the Mormons, I wish to make a few remarks on the subject, as I was personally acquainted with him, and was out with him in his explorations in Utah Territory in 1849, and in a situation where I was better qualified to judge than, perhaps, many of our authors on the subject. Lieut. John W. Gunnison in the first place was sent to Utah to make a Topographical survey, which he finished in July, 1850. During his stay (upwards of eleven months) he was treated with the utmost courtesy, and as far as I was able to judge, the whole community was treated likewise, every man minding his own business, and, of course, letting other people's business alone, which is very essential during a stay in Utah; for the Mormon people seemed to be of that class of beings that earn their living by the sweat of their brows, as was pronounced on Adam when he was cast out of the garden of Eden. In return for our good conduct towards the Mormons of course we obtained a receipt for value received, and in reports to Congress I cannot see anything to contradict what I have said.

In the case of Lieut. Gunnison, in 1853, while on the railroad survey, or in other words, the year in which he was killed, I became acquainted with the only survivors, (three in number,) that were with him when he was killed, and they told me he was killed by Indians on Nicollett, now Sevier Lake, over a hundred miles from Salt Lake. I cannot think that he was killed by Mormons; for the reason that Lieut. Gunnison gave them no ground. Since I came to California I have learned from a gentleman with whom I have become acquainted, that the company in which he came to California was the cause of Capt. Gunnison's party being killed. Two members of the company killed two squaws near said lake, and being minus two horses on the plains took it into their heads to make up their number. They committed the deed, and, as a matter of course, Indians followed, attacking them every night for four successive nights; but finally gave them up from loss of men. On their return, when they approached the vicinity where the deed was committed, finding it occupied by, as they supposed, Californians, they succeeded in stowing themselves away until dawn of day on the following morning. When morning dawned, having obtained reinforcements, they commenced the massacre which in a few minutes resulted in the death of eleven of the party of fourteen, the remaining three escaped.

If you think proper you can publish this in your columns, though I am not partial to having my name connected with any public print; but these are facts which are as true as holy writ. I am unprejudiced in the matter, but I have spoken truth. I write in a hurry. Should anybody think this a hatched up concern, refer them to the subscriber near Napa City.

I am sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES B. DICKSON.

The Decline of the Bar.

Recent events have attracted more than usual attention to the decline that is now growing marked in the character and conduct of the New York legal fraternity. For several consecutive generations the bar of New York has been eminent not only in the State, but throughout the whole country, the continent, and the world. To be a leading American lawyer was a passport to excellent society in any part of Europe; a great lawyer here was the peer of the first intellects of France, England and Germany. It was expected of him that he should possess an acute and ingenious mind, polished wit, a high sense of honor, and the manners of a gentleman; and that expectation was rarely disappointed. Samuel Warren, one of the leading lawyers of England, and the very first of the lawyers at a convivial meeting, has been heard to say that he would rather have a first class American lawyer by his side in a stage coach or a railway than the best conversationalist of England. The American, he said, had more varied information, and less prejudice, more geniality and equal fineness of feeling and nobility of spirit.

We are speaking of old times—the times of Daniel Webster, Thomas J. Oakley, Thomas Addis Emmett, Joseph Story, John Wells, John Wheaton, and such like luminaries of the bar or bench. Were Samuel Warren to make the acquaintance of the leading New York barristers of our day, he would be likely to express a very different opinion, or civility would close his mouth. He would require to travel a long distance among our lawyers before he found a man whose noble character and gentlemanly bearing and swift intellect commanded his respect and admiration. His type of the New York "leader" has ceased to exist.

We have respectable lawyers, certainly. They are staid, conservative old fogies, who never do anything improper, or rash; who walk down to their offices at the same hour every morning, and return with equal punctuality at night; who plead steadily old cases about chests of tea or bills of lading, in a steady old way, and wont be hurried by clients or judges; and who, when judgment has been rendered in the fifth or sixth year of the suit, collect it leisurely if they can, and present a steady old bill of costs to their aggravated client. These men require a week to make up their minds that two and two make four, and not three or five; and no power short of a threat of instant death would incline them to admit on the spot that the earth revolves round the sun. They have a constitutional aversion to be hurried in any thing; they live slowly, and tiresomely; when they die, their deathbed scene cannot fail to be a prolonged lingering agony.

This is one variety of the New York lawyer of the present day. The other variety of the species is the modern fast lawyer. Of this type several striking examples will present themselves to the reader's mind, and will be recognized at once.

The fast lawyer has no time to read or study. He acquires his law intuitively. He knows that the Judges are too lazy to refer to his authorities though they make a pretence of noting them down; so he quotes 2 Smith 75, or 3 Brown 621, or 29 Robinson 63, to prove anything which he happens to want proved. His forte is talking. He thinks if he can make a speech of three hours, he ought to be Chief Justice. So he talks in a wild diffusive way; quotes Shakspere, likewise Lord Byron; and says what is uppermost in his mind. If he is closing, he calmly alludes to the fact that the witnesses against him (all persons of undoubted character and respectability) are perjured rascals, whom he intends to send to the Penitentiary; that their fathers were hanged, and their mothers led loose lives; that their children make a living by picking pockets, and that the whole connection is a blot on the face of the community. If he is opening, though he knows he has no evidence, he simply refers to his adversary as a model ruffian, who sweats crime, and has committed villanies which surpass any on record either in the page of history, or the volume of fiction. When he is floored he makes a pun, or threatens to knock his adversary down with his fist. A valuable paper which may damage his case he will not scruple to snatch; nor will he allow vain prejudices of honor to impede a skilful exercise of trick to carry a particular point. Indeed, to sum up in a few words, the model lawyer of the present day in New York, is ignorant, empty-headed, and illogical; he will abuse adversaries and witnesses like a very drab; and the only indemnity he gives us for his deficiency of forensic ability is a display of pettifogging skill and unprincipled dexterity.

This is what, with some few exceptions, the New York lawyer has sunk to. It depends upon the bar to say whether they will go lower still; or whether they shall be forced to adopt some system of reform and education that may revive the old standards of legal reputation, character, talents, courtesy and gentlemanly manners.—N. Y. Herald.

A New Motive Power to Supercede Steam.

We have been aware for some time past that Professor Salomon was engaged in our city constructing his patent "Sulph. Oil Carbonic Acid Engine," and that his prospects of success were highly encouraging. More than ten years has the Professor labored upon this favorite theme of his mechanical and scientific genius, occasionally encountering difficulties, but by close application and unbending enterprise he finally found his efforts crowned with abundant success.

We called yesterday afternoon, much to our gratification, and saw the engine in full, successful operation, where it had been working, without interruption, several days, in Cypress alley, between Pratt and Lombard streets. This engine, being merely a model, or experimental one, has, of course, some imperfections, and may be greatly improved, but it is calculated for four-horse power, being a common rectilineal or reciprocating steam engine, differing in no material feature from those in general use. The patent novelty consists in the motive power and its application, which wholly supercedes steam. This motor is produced by a compound of de. sulphiated bi. sulphuret of carbon, coal tar, and volatile or fixed oil, which, under certain influences of heat, becomes powerfully expansive, and thus gives momentum. Though only a four-horse engine, it was forming the estimated duty of ten horses, and has been so doing since put into operation, nearly a fortnight ago.

The fluid, or gas, constituting the motive power, is used over and over again with scarcely any diminution or waste—being thrown, after performing its work, from the heater to the condenser, and from the condenser to the heater again, with thorough renovation. The heater where the gas or fluid is introduced is submerged in a cistern of heated oil, kept hot by a gentle fire. In this condition the gas expands, gaining its power, and passing through pipes and valves, acts upon the piston, giving motion to the engine. The appliances are simple, easy of comprehension, free from complication, and not subject to accident or disarrangement. Thus a steady, active force is at all times kept up.
